INTRODUCTION.

Fashion, the following Essay should have appear'd abroad in the World as naked as it came into it, if the Delay of the Publisher, and the happy Difference of the Circumstances of Time and Assairs had not oblig'd me to alter that Resolution; for he who writes only for Truth need not puzzle his Brain to find out Embellishments to adorn it; a plain and simple Dress renders it both more amiable, and more easily discernable; as the native genuine Beauties of a modest Virgin have infinitely more Attractions to all Men of good Tast, than all the artful borrow'd Decorations of a Prostitute.

Whilst they, who make it their Business to propagate Error and Falshood, are always forc'd to dress'em out with all the Tinsel Ornaments of a concerted and sophisticated Eloquence, and thus making up the Desects and Desormities of the Subject with the Beauty of the Disguise, arrive, at most, but to Appearance and Plausibility, and are sollicitous no further than to make that pass for Truth, which in essect is nothing less, whilst by the Leudest of all Prevarications they labour only to deceive and impose on the Ignorant and Credulous, which are ever the greatest Part of Mankind.

(B)

I therefore think my felf oblig'd to acquaint the honest and judicious Reader, that the Sketch of this Piece was rough drawn above two Years ago, and more than half that Time fince it was prepar'd for the Press. Whoever shall give himself the Trouble to peruse the Work without Prejudice or Passion, will eafily be convinc'd, that the Boldness of the Truths, the Freedom of Sentiments, and the Severity of Reflection upon all the perfidious Authors of our late Confusions and Misfortunes, whether Priest or Layman, made it of the last Danger both to the Author and the Publishers, to send it abroad in such a Conjuncture; however, as I evidently forefaw that it was morally impossible for Things to continue long in the unnatural and violent Scituation they were in, I put it into the Hands of the Printer time enough to have had it appear in the World before the Death of the Queen, whilst the Administration of Affairs was yet in the Hands of the late inglorious Ministry; but the Multiplicity of Business, in which he was pre-engag'd, made it impracticable for him to finish it now, and is the principal Reason of troubling the Reader with the present Introduction, which I think wou'd have been unnecessary had it been earlier publish'd.

The general Design of it is to show, that every Step of the sate Ministers, from the Time of their fatal Admission to Power, tended demonstrably to bring in Popery and Slavery into these Nations, in the Establishment of their despicable Pretender. The principal Parts that compose it are three, to which the Mottos in the Title Page are respectively applicable.

First, Our original Constitution consider'd, as immemorially founded by the Consent of a free People, upon legal Power and Prerogative in the Prince, and

and legal Obedience and Subjection on the Part of the Subject; in which I have endeavour'd to fet in a proper Light the Nature and End of all Civil Government in general, with an Application of it more particularly to that of our own.

Secondly, The important Affair of the late scandalous and dishonourable Peace, with the infamous Manner of transacting it, and the fatal Consequences of it to the Protestant Religion and Liberties of all Europe, and more particularly those of Great Britain and Ireland.

And Thirdly, The wicked and indefatigable Endeavours of a corrupt and mercenary High-Church Priesthood to subvert our ancient Constitution both in State and Church, by abusing the Power of their Character to seduce and impose upon the simple and credulous, by reducing them under the most favourable Dispositions to receive the terrible Yoak of Bondage and Superstition, as the only proper and infallible means to arrive at their one general End of introducing their belov'd Pretender. How far I have succeeded in this Design, I leave to every disinterested Reader to form what Judgment he pleases.

I was very early and fully appris'd of the dangerous Situation we were likely to be reduc'd to, and of the terrible Evils that hung over our Heads, from the Establishment of Men of such Principles, if they were Men, in the Administration; for there is nothing the most terrible and destructive to a free Nation, namely the Loss of Liberty and Religion, which ought not rationally to be expected and dreaded, when such prostituted Wretches of High-Church Distinction, whether Clergy or Layman, have secur'd Power enough in their Hands to reduce those Principles into Practice. But that which most fully a * 2 convinc'd my Zeal for my Country to undertake this Work, was an Insolence of theirs in Dublin, where I then happen'd to be, I mean the Revival and Re-printing The Memorial of the Church of England, which had several Years before been so justly and solemnly condemn'd to the Flames by the most August and Illustrious Assembly in the Universe, an English Parliament.

A Fact of that Notoriety committed in the Face of the Sun, and in Contempt of the Supream Authority of the Nations, usher'd into the World with all the Pomp and Formality of Subscription, cou'd be consider'd only as the pure Effect of a harden'd Impudence, which we have since been but too sully convinc'd, will boggle at nothing however dishonest or detestable to carry on the villainous Designs of betraying their Country: What was there left in such a Case for rational Men to imagine, but that these Insolents were reviving the same Principles to carry on the same execrable Design, for which that Pestilent Book was sirst calculated?

I must acknowledge, that in my Opinion, of all the Pamphlets that ever came to my Hands, this of the Memorial is both the most virulent and most artful; it has at first Sight all the Appearance of good Sense, sincere and tender Regard for the Nation and Church, and plausible Reasoning, dress'd up in all the Gaiety of a popular and insinuating Stile, necessary to impose on, and gain the Affections of such as want Discernment enough to discover the Sophistry and Wickedness of the Design; which was to insinuate into the Minds of Men chimerical Dangers to the established Church, tho' it was never under a better Security than at that Time; to detract from the Merit and Political Vertues of the ablest and most faithful Set of Ministers these Nations were ever bleft with, by the most palpable and notorious Lyes and Calumnies that Devils and worse Men were capable of inventing; and in like manner to traduce and misrepresent the Dissenters, so considerable a Part of the Strength and Security of the Nations, as the only dangerous Enemies, and irreconcileable Contrivers of the Ruin and Subversion of the establish'd Church; and all this with fuch a Fury and malicious Bitterness, as cou'd only be the Result of Men, void of all Shame, Religion, or common Humanity. For what End all this? Even no more or less, than by rendring the former fuspected and odious to the People, and by creating and fomenting invidious Jealousies and Animosities between the latter and establish'd Church-Men, the more easily by their unnatural Divisions to render 'em all the Prey of a French Power, and their Darling Popish Pretender.

As so audacious an Attempt was the first and principal Motive to engage me in the following Undertaking, I found my felf under a Necessity of tracing that unhappy Author thro' all the Mazes and Detours of his pernicious but sophisticated Wit and Policy; which Design as necessarily led me to the Defence of that glorious Ministry, he had so infamoufly depreciated, and which I have attempted with a hearty good Will and Sincerity of Intentions, tho' with a Capacity I acknowledge infinitely inferior to the Merit and Nobleness of the Subject; and in like Manner that of our diffenting Brethren from the Violence and Injustice of his Calumnies, which their Vertue, Fidelity, and Firmness to the establish'd Government both in State and Church, upon the Foot of the first Glorious Revolution, have sufficiently. demonstrated to the World to have been as falle, as they were malicious and inveterate, and to defend and justify a great Community living under the Sanction, and according to the Tenour of the Laws, in my Opinion is but the Duty of every honest Gentleman, who has any Notion of Religion, or common Sentiments of Humanity.

If in exposing and detecting the Variety and Malignity of his Errors, I may in the Opinion of some be thought to have dwelt longer upon a Subject than the Nature of it may feem to have deferv'd; I have only for my Excuse, to desire such Persons to reslect, what terrible Consequences and what pernicious Influence that virulent Pamphlet had in these Nations, from the Time of its malevolent Birth to the Day of its Execution, and how much it contributed to facilitate, and still continues so to do, the Meafures of those High-Church Traitors, to render their native Country, so famously distinguish'd for her Liberty and Valour, the Contempt and Reproach of all the neighbouring Nations; and further to confider (that if there be any Thing valuable in this Life after the loss of Honour and Liberty) how near it was brought by those execrable Principles to the most miserable of all Servitudes, that of a Spiritual Tyranny.

I have always look'd upon that invenom'd Pamphlet, as a fort of an inexhaustible Magazine, from which all the prostitute Hirelings of the late predominant Faction have drawn their Batteries of Scandal and Defamation, the common Topicks with which they have all along endeavour'd either to undermine or beat down the goodly Fabrick of our excellent Constitution, re-establish'd by that ever memorable and glorious Revolution brought about by our immortal Deliverer King WILLIAM. During the Reign of that Great and Glorious Prince, how was he perplex'd and imbaras'd by the Principles and Practices

etices of these very Wretches, who enjoy'd their Allunder his auspicious Influence and Protection.

In that succeeding for eight or nine Years, whilst those excellent Ministers were in the Management of Affairs, tho' they were constantly bless'd with a stupendious Train of Successes both at home and abroad, next to Miracles; what was there eternally in the Mouths of these sanctify'd Hypocrites, without any Sense of Religion in their Hearts, but the Temple of the Lord, the Temple of the Lord! The Danger of the Church! Whilst for these four last Years, tho' Popery and Slavery, principally by their Means, were visibly rushing in upon us as a Torrent, they have been as silent upon the Article of their Church's Danger, as those who were overwhelm'd in the general Deluge.

Now that God and the People have call'd a prudent, just, a valiant and religious Protestant Prince to the Re-establishment of the Peace and Tranquility of these lately distracted Nations, who has Wisdom to difcern, and Courage to Defend and Maintain the true Interests, the Religion and Honour of a free and noble People; out of the fame corrupted Fountain, are drawn the same pestilential Vapours, which form the common Roar of their Church's Danger in most Corners of his Dominions. Whether Calvin or Luther it imports little, tho' their Doctrines, in respect to us, are as peaceable as their Authors, who have been fo long in their Graves; with these Wretches the Establish'd Protestant Churches of these Nations can never be, or flourishing, but under the Influence and Administration of a French and Popish Hereditary-Right Pretender.

'Tis for these Reasons that I thought it worth my Pains to detect and expose the artful, dange-rous

fous Sophistry of this unhappy Author, both to expel the Poison from those who have already imbib'd it, or by way of Antidote to prevent the Insection from others. I am not insensible how difficult a Thing it is to make Impressions upon the Minds of Men, grown, as it were callous, by a Familiarity with successful Wickedness, and sear'd into an habitual Hardness and Obstinacy. Conviction is not always the Result of sound Reasoning and close Argumentation; a Man may talk to such with the Force and Eloquence of an Angel from God, and be laugh'd at or despis'd for his Pains; when Honour and Conscience are either asleep, or wholly abandon'd, Reason, and even the most Divine Religion, are but a dead Letter.

Nothing so much encourages Traytors, as when they conceive they may act their Treason with Impunity; and all those are such, without Distinction, who either endeavour to subvert an Establish'd Government themselves, or labour to betray it into the Hands of a Foreign Power to Subvert. Nothing but the Power of God can soften an obdurate Heart, and nothing can effectually contribute so much to restrain the Insolence of a Traytor, as the Certainty and Severity of legal Punishment; and if I, weak as I am, may be the Instrument in the Hands of that adorable Providence, of opening the Eyes or Hearts of the former, or by my Infinuations, may remind my Superiors in due Season to inflict proper Punishments to restrain the Insolence of the latter, I have either Way my End, which is eternally the Peace, the Interest and Honour of my Country; and I heartily wish that the Success may fully anfwer the Sincerity of my Intentions.

I have, in the Prosecution of this Work, consider the Occasion, the Reasons, the Progress of the

the former never to be forgotten Revolution; and defended the Principles, with the precious Memory of the Glorious Instrument of it (in the Hands of God) King WILLIAM, against the blasphemous Revilers of 'em both; nor have I been wanting, after my manner, to defend the Merit and Vertue of a Noble Englishman, the Object of the Admiration of all the World, and even of his Enemies' abroad, tho' he has been so basely treated by his ingrateful Countrymen at home, the Renowned Duke of Marlborough, the successful, the consummate Commander, whom, after he had carry'd the English Valour to a Pitch of Glory unknown to all former Ages, Heaven has restored to the Bosom of his dear Country, to finish, under the Auspices of his Great and Valiant Master, the Glorious Work of Europe's Liberty and our own: Nor have I been unmindful of our other gallant Countrymen who shar'd with him the Toils and Honours of the War. In the Sequel, I have taken in all the remarkable Incidents that happen'd either at home or abroad, that I thought proper to illustrate the general Defign I have already mention'd, and were confistent with the Nature of an Historical, as well as a Political Esfay.

In the Conclusion, I have expos'd the traiterous Doctrines so industriously propagated by their High-Church Priesthood, solely for the End of introducing the Pretender, and that too after a manner, as will sufficiently convince my honest Countrymen, that as I am sure to meet with no Quarter from em, I am as sure never to give em any, whilst they continue in the State of Enmity to the Honour and Interest of their Country, and the establish'd Religion.

This is the Plan of the ensuing Work. I am only to acquaint the Reader, that the whole was writ and finished in a Retirement, where I had no Help of Books, and but very sew Publick Papers, except those I have taken Notice of; and on that Consideration, I have only to desire every honest Gentleman, who will give himself the Trouble of perusing it, to make Allowance for such Faults or Errors as may possibly occur in it, as Errors proceeding from a Desect of Memory or Inadvertency, rather than of Malice, or a concerted Design of imposing upon the Publick, which is a Baseness I am not capable of; and if there were nothing of poor and execrably wicked in it, yet for the sole Reason that it has been, and continues the constant Practice of High-Church, which every honest Englishman, who loves his Religion or Country, must naturally despise.

I have but one thing more to defire of the judicious Reader, which is only so much Indulgence, as to distinguish betwixt the Time this Piece was writ, and was design'd to be made publick, and the present wherein it last appears; and with this Mark of his Goodness, I slatter my self that he will believe, that the Author, as he never despair'd in the worst of Times, had no ill Foresight or Judgment in the Issue of Affairs, since all, or most of the Events, have since happen'd as he foresaw and foretold 'em; which I am proud to acknowledge is a general Satisfaction to me, in respect of the Publick, and a secret Pleasure in regard to my Opinion and Sentiments, and humbly submit the whole to the Animadversion of all true Lovers of their Country.

To conclude, we are once again in a fair Way of being happy, and if we are not wanting to our felves, and being happy for ever. God has, on his part, by a wonderful Train of Miracles, confounded all the traiterous Devices and Measures of His, and our Enemies; we know the Rage and Consusion they are in at their miraculous Disappointment; we know that the Spirit of the Faction will still be secretly kept up and somented, and we very well know too by whom; as there will certainly be no Means neglected to embarrass and consound us again, we have only to be upon our Guard against 'em; for tho' their Malice and Envy never sleep or dye, yet Heaven be prais'd they are disarm'd, they are impotent; and as we have no longer any Reason to sear for the Event, we leave to 'em the agreeable Reslection of being the most infamous Betrayers of their Country, and the terrible Remorse of being superlatively wicked, without Success.

What have we to fear? We have a Noble and Valiant Protestant King at the Head of us, to go in and out before us, and fight our Battles. have his eldest Hope blooming in Glory, from whom a Great and Noble Free People may justly expect all those Bleffings that are usually the Result of Vertue, Wisdom, Justice, and a consummate Valour. We have a Princess, in whom Beauty, Vertue, Majesty and Sweetness, equally contend for the Pre-eminence; Young, Amiable, and with all the Graces capable of engaging the Hearts of her Enemies, and of commanding those of her Friends, the Happy Mother already of an Illustrious Offspring, and may she be of many more Heroes for the Honour of these, and of Queens to bless the neighbouring Nations; and good Heaven grant that there may never be one wantng of this Illustrious Family to sway the Imperial cepters of these Nations, 'till Time shall be no nore.

A Glorious and Beautiful Prospect! To the Eternal Contriver of it be Eternal Praise; this is our Hope, this is our lasting Security. But if we can ever be so wretchedly wanting to our selves, as to fuffer those Slaves to insult us again, who have so lately brought us to the very Touch of Popery and Slavery; if Care be not taken either to restrain or punish their Insolence; if we shall again be the Sots to hug the Vipers in our Bosoms once more to sting us to Death and sure Destruction; if we shall again suffer our selves, our Religion, and our dear Country to be betray'd by defigning Sycophant worthless Knaves, or viler hypocritical canting High-Church Priests, we of these happy Nations deserve of all Men living to be most miferable in this World and the next.

HEN our Liberty, which is the most valuable and precious Bleffing of civil Society, (of which after the expence of fo many Millions, and fo much noble English Blood, we had Reason to think our selves secure) is openly attack'd by Men of Principles destructive of all Order, and the very Foundations of all Just political Constitutions. When the Charters of the Metropolis and other Places of our Neighbouring Nation, are (by a barefac'd Violation of their original Right in the Elections of their supreme Magistrates) insulted and subverted by Strangers, who are either Ignorant of, or profese'd Enemies to the true Interest of our Country, in order to place such supple Mercenary Tools in those Honourable and Important Stations, as are either Foolsenough to do the infamous Drudgery of cunning and defigning Knaves in the Ruin of their native Freedom, or wicked enough to betray it. When the most glorious and successful Revolution by which alone we injoy the Happiness of our Lives, Estates, our Liberties and our holy Religion, is every Day revil'd, and branded with the Odious and Reproachful Terms of Sedition and Rebellion by Men of such Principles as in its beginnings oppos'd, and if they had Power equal to their Will wou'd have prevented, and who are at this instant imploying their utmost Wit and Artifice (in what they Esteem a favourable Conjuncture) to sap and overturn it, in favour of their belov'd Prince of darkness an impotent and abjur'd Pretender; when I say the Mask is at last thrown off, and these audacious Attempts are endeavour'd to be Executed in the Face of the Sun; 'tis time for us' my honest Country-men, to awake and rouze out of that fatal Lethurgy, our common Enemies suppose they have either frighted or lull'd us into, to exert our good Sense and Courage in the Defence and Preservation of those invaluable Treasures we have so dearly purchas'd, and to let those Enemies know, that as we wanted neither in the Commencement to joyn with our immortal and glorious Deliverer, to free our selves from the Tyranny of the Father with his infernal Train of Fefuits. Jacobites, and worse Apostate high Church-men; so to their Confusion they shall find that we retain them still, that they are naturally Inherent and Born with us, and which we will never fail to employ with our utmost Vigour, and immoveable Firmness, and Resolution against their dear Prince his pretended Son, with all his renegado Strength of High-Church Traytors who maintain and support his Interests.

We shall no longer suffer our selves to be Deluded and Fool'd out of our Senses and Liberties by Mercenary canting Priests, who leither know their own true Interest, or that of the State; and who wickedly Debauch the People with slavish Doctrines, destructive of all the sirmest and most sacred Bands of just and regular Government; but shall oppose to all their devilish Designs and

Machinations those honest Means that God and Nature, and Reason have put into the Hands of all free and generous People, who have Virtue enough to dare to defend and preserve their natural and established Liberties. They have once already put us upon the Necessity, and instructed us in the Right use of them, which I trust we shall never forget, but transmit them with the Blessing and Happiness we have purchas'd by them, to our latest Posterity; and if their Ignorance were not as extream, as their Malice is incorrigible, they would not a fecond Time push on the Interests of an abdicated Pretender, who feems to be abandon'd by God and all honest Men, and once more involve these Nations (happily resetled in Peace and Tranquility, upon the folid Basis of the late Glorious Revolution) in Blood and the last Confusions; which yet by the Help of that adorable Providence, which has hitherto fo visibly affifted us, in the just Defence of our Liberties, and our own Vertue and Courage, we question not shall terminate both in his and their Destruction. That Englishman, who upon such an Occasion and in such a Conjecture, does not vigoroully exert all his Capacities and Powers to oppose so unjust and villanous a Design, is either a Driveter or a Coward; and that Englishman, who can so far prevail with himself in the sole Prospect of Preferment, or any other Considerations distinct from the publick Good, to prostitute his Honour and Conscience to chime in with the Measures of the profess'd Enemies of his Country, who are imploying all their knavish Arts and Cunning to betray it, is a Traytor, who we doubt not shall in the End receive the Reward that seldom fails, as it is justly due to so infamous a Treachery. Weak and ignorant People, who may possibly be misled and deluded by a crafty and designing Priest, or others, may in fuch a Case deserve our Pity and Compassion; but wilful hardned Knaves who act against the Sights of Reason and Conviction of Conscience, as they deserve the utmost Contempt of their Fellow Subjects, so do they deserve the utmost Severity and Animadversion of the Laws.

In the Year 1704, when the Church was not only in the most flourishing, but the best establish'd Security it ever has been since the Reformation, and the State in the Hands of a wife and religious Princess, together with a Ministry of equal Capacity and Integrity, to support and maintain 'em in their Happiness, and a renowned General abroad, giving a Beginning to the most glorious Successes against the common Enemy of Europe, without whose Suppression, it was impossible for us to reckon upon any lasting Security, either to the one or the other; Rage and Disappointment (two laudable Principles of so hopeful an Offspring) gave Birth to an infamous Brat, christen'd by the Name of the Memorial of the Church of England, humbly offered to the Consideration of all true Lovers of our Church and Constitution; the whole Design of which (in the fole View of a certain Project which shall hereafter be more largely enquir'd into) being to debauch the weak and unthinking Part of the People, which is ever the greatest, by advancing a Train of the most impudent Falshoods that Hell or Malice could invent, thereby

It was not to be wonder'd at, that a Monster so deform'd in its Composition, and so unreasonably brought to light, as a portentous Omen and Forerunner as it were of some extraordinary Calamity, should alarm the whole Nation. The Jacobites and High-Flyers, to give the World a Specimen and Tafte of their Honesty and good Sense, extol'd it to the Skys as a Master-piece of Wit and sound Reafon; for when a Set of Men are bewitch'd to the Interest and private Caprices of a Faction, tho' never so pernicious and opposite to the Honour and Liberty of their Country, there is nothing that can be faid or writ in Favour of them, but what is immediately cry'd up for something extraordinary, especially if dress'd up in a popular and plausible Stile; however, upon an impartial Examination, it may appear to be absurd, rediculous, or injurious to facred Truth, or the real Interest of the publick Good. It must doubtless be confess d. that it must at the Bottom be but a wretched Cause, that needs to be maintain'd by the most impudent of Lies and Calumnies, yet it is most certain, that whatfoever is founded originally upon Fallhood and Error can never be supported by any other Means. Tis as true that they are but miserable Efforts and Productions of Wit, that receive all their Merit, from the vain and noisy Applause of abandon'd and profligate Hirelings, who labour all they can to effect the Ruin of their Fellow Subjects, because they will not run headlong into all their wild and enthul aftick Notions, and Schemes of Government both in State and Church, and who have confequently the good Forune to be distinguish'd from 'em by the sole Merit of their Vertue, heir Honesty, and their inviolable Attachment to their Country.

But unluckly for these awkard High-Church Politicians and their bettors, there happen'd to be far greater Numbers of honest Men in the Nations, than they were willing to believe or allow of, of too much good Sense, Judgment and Integrity, to suffer the State to be deceived or imposed on with the false Appearances of things, ow plaufibly soever shuffled together by such wretched left-handed olicy-Mongers; or the establish'd Religion, to be warp'd by the ire of an intemperate and hypocritical Zeal for the national Church. hich they knew had been erected upon the folid Foundations of eason and true Piety, which yet the others by their ungodly Ar-les, were incessantly labouring to undermine and subvert; such ho love what is Sterling in Reason and Religion, as well as in their pin, and cannot be pervailed to accept of their Tinsel for pure old; such who fearch hard after Truths, and know it when they and it, and having obtain'd it, know as well how to defend and ninking maintain it, as so invaluable, but rare a Commodity deserves. At a Train the Head of such Men as I have been describing, were Her Majesty invent, and both Houses of Parliament then sitting, who were so scandalized at the unseasonable Insolence and Presumption of a Libel, of which the false and malicious Infinuations, appeard so groundless and derogatory to the Honour and Administration of the Sovereign and the indefatigable Endeavours of both Houses, to preserve the Nation and Church in their establish'd Security, that they came to a Resolution by a great Majority, which pass'd into a Vote, and to which Her Majesty was pleas'd to signifie Her Assent and Approbation in her Speech from the Throne, which made it not only criminal but penal, to infinuate or affirm, that the establish'd Church was in any Danger in the happy Situation of Affairs the Nation was in at that Time. Inquiry was thereupon made after the Author, and a Reward of 2001. propos'd to whoever should discover him, and sol. for the Printer; but this proving ineffectual at that Time, fince the Father cou'd not be brought to Punishment, the Spawn was by Order of both Houses, deliver'd to the Executioner, to be publickly burnt with all the Marks of Reproach and Infamy it deserv'd. This is a short Account of a pestilent and scurrilous Libel, which had its Birth from the ingenious Brain of an Apostate disgusted Physician, and its honourable Exit from the Hands of the common Hangman.

From that Time it had long lain lurking in private Hands, and fecretly infusing the Infection of its Poyson amongst weak and undiscerning Persons, for whose Seduction it was principally calculated; fuch who either wanted Penetration to dive into the pernicious Defign of it, or Judgment to distinguish Truth from the appearances of it, when dress'd out and disguis'd with much Artifice, and a certain Air of popularity, on purpose to impose on the Understandings of the unwary and credulous, and to keep alive the drooping Spirits of a Reftless and implacable Faction. One wou'd reasonably have beleiv'd that a Libel so solemnly arraign'd and condemn'd to so ignominious and deserv'd a Punishment, by the supreme Power and Authority of a Nation then in their Senses, was never in likelyhood to have rais'd up its Head and appear'd again in Publick; but there is nothing so certain, as that Impudence and Malice have no Reserves or Limitation, in a fort of Men who have fold themselves to Ruin, and betray their Country, fince Vertue, Henour and Conscience, which are the only Restraints that are known to keep Men within the Knowledge and Practice of their Duty, which fuch are intirely forfeited and lost; like those profligated Women, who having once bid Adieu to all Sense of Modesty, which is ever the surest Guard of their Honour, boggle at nothing to gratifying the Fury and Lewdness of their Inclinations.

Yet to the great Surprize of all honest sober Men, this Monster has been dragg'd out of its Grave of Infamy, and brought again to light as it were in Triumph, by Men of the same Principles and Designs with him who first gave it a Being; a young Phoening in the Frontespiece arising out of the Flame and Ashes of the former; a sulfome Dedication to his Grace the Duke of Ormond, the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, a Presace giving an Account of the Lift and Death of the deserving Author, the Reasons and Occasion of sirst publishing it to the World, together with the Desence of a cell

tain learned Council of another infolent Incendiary and Offender I mean Sacheverell, so very impertinent and foreign to the Libel before us, that it is difficult to guess at a Reason, why these ingenious Revivers shou'd subjoyn it, unless it were to convince the World, that there are no Incoherences or Absurdities, however gross and disagreeing in all other Respects, which they will not advance and unite, when they tend to one general End of betraying their Country. For in the Year 1711, which they in their Frontispiece with their usual Modesty, call the flourishing Year of the Church, and I the fatal One, and which shall be ever memorable to Posterity, for the noble Courage and Firmness, with which the honourable House of Protestant Commons of that Kingdom defended their Liberties from the growing Incroachments of Arbitrary Power, out comes this trayterous condemn'd Libel, with a List of all those reverend and worthy Persons, the Subscribers, to the Incouragement of the reprinting and publishing of it, young unfledg'd Accademiciens, Porters, Clerks, Pimps, Parsons, Fidlers, and Bustoons, who made it their Glory thus publickly to fly in the Face of the supreme Authority of the Nations, and by an Infolence without Example, endeavour'd to disturb the Peace and Tranquility of their Country, in Contempt of the Legislative Power, which had thought it worthy so severe a Cenfure and Punishment, How far they have oblig'd the Duke of Ormand their Lord Lieutenant by their fulsom Dedication of it; I don't pretend to determine, but if one may venture to guess of the Love he has for the Liberty and true Interest of his Country, by the considerable Actions he has formerly perform'd for 'em, and the noble Share he had in the Revolution, there will, I think, be but little Reafon to believe, that he could be well pleas'd with the Attempt they have made him to engage in the Patronage, as well as Guilt of lo infamous a Libel, the whole Scope of which, is calculated for the Reproach and Subversion of that miraculous turn of Providence, the glorious Instrument of it and all those great and honest Englishmen who continue to defend and support it; for it seems to me to be so insolent and barefac'd an Insult both of his honour and judgment, that no fort of Men cou'd have been guilty of, but such who had not themselves shook off all Sense of Modesty, moral Honesty, or good Manners.

And I cannot here but take notice, especially of those of the Subcribers as call themselves Clergy-men, how shamefully they in this assauce forgot themselves and acted inconsistently with their Princiles and the Doctrines they have so strenously propagated; for then Men in their Pamphlets and Sermons preach up such or such rinciples, of the Truth and Equity of which they wou'd have the Vorld believe they are convinc'd, and yet in their Practice act dictly contrary to 'em, the properest Character they can reasonably etend to is that of frontless Prevariacators and Seducers of the Peoe; we have ever thought that Men pretending to certain Princies, which ever do or ought to carry their Evidence and Demonlation along with 'em, ought firmly and constantly adhere to and mare their Actions according to these Principles, at least till they are convinc'd by the strength of found reasoning that they have been in the wrong not only in all the ordinary Evenements of common Life, but more especially in those more important ones, on which the Happiness and Tranquility of the Government under which they live, intirely depend; this I am fure is the univerfal Practice of all difinterested and vertuous Men or who desire to be thought so in the World; but they who either out of Consideration of their own private Advantage, or to carry on the Interests of a Faction in which they may be ingag'd in direct Opposition and to the manifest ruin of the Commonwealth, and by preaching one way, and practifing another, can proflitute their Honour, their Conscience, their Understanding, may indeed obtain and deserve the Character of cunning defigning Knaves and thro'-pac'd Politicians, but they will never be effeem'd otherwise by the honest thinking part of Mankind than as corrupted mercenary Tools, wretched Politicians immoral Men, and worse Christians.

They who thro' natural weakness or incapacity, or for want of the Advantages of an Ingenious and liberal Education, are unable of themselves to judge of Assairs of Intricacy and Importance, and are feduc'd and missed into Errors by Men of more Learning and insight, but less honesty are in a great measure excusable, and are without the reach of this Imputation; but the Guilt of those of better Parts and Qualifications, who wilfully imploy 'em to impose on, to Debauch, and delude a weak and credulous People into a participation of their wicked Defigns of inflaving their Country; as it is arriv'd to a Degree of Infamy that will hardly admit of any Aggravation, I freely and heartily bestow it amongst 'em with all the severity 'tis defign'd, with this one further terrible Reflection which they cannot be ignorant cff, that they shall one Day give a severe Account of themselves and Actions before the most dreadful of all Tribunals, that can never be impos'd on, or deceiv'd. All Degrees of Men in that Kingdom where this notable Scene was open'd, are very well convinced that every Man of that number of Subscribers of the Gown, is a vigorous affertor and defender of their dear and ador'd Idol, Sache. verell's commendable Doctrine of unlimitted and unconditional Pa five Obedience in all Cases whatever, without Exception; let these Men then but feriously Reslect how directly by this bare-fac'd At Arbit tempt, they ran-counter, to a Doctrine they so strenuously and avow the edly profess, and incessantly labour to imprint upon the People, and I leave it to their own Modesty and Good Sense, if they have a Gran of either left, to determine what Sentiments all thinking honest Me must necessarily conceive of Persons of so leud Prevariacation; for here we think is one of the boldest Instances of Disobedience and in deed Contempt of the higher Powers that this Age as yet but youn in Wonders, or the last in which that slavish Doctrine was first put lish'd, ever produc'd. An infamous and traiterous Libel Sentenc'd Condemn'd and Executed by the Authority of the Legislature which is the only Supreme Power in ours, and every well constituted Go vernment; which Judgment of theirs as it is upon Record and not only a palpabable Diffent and disapprobation both the Author and Defign of the Libel, but an evident Prohibition of it, ought to have had the Force and perpetuity of a Law, till it had been revok'd or annul'd by the same Power; yet in the Space of a few Years there have been seen a Set of Men who have dar'd to reprint, and publish this infamous Libel in an open Contempt and Violation of the Supream Authority, and therefore in manifest Contradiction to that darling Doctrine of Obedience to the higher Powers they have all along so industriously endeavour'd to propagate; this is what we call acting in Practice against Principle with a witness, and giving the World a notable Evidence of the Candor and Sincerity of their belief in this formal Instance of their Contempt and Disobedience to the higher Powers that Men can be capable of giving, whilst at the same Time they endeavour by all means in their Power to banter and perswade us that their slavish Passive Obedience is the Genuine Doctrine of their Church; nor will it avail 'em at all to affert as they always have and continue to do, that the Sentence pass'd upon that Libel was obtain'd only by a Faction, as with their usual Modesty and probity they are pleas'd to call it, an Enemy both of the State and Church; an Affertion fo rude and violent is not at all surprizing from Men of their Front and Principles, yet it is a Superlative Aggravation of their Guilt and Inolence, for no others wou'd dare to fix so Odious a Character upon an Act of a great Majority of the most August and venerable Asemblies, not only of Europe, but of the whole Universe with their Sovereign's Royal Assent and Approbation at the Head of 'em.

'Tis frivolous to the last Degree what these bold Defenders of this irrational and flavish Doctrine in the height they carry it, and for which they quote the Authority of the Holy Scriptures, Affirm, that it is practicable only to Crown'd Heads, in whom alone they Place that Authority which claims such an Obedience and which they are leas'd to say the Word of God mentions, and intends under the Chaafter of the higher Powers. The Apostle who liv'd in the Time Emperours and those Pagan too, wou'd doubtless, if he intended have particularly ascrib'd the Power of claming such an uncondimonal Obedience to them alone who were the most absolute and Arbitrary Princes upon Earth, yet we no were find him mentioning either Emperours, or Kings, or any other fort of Supreme Magistrate whom it was more peculiarly due exclusive of all others; but as was a Doctrine that was equally to affect and influence all forts d Degrees of Men, speaks only indefinitely of the higher Powers, d that too in such general Terms, as Plainly manifests that the force is morality of the Doctrine of Obedience in a just and rational he as useful to Mankind in civil Societies, is equally applicable due to the Supreme Power in any and every Form of Governht, when it is once determin'd where it shall be lodg'd, whether despotick and absolute, or in a mix'd and limited Monarchy, or e which ommonwealth, and is as equally salfe and pernicious, as they ated Go Record ach and apply it to all. If any Man of their Faction who thinks self concern'd shall undertake to prove that by the higher Powthe Apostle speaks only of Kings and crown'd Heads, or any one Perion

Person under any other Denomination, to whom alone the Obedience he mentions, is and ought to be solely practic'd, he shall not sail of having an Answer in due Season according to the Merit of his Persormance, in bar only of railing, which I shall not take for Argument, or think it worth my while to Answer; In the mean Time I give him and all of 'em to understand, that in a mix'd and limited Monarchy constituted as our own is, and consisting of Kings, Lords, and Commons, all and every of 'em under certain Restrictions and Regulations of sundamental Laws, we neither understand nor acknowledge any other higher Powers as Supreme then the Legislature.

I have not undertaken to Answer the particulars of a Libel has made some Noise in the World, and done more Mischief, not so much by the Soundness and Strength, as the Art and Sophistry of the Reasoning, and the plausible Appearances of Truth dress'd out with all the Tours and Fineness of a Man confessedly of good Parts and Abilities; it has been sufficiently exploded by a Sentence as just as severe; yet I shall not omit to take notice of the principal End and Intention of it as far as is necessary for my own Design, as of the chiefest Topicks he makes use of to carry on the main End of cajoling those of less discernment and Capacity than himself. And here I cannot but previously observe, that the Prefacer to this second Edition, whoever he be, and who proffesses a singular Kindness and Friendship to him, has in my Opinion done him a great deal more Injury, than the most profess'd of his Enemies cou'd have done; or at best is but one of those over officious Friends who act with more Zeal than Judgment, and in the warmth of their Inclinations, do the Man they Defign to elevate above the common Libel, more differvice than good; of the Truth of what I say I think he has given us a fufficient Evidence in the following Words. In the Year 1704 being difgusted at his Disappointment of being made one of the Commisioners of the Sick and Wounded, as was promis'd him, and disfatisfy'd at the rejecting the Bill to prevent Occasional Conformity; and the Difgrace of some of his Friends who were Sticklers for it, enter'd upon the following Memorial in concert with Mr. Poley Parliament Man for Ipswich &c. Now if I am not very much mistaken, the Disappointments a Man meets with in the Expectations of Preferments he has been made to hope, and which possibly he thinks he deserves; the Disgusts he conceives at the ill usage of his Friends and the Chagrin that naturally arises from the turbulent and vindicative Situation of Mind fuch Passions ever place him in, are no ver commendable Motives and Reasons for forming a Design, and car rying on a Work intended for the publick good and service of his Country; nor can there reasonably be expected that calmness and sedateness of Temper and Reason so necessary in Productions of the Nature from a Man who confesses himself in a Rage; his Anger natu rally boils over into Partiality or Invectives, which we are apt to be lieve are no very decent or proper Qualities in an Author who deavours to establish an Opinion of being a true Patriot; for when Man writes purely for the Truth, he do's or doubtless ought to ende your all he can to divert himself of those Passions which may by

and incline him to Favour or Affection; otherwise let him pretend what he will, he writes not for the publick good, but to carry on the private Interests and Designs of a Faction, which as they are ever separate and distinct, always act and tend directly contrary to it. 'Tis true that a weak or unwary Reader is liable to be infected fo deeply with the Poison of an artful Discourse, that it may be too late to feek for a Remedy; he may be impos'd on and deluded into an Error that agreeably flatters him with an Appearance of Truth, till he is in Danger of being lost and ruin'd in his Reputation, his Honour and his Fortune; there may be indeed a secret Pleasure for a while in being well deceiv'd, yet it is still Deceit, and in all Deceit there is ever a very strong Tincture of knavery and dishonesty; and whatever Satisfact on a Man opinionated of himfelf may Fancy in embracing a plausible Error, it will never counter-ballance the Loss of the Honour of his Judgment, or the repose of his Conscience, nor remove the Reproach of being a Fool, or something worse when he comes to be undeceiv'd.

But when an Author imploys the Parts and Abilities that God and Nature have given him, and a liberal Education improv'd, purely to impose upon the credulous, and seduce the Weak and less discerning only into the Interest's of a Faction; when such a Man against the Lights of Reason and Conscience advances the most gross and and notorious Falshoods in the Place of Truth, and wicked and groundless Calumnies to promote the Interest he may have espous'd which was evidently the Case of this Gentleman, he may indeed in a great Measure succeed and gain his Point with such, but he is a shamless deceiver. He may debauch over great Numbers to his Faction, which 'tis true may increase but do neither Honour or Service to it, for Fools who are led by the Nose by the Artifices of every fly or crafty Impostor are of little Strength, and less Credit; but he is an immoral Villain, he may by his Wit and Cunning, under the false Pretence of serving his Country, bring the Minds of Men into Dispositions which tend directly to the Ruin and Destruction of it, yet he is at best but an artful infamous Traytor for his pains; this indeed has been the Case of Multitudes who have been incapable of differning the Malice and Poilon of this Author's Intentions thro' the plausible Veil he has drawn over 'em, but with Men of Sense, of Honour, and Understanding, there are but slender Impressions to be made by Work begun and finish'd upon a Principle of Rage, and the Spleen of Disappointments.

If Doctor Drake was the unhappy Author of this Libel, as is confess'd, at least of the Church part of it, all the World who knew him are willing to acknowledge that he was a Gentleman of Wit, great Parts and Capacity; and if he had had the good Fortune to have imploy'd 'em on a Subject worthy of 'em, he might doubtless have made as considerable a Figure in the State as in the Commonwealth of Learning; nor is it very probable, that if he had not been disappointed in his Expectations of Preferment, we should ever have had this infamous Production of a Wit capable of much more honest and nobler Performances, Frailty and Passion are the Conditions of

Human

Human Nature, and are rather to be pitied than expos'd; but when they get the mastery of a Man, when they gain the ascendant over his Vertue and good Sense, they render him not only in the last Degree unhappy but contemptible; but if they rife yet higher and arrive at fuch a Pitch as to prevail with him to profitute his Honour and Conscience to their Gratification, or his revenge, they fix an odious and destable Character on him who otherwise might be justly admir'd for a thousand commendable Qualities. Wit and good Sense are of the last pernicious consequence in the Hands of such a Man. when they want the ballast of Judgment and Integrity to direct 'em; they are a two edg'd Swords in the Hands of a Fool or Madman; as they always make a Man respected and esteem'd who possesses 'em in any eminent Degree, and imploys 'em upon just and ferviceable Occasions, nothing renders a Man more odious and defpicable who debates and profanes 'em to evil ones; as on the one Hand he is qualify'd by 'em to do his Country the noblest and most important Service, which is the preservation of its Honour and Liberty, when they are rightly exerted; fo on the other, when they are wholly subservient to his Passions, and profituted into the Tools and Instruments of Malice or Revenge, he is capable by their affiflance to bring the worst of all Evils upon it, which is Slavery, and by so wicked a Design destroy the Merit of all his excellent Qualities in what Degree of eminence soever he may possess 'em; I have purposely dwelt a little long upon this Reflection in respect of this unhappy Author, because it is equally due and applicable to other of his Successors, who upon the same Principles and Probity are vigoroufly carrying on the same laudable Design of betraying their Country; the Incomparable Sacheverell who before his Queen at the Head of the noblest Jucature in the Universe solemnly appeals to God for his Innocence, that ne never intended any Thing to the Prejudice of Her Majesty's Title and Interest, tho' we know that he drinks the Pretenders Health every Day of his Life; the Illustrious Examiner fo famous for his integrity and veracity that he would not advance a Lye to fave a bleeding Church and Nation from inevitable ruin; the Reverend and Renown'd Author of the conduct of the Allies whom his High-Church Friends have kick'd into the Deaneary of St. Patricks, tho' but four Years ago he wou'd have quarell'd with any Man shou'd have dar'd to say he was not one of the stanchest Whigs in England; the vertuous and modest Rabbi Higgins so celebrated for his Piety and Morals, tho' a noble Peer in Ireland in his Charge against him a very little while ago, was ready to prove fuch Crimes against him, as were fitter to be heard from the Mouth of Witnesses than mention'd in writing, all of 'em Men of good Parts and Learning; I purposely omit a numerous Herd of other Vermin as not worth mentioning; all of 'em who have facrific'd their Honour to their Ambition, and that of their Country to the poor Consideration of Preserment; but 'tis their consolation that they have rendr'd themselves immortal, for we must know that there is an Immortality of Infamy and Dishonour, as well as Vertue and true Gloty, which they have taken a world of pains to secure in imitation of a certain

What his very zealous and discreet Friend the Prefacer in regard to him fays upon the following Occasion is, as I think, as little to his Credit as the former ---- At the Beginning, says he, of her present Majesty's Reign in the Year 1702 he writ a Book intitl'd The History of the last Parliament, which being thought by the House of Lords to reflect on the Memory of the late King William, he was conven'd before 'em, and order'd to be profecuted by the Attorney-General, who brought him to a Tryal at which he was acquitted. the Year following; we very well remember who was Attorney-General, and what fort of People at that Time had the Management of Tryals &c. but by what Favour or Interest soever he happen'd to be acquitted, I believe there is no body who is not of the same Principles with the Doctor and his judicious Prefacer, that will not readily pay so much deference to the Judgment of that Illustrious Judicature, as to believe that they had very good Reasons to order his Prosecution; and his being acquitted at that Time was no more an Argument of his Innocence, than the Sentence and Execution of a right Noble Lord and Patriot a Member of their House, and others, in a former Reign was an Argument of their guilt.

But there is a wondrous Energy in Truth which will force a way to Light thro' all the Dark and artfull Disguises devis'd to sti-He or conceal it; what Necessity was this trifling Prefacer under to mention the Circumstance of his Friends Reflection upon that great King, which he knew would not fail to throw an Odium, and in a great Measure discover the malicious inveteracy of the dead Author in the Opinion of all true and honest Englishmen? Is he Knave enough himself, to forget, or think that we ever can be so wretchedly ingrateful not to retain as long as we live, and we hope our Posterity after us as long as the World indures, a just and precious remembrance of the Obligations we lie under to that Triumphant Monarch? Or that we can ever think otherwise than with the utmost Respect and Veneration of a Prince, who under God reinstated us in the Possession of our Lives, Estates, our Liberties, and our Religion, and left us in the perfect and peaceable enjoyment of all Things most dear and valuable in this World to Englishmen and Freemen, when they had been basely betray'd by Papists, Jacobites, and High-Church Men, who as they had reduc'd their native Country then by their infamous Doctrines to their fellow Subjects to the very Brinks of Slavery and Arbitrary Power, are playing the very same Game over again by the very same Doctrines, Principles, and Practices reviv'd and propagated by their Sacheverell's, their Drake's, their Lefly's, their Hicker's, their Tilly's, their Hereditary Right-Mongers, their Prefacers and the rest of the contemptible Rabble of High-Church Traytors, who are subverting and unraveling what our Glorious Deliverer had establish'd upon so sure and solid a Foundation dation as by the help of that Providence we adore and trust in, nor Hell, nor they, nor France, nor their darling outcast, shall ever be able to renverse.

What Service was reasonably then to be expected for the true Interest of one's Countrey from the Pen of a Man who dar'd blaspheme the Name and Memory of a Prince to whom we owe our all? He that is not contented with the happy State and Condition of our original Freedom he left us in, owes his Obedience somewhere else; and it is evident beyond a Doubt that that Englishman whether of High or Low Church who is not fatisfy'd with the Establishment of the present Government upon the Foot and Principles of the late Happy and Glorious Revolution, can have nothing else in view but the restoring the Pretender whom the Nation has been at the Expence of fo much Treasure and noble Blood to banish and expel for ever. 'Tis in vain for 'em to daub over their black and impious Defigns with the varnish of their false and hypocritical Zeal and faithless Professions to her Majesty; for they who disallow and deny the Right of our Great Deliverer to the Imperial Crowns of these Nations as founded upon the Consent and Donation of a free and and willing people (which is not only the best, but only just Title that all Monarchs ever have or ever will hold their Crowns by) can never have any fincere Regards to our Gracious Queen who holds it by the same Title. For the no body that I know of in the least questions her Majesty's just Pretensions to the Crown by a right of Succession, I mean of those of Low-Church Principles; yet fince these venerable High Church Friests, and others, by their cursed Doctrines and Practice had, not long ago given occasion to break that Line of Succession, and happily, tho' against their Intentions, gave the Nation an Opportunity of exerting their original Right of disposing of it, and for the Merit of his Services setting it upon the Head of their Immortal Deliverer; Her Majesty by the glorious share She had in the Revolution has given the World sufficient Evidence of her belief both of the Necessity and Justice of it; and since by such a Conduct She has approv'd and justify'd the Rights of Her People upon that important Conjuncture, and acknowledg'd the Equity of King William's Possession of the Crown by their donation, I think it is evident that Her Majesty believes She claims and injoys it by the same Authority, which recogniz'd and confirm'd Her Right by Succession in case of failure of his Issue, by the Addition of a Parliamentary Right, which as a solemn Act of the whole Legislature, is no more than the Confent of the People; especially since according to the traiterous Doctrines of the Modern Affertors of Hereditary Right, which in their wife Opinions no Power upon Earth can alter, much less abrogate, our Gracious Queen has no more Title to the Crown she wears, I mean in right of Succession, than I have; for upon their Supposition that the Pretender is the legitimate Son of the late King James, with a Title by Divine Right which no human Power can dispence with, (which to prove is the sole End and Defign of these impious High-Church Sicophants,) acording to them Her Majestty in plain English is no more than a down right Ulurper,

'Tis therefore evident that these double High-Church Pretenders to Loyalty and Affection honour her indeed with their Lips, but both the and all the World have good Reason to believe that their Hearts are as far from her as St. Germains or Bar-Le-Duc; as long as she is continually by an unpresidented munificence conferring Riches and Favours upon them and their Church, they are the most supple, affectionate and most obedient of her Subjects; but the Moment she witholds 'em or shall refute to run into all the extravagant Meafures of their belov'd High-Church Priests! There is an End both of Gratitude and Allegiance; wondrous happy indeed must that Prince needs be whose Subjects Fidelity and Affections are founded only upon private Interest and Advantages they may receive from his Munificence! And there is but too much Reason to believe that to most of those reverend Hypocrites, who are of Sentiments contrary to the Principles of the Revolution, in respect to the Queen, the Words of the Devil to God in regard to 70b will be found but too justly applicable— Stretch forth now thy Hand and ouch him but with one of thy Fingers, and he will Curse thee to thy

I shall but slightly touch upon the other good Offices the ingenious Prefacer has done his Friend in other parts of his Preface, as what he contributed to the Publication of a Pamphlet intitl'd Commendatory Verses upon the Author of Prince Arthur, and King Arthur of The Trap that was laid ver phagmatick and unpoetical Memory. for him by the Booksellers of London, which shew'd that they believ'd him of mercenary Disposition. His Mercurius Politicus, which full of such rude and violent Reflections upon the Establishment of the State and Church, and the glorious Finisher and and Supporers of the Revolution as more than enough demonstrate him to ave been of a Spirit and Principles diametrically opposite to 'em, for which fays his worthy Friend, he was bound over, and being try'd vas then only acquitted upon a Flaw in the Information, upon which our then Governours brought a Writ of Error, which being depending to the Day of his death, joyn'd to the ill treatment he receiv'd from some of his own Party, flung him into a Fever, of which he dy'd after a short Confinement to his Bed, not without iolent Exclamations against the rigor of his Prosecutors. ---- A ery towardly and commendable Account that one Friend gives of nother, Oh High-Church! High-Church! Just going out of the World to appear before a Tribunal where they tell us a Man mult ever hope for Pardon and Remission of his Sins but by Repentance, f which the principal Parts are Sorrow and Contrition for 'em, Reirution, and forgiving all those Injuries we may have receiv'd This was performing the last Offices for his Friend with a lengeance, fixing a Character upon his Memory, which gives the be World Reason to believe that he liv'd an ill Man and dy'd a vorse Christian; but the Man was all of a peice, and Truth in pight of the Devil will out; Disgusts and Disappointments of his ❽

hopes first gave Motion to a heated and overweening Fancy, and they cou'd not fail to give Birth to something out of the ordinary course of Productions of the Brain; a niggard and scanty Fortune which expos'd his good Sense and Conscience to sale; the ill success of his own and Friends Designs, and the unkindness of some of his own Party kept a weak and irresolute Mind without Courage or Honourin a continual State of Vexations and cruel Anxieties; and the guilt of having abus'd and misapply'd his excellent Parts to so poor and wicked an End, as imposing upon the Publick scandalous and notorious Falseshoods and Calumnies, which he cou'd not but be conscious were such, wher'd in Rage and Despair to put an End to a forlorn and disastrous Life. Happy for him if his false Friends would at least have permitted him to have rested quietly in his Grave, and spar'd the Reproach they have brought upon his Memory, which otherwise might have Jain conceal'd, or for ever been forgotten, the best peice of good Fortune that can befall a Man who leaves nothing behind him that may deserve to be well spoken off, or commendable; but reftless and implacable Spirits of his own Temper and Principles, have difturb'd his Ashes and incapable to furnish Matter of their own to carry on the same belov'd Design, reviv'd him from the Dead to scatter the Dangerous Poison he had so artfully prepar'd; yet guilded as it is, 'tis still but Poison, the Varnish does but hide, but not prevent the Danger of Infection. The People must be deceiv'd at any rate, no matter what the Means; let but the Church be believ'd to be in Danger, we neither know from whence, by who, or for what, ill imports not whether these Fears are justly founded on rational Apprehensions of real impending Evils, or only meer chimerical ones, 'tis all one for their Purpole, there's the Point gain'd by crafty cunning Knaves, who under the specious cover of providing for the Church's safety, are forming Schemes that tend inevitably to overturn and extirpate all Religion and civil Government amongst us, as I hope sufficiently to prove was the sole Design both of the Author and Revivers, to all who are not either wilfully blind or hardn'd in their Prejudices beyond Conviction or Remorfe.

It evidently appears to every Man who read this labour'd and admir'd M emorial with Attention, and without Prejudice, that the whole Design of it at the Time it was first publish'd, was to soment and increase the unhappy Divisions amongst us, and by that Means to weaken and divide the Strength and Forse of the Nation, the more readily to dispose Things into such a Scituation, as with the greater Care and Hope of Success to accomplish a Project which they have been so long a forging, and which they cou'd never reasonably expect to bring to the desir'd Issue, but by the total Renversement of the Revolution Establishment; I mean the restoring the Title of their belov'd Pretender, which King James by his male'd Ministration had abclicated, and the Nation with the unanimous Consent by a most solem n Act of the whole Legislature had abrogated and annull'd for ever; for it is past all doubt that what ever Powers their Pretender may be supported with from abroad, yet both he and his Friends

Friends here are well enough convinc'd of the Impossibility of their ever succeeding in such a Design unless he could be secur'd of a confiderable Strength, both to invite him in, and joyn with him when he shall attempt it: This is so undeniable a Truth that we know very well that his best Friends lay it as a much furer Foundation of their Hopes of succeeding, than on the Assistance of his foreign Troops, how formidable soever; for a Nation of that Strength, Riches, and Valour as ours, cannot possibly without the greatest Difficulty and Danger be invaded; but we have found by too fatal Experience that it may with much more Ease be betray'd by Numbers of domestick Traitors into such a State of Weakness and Confusion as may open indeed a fairer Prospect to their View, and force the honest Part once again under the Necessity of freeing themselves from the Curse of Slavery they intend them.

Friends

'Tis in this fole View that both this Memorial and all others of the same Strain and Tendency, have been industriously writ and publish'd to divide and weaken us, in order to render us less capable of defending our felves from the open Attempts and Incroachments of our Enemies; for whilst there are these unhappy Heats, and Jealousies, and Anamosities amongst us, the surest Game our ecret homespun Enemies have to play, is to augment and aggravate em; 'tis confess'd indeed that by such base and villain Artifices they can hardly fail of some Degree of Success, that is, by their Specious and plaufible Infinuations to debauch over to their Interests great Numbers of weak and credulous People who are capable of looking no further than the Outlide and Appearances of Things; or a worse Sort of Men, who by their Vices and Profusions have dissipated the Estates they possibly may have been born to, or such who never had my, and both in Prospect of re-establishing their old broken Fornes, or acquiring new ones in the Confusions and Ruin of their ountry. We are but too well affur'd by melancholy Experience. at this has always been the Practice of our mortal Enemies the esuites, fince that cursed Race of Men have had the Address to inuate themselves into most of the Courts and Councils of Europe; and we are as fully convinc'd that ever fince the Reformation, but re especially since the late happy and glorious Revolution, they have never fail'd of meeting with great Numbers amongst us who have blindly run into all their fatal Measures in Concert with 'em carry on the Noble and laudable Design of inslaving our native untry. We have hitherto, at least till of late, had the Repu-ion of being a wise, honest, and valiant People; Ten Thousand greater ey have chiefs on the Villains have taught the World to think otherwise us! But it is impossible to concieve, unless by such as have had bly ex-Experience of it in their Conversation abroad, how contemptiment of these faithless Jesuites speak of us, who they can so easily debauch Title of act the Parts of Fools or Knaves upon so important an Occasion as Ainistra-Preterbation of our Religion and Liberties, which, as they are ent by only Bars while they remain in their Intire, to the Introduand of Popery and Slavery; 'tis eternally their Interest to underand an ers their mine and subvert, and are so happy in a free and Protestant Nation and his

as to find great Numbers of corrupt and mercinary Wretches, as freely joyn Hands with 'em to finish so detestable a Work.

This will be evident to every thinking disinterested Englishman, who will but imploy a few Minutes of his Time to reflect upon the Triumphs and Rejoycings of the French Court and Army, upon the prospect of the Advantages they proposed to reap from the Disorders and Confusions wrought in the Kingdom by their infamous Tool Sacheverell, and others of the same Stamp; they knew well enough the Danger, nay the impossibility of insulting us whilst we continu'd united; but they could no longer stifle or conceal their Joy and the Hopes of succeeding in their Attempts, by reason of the unhappy Divisions such mercenary Traitors had brought us into. 'Twas this alone that made the Mareshal Villars boast the Beginning of the Campaign following the Negociations at Gertruydenbergh to the Magistrates of Dunkirk, that his Masters Assairs were taking a new Face, and that he doubted not but to convince the World that he was not reduc'd to so low and despicable a Condition, as we and the rest of the Allies conceiv'd him to be in; yet notwithstanding our pernicious Divisions, which were the Foundation of their Hopes, and the glorious prospect of Advantages they had promis'd themselves from 'em, the Success at that time by no means answer'd the Gasconade, however fatally it has done since: And our successful and invincible General, with his yet uncorrupted English Troops and those of our noble Allies, continued to make the vain-glorious Frenchman turn his Back and fly before him, or suffer their strongest Towns to be shamefully taken before his Face, at the Head of a more numerous Army than our own, without moving a Step, or daring to strike a Stroke to relieve 'em, tho' of the last Importance to his finking Country and Courage.

'Twas this Prospect alone, which was the Occasion of their shameless Tergiversations, while they were with the utmost Pomp and Solemnity of the publick Faith fooling all Christendom with the Expectation of a general Peace during their tedious Negociations at Gertruydenbergh; no Body can doubt, who is but little acquainted with the Scituation of the French Affairs, and the miferable Condition of their ruin'd and exhausted Country at that Time, but that however hard of Digestion the Preliminaries seem's to be, they wou'd have been readily swallowed, and a lasting Peace, sate, honourable and advantageous, been concluded upon the Terms of the victorious Allies, if the unhappy Divisions of our own Country, fomented into a Flame by mercenary Priests hird to its Destruction, had not given Birth to their Hopes of better Success than they cou'd ever have expected from their baffl'd and dispirited Armies; we had been too long in Possession of beating 'em even upon the most difficult and disadvantageous Circumstances to leave 'em any Reason to rely upon the Courage and Bravery Troops, as little to be depended upon in a Day of Battle, as the Faith and Sincerity in the Negociations of Peace; yet from the fatal Period of our domestick Confusions spread amongst us by the pertidious Emillaries they conceiv'd the first Dawn of Hopes of advan

advantageous Change in their Fortune and Affairs; it was from that disastrous Scituation of ours alone, and the Prospect of a more easy Peace, in a Juncture that with much Reason they judg'd more savourable and propitious to their Interests, that all their Hopes at that time of recovering themselves solely depended; they saw with Joy, as the delicious Fruits of their Bribery and our domestick Treachery, a glorious Ministry in whose Hands the Administration had been carry'd on for so many Years to their own and Country's immortal Honour, and who were equally Proof against their Flattery and Pensions, were no longer to be a Bar to the Defigns of their Ambition; they faw an unhappy Nation, which had ever been a Cheque to the Insolence of their Pretensions, divided amongst themselves, and upon the point of cutting one anothers Throats; and however meanly we had Reason to think of heir Courage, we had too good an Opinion of their Sense to think they would not improve and make the best Use of a Conuncture so very favourable to their Interests and Designs; they were too sensible both what bloody Confusions and Alterations to their Advantage the Pretender wou'd occasion, if they could have tent him among us at a time when they found he had so considerable Number of professed Partisans, not to profit of the Opportunity they had been able; and if we had him not here at that time, we are solely indebted to the Inability and Want of Power our Noble General and his victorious Troops had reduc'd 'em to, than my thing else; for 'tis evident that whilst he had that glorious' before and fortunate Commander in Head, ready to force his Way with own, a conquering Army into the Bowels of his Kingdom, he was in re'em, no Condition to spare his Forces to execute such an Enterprise, conducting Anny into the Bowers of his kingdom, he was in the ce'em, no Condition to spare his Forces to execute such an Enterprise, who even behind their impracticable Lines were not sufficient, or le to defend his own Country; the' I believe at this time o'th' Pomp by there's no honest Englishman in his Senses who does not make the mile special triple and the most Christian Turk can contrive it.

In the last Glorious Reign wherein our wondrous Deliverance the mile wrought, and the Memory of the Benefits and Blessings of at that were, or I am sure ought to have been, fresh in the Thoughts es seem'd every honest grateful Englishman, these same restless Spirits, who a lasting were offended with the Success of it, imploy'd all their wicked and Endeavours to clog the Progress of a wonderful Turn of widence they had not Power to prevent, and render it, as much any in their Power, inessection in its Consequences, by framing of better any in their Power, inessection in its Consequences, by framing of better any in their Power, inessection in its Consequences, by framing of better any in their Power, whilst the common Enemy of our and umstances are restless with a Power sufficient, in Concert with Traytors at home, to unravel and overturn what had with so the Glory and good Fortune been begun: Funds to carry on so any the most of any of the Nation has since labour'd under; our Councils advantage in the power sufficient, which was the first and principal Occasion of the opes of a cavy Debts the Nation has since labour'd under; our Councils advantage in the power sufficient in the councils advantage. advan

frequently betray'd to the Enemy, which gave 'em an Opportunity to render ineffectual the best concerted Measures, and defeat us of those Successes which otherwise, humanly speaking, it was hardly possible they could fail of; unnatural Heats, Jealousies, and Animolities industriously scatter'd and fomented amongst the People, principally by those Men who call them elves, and we are very sure ought to be so, the Messengers of Peace, which ingag'd the Kingdoms in a more pernicious and destructive War at Home, than that abroad; yet by the Blessing of God upon the Vertue, Valour and Wisdom of a Prince immoveably bent to leave us in the Happy State and Possession of our Native and Original Freedom, together with the Firmness and Fidelity of those noble and ge. nerous Patriots who adher'd to him in so excellent and commendable a Defign, all the malicious and traiterous Attempts of his and our Country's Enemies prov'd fruitless and abortive; these were the bleffed Fruits of the hypocritical Zeal and Principles of our High Church Friends at that Time in Relation both to the State and Church during a Life and Reign, that shall be the Blessing as well as Admiration of all succeeding Ages.

But Faction as it is infernal never dies, as the Devil who is the Father of it never fleeps; the same Artifices with the same rest less Impatience are still carry'd on, and to the same execrable purposes of sacrificing all that is good or valuable in Religion, o civil Government, to the Establishment of a Popish Pretender, the they are affur'd that by the Help of French Power he will not fa to govern us by Maxims of French Policy and French Religion, a the great Confolation and Happiness doubtless of a free and gene rous Nation born and nourish'd in Liberty, and the wonders Security and Support of the establish'd Church sounded upon Pro testantism. It may be indeed allow'd to these very zealous an discreet High Churchmen, that in the late Reign there might first have been some Colour, I say only Colour, for Reason we a fure there never was any, for their Apprehensions of some Dang to their Church, during the Administration of a Prince born and brought up in the Discipline and Communion of Calvin; yet le constant Adherence and Continuance in the Profession and Practi of the Doctrine and Form of Worship of the Church of Engla to his dying Day, his leaving our Religious Queen to succeed h in the Throne, his Care for the Security and Establishment of the National Church and Religion as by Law provided for in the estimable Blessing of the Succession of the Illustrious Protests House of Hanover, together with the wholesome Laws during short but glorious Reign, made to perpetuate the Blessings of I ligion and Liberty to his People, as they ought to have stopp'd! lewd Mouths of Calumny and Detraction, so were they more th sufficient Evidences of his fincere and tender Care for them a and will be with all thinking honest Englishmen eternal Testing mest, than the lasting Peace, Happiness, and Security of a grand noble Nation, whom God had appointed, and the People of ien for their Head.

But from the Commencement of the Reign of our Gracious Queen who suck'd in the Doctrine of the Church of England with her Milk, who has given 'em so many glorious Instances of her Belief and Affection to it, and equall'd the Perfection of its Doctrines with the Purity of her Practice and Manners, to the Shame and Confusion of the most Zealous Pretenders of Profession; in such a Reign 1 lay where Piety and Truth, where Justice and Mercy, the brightest Tewels as well as best Security of a Throne, concenter'd and walk'd Hand in Hand together, till these Wretches for secret Ends perverted 'em and broke the golden Chain: What Reason had these turious and defigning Zealots, these restless High Church Hypocrites, to entertain the least Notion of Fears and Apprehensions of chimerical Dangers to their Church, if they had form'd no other Deligns in their wicked Heads and Hearts but her real Security or the Honour of a Princels they pretend to adore? If their Malice and Wickednels were not as incorrigible as their Love to true Religion is falle and ypocritical, Shame and Confusion would be their Portion for so arefac'd and groundless a Suggestion: What Occasions were there n fuch a happy and glorious Situation, incessantly to scatter their inmous and malicious Pamphlets amongst the People, stuff'd with inch virulent Principles and Doctrines as tended only to poilon all Government and all Religion, if they did not hide under the facred eil of the most pure Religion the flagitious Design of bringing in Impostor, who by the very Principles of his Superstition must be of our establish'd Church ! Have these Men of wondrous Conscience Judgment so soon forgot the deplorable Condition these Nations were in, by the impious Cant of their Predecessors and selves, uc'd to under the Bigotry of the Father, to be in love with the ablishment of a suppositious Son of the same Principles and Proion? Shameless Prevarications! Barbarous Ingratitude! Execra-Treason! Yet whom have they not blasphem'd? What Pains Dang e not these False Zealots taken to render a noble, wise, and orn an erous People not only a Prey to their most mortal and irreconciyet l e Enemies, but the Reproach and Scorn of all the neighbouring Practi Engla F nons? And oh that Heaven has permitted 'em to be so far succeed h celsful in their Wickedness!

et this has constantly been the unweary'd Practice of a restless implacable Faction ever fince the Revolution, and continues e so at this Day, who in all their publick Writings, Sermons private Infinuations among the People, preach up and propagate Doctrines and Principles as are utterly inconsistent with all civil ernment, and more particuliarly our own, but which, it must onfess'd, most admirably tend to accomplish the End they proto themselves, that is, the reducing the People into Dispositions Il out with the happy Constitution they are under, wherein Testings last Michigan enjoy all that can render a gallant Nation either great and thing at home, or formidable to their Enemies abroad, in order to substitute another, which must inevitably not only ruin the Reputation they had once with so much Glory establish'd with

with their Neighbours and Allies, but with the Loss of their Religion and dear bought Freedom, subject themselves and their Posterity to the infamous and insupportable Condition of Slavery and Arbitrary Power; this shall be the unavoidable Consequence of the Dominion of a Popish Pretender forc'd upon us by the Assistance and Power of a Tyrant who has ever aim'd at the inslaving of all Europe, who as he glories in having reduc'd a great and noble People of his own, originally as free as we are, into the despicable Condition of Slaves, contends for nothing more than with the Help of our domestick Traytors to reduce us to the same miserable Degree of Servitude, who are the principal Obstacles to all his ambitious Designs, when a huddel'd up and infamous Treacherous Peace shall have given him time to breath and recruit himself into an Ability either to accomplish 'em himself in his own time, or his Grand Children to finish the noble Work of Slavery in some of theirs.

Yet this Design of theirs, how detestable soever in it self, which they so industriously push on under the false Pretext of Love and Zeal for their Religion and Country, wou'd at least appear abroad in the World with something a better Grace; if the Arguments they make use of for that Purpose had any real Foundation (as they pretend) either upon the Authority of the Holy Scriptures, of Reason, or the nature of civil Government: When Propositions of this kind are modefly advanc'd and endeavour'd to be prov'd by Strength of Reasoning to such a Degree of Light and Evidence as are necessary to create Conviction, all rational unprejudic'd Persons are oblig'd either to give their Assent to 'em, or prove 'em false by better Authority, and a superiour Force of Argumentation; but if instead of fuch Proofs and Authorities, in an Affair of fuch Consequence as our well being in this World, and our Salvation in the next, we meet with nothing but gross and shameless Prevarications, manifest Falshoods dress'd up and disguis'd only with the plausible Appearance of Truth, with nothing but a frivilous and artful Sophistry to gild 'em below the Character of Men of Wit, good Sense, or Probity; they must excuse us if they do not take such false Coin for current Sterling, if we do not swallow the Hook so poorly baited, if we not only refuse our assent, but endeavour to expose in their proper Colours such dangerous Essects to the Contempt and Infamy the merit, and labour for the publick Good of the Nation, both to un deceive and redress those who may possibly already be misled thro Weakness or Inadvertency, and to preserve those who may still re main found and uncorrupted from the Danger of Infection. In the View I do not despair in the Course of this Essay to make it appear to all such as are not harden'd in their Obstinacy, or perverted their Judgments, that the whole Scope and Intent of the Auth of this infamous Memorial, his ingenious and learn'd Revivers as and all others of the same Kind, is solely calculated for the laudab Defign of bringing in their dear Pretender, by the Means Principal of the unnatural Divisions they so industriously foment amongst and that all the Arguments by which they endeavour to enfor their Doctrines upon us are falle, sophistical and groundless, the

must acknowledge for the Honour of their Authors, that Arguments drawn from a Spirit of Malice, Calumny and Error are of all others the most proper to sustain and propagate the Designs of a Book conceiv'd in Spleen and Disgusts, and born in the Rage of Disappointments.

I think that every Man who feriously reflects upon the happy and flourishing Posture and Condition of the Affairs of these Nations at that time, in Relation both to the State and Church, will eafily conclude that a Libel of such malignant. Tendency as The Memorial cou'd proceed from no Body, but one who either envy'd the Happinels we enjoy'd, or one who was hir'd by Expectation of a Reward to employ the utmost of his Capacities to subvett and destroy it; the two principal Topicks he makes use of for that End are Scandal and Calumny, very worthy both, such an Author and such a Defign; the Church for which the religious Physitian was so deeply concern'd, to use his proper Words, was by his own Confessionin all Appearance in a flourishing Condition, in perfect fair Weather, with all the splendid Appendages of her Dignities and Preferments; but yet for all this fine shew of Health and Tranquility, there was a pestilent hectick Fever lurking in her Bowels, which if not timely cur'd wou'd infect all the Humours, and at length defroy the very being of it—A very terrible and dangerous Scituation ndeed! Yet notwithstanding that wise Gentleman's Knowledge of futurity and deep Skill in Phylick and Prediction, the Church continu'd fafe and found in the fame healthful and flourishing Condition for the Space of seven Years following, which is something longer, according to the Rules of his Art, than is allow'd to a pestilent ectick to domineer in a Body without destroying it, and by the Bleffing of God without the Help of his Prescriptions wou'd have ontinu'd so in the same Hands it was then to the Ends of the World; but there was a certain Design which had been long a orming, and which cou'd never be brought to Perfection unless e People cou'd be debauch'd into a Belief of the Danger of the burch; and fince it was impossible to find any real Dangers on hich to found their Conviction, they were to be sham'd off with the chimerical Fumes of visionaries, and bigotted and corrupted Merenaries for fuch.

The Sum of all this frantick Gibberish is no more than this, the appy Settlement of these Nations upon the solid Basis and Principes of the Revolution, was a Burthen intolerable to a Faction at had employ'd all their Endeavours and Artistices to oppose and event it; and when, thro' their Impotence, they found themselves hable to effect that, their Malice set on work all the wicked Arts ey cou'd devise to blacken, to ridicule, and brand it with the inmous Imputations of Sedition and Rebellion, thereby to render e Blessings of Providence of no Essect, which had been pour'd in on us by a wonderful Train of Successes, next to Miracles: But luckily, for these excellent Patriots and Lovers of their Church, ere were at that time a sort of Men in the Administration of the blick Assairs, who were not only some of the principal Contrivers, but who continu'd constant and strenuous Supporters of that won? derful turn, which they had the good Fortune, under God, and the Wisdom and Valour of their great King, to the unspeakable Happiness of these distracted Nations and their own immortal Honour, to accomplish: Now we may believe, at least, it may be suppos'd, to be the Opinion of every honest English Man in his Senses, that those noble Lords and Gentlemen, who had at the utmost Hazard of their Lives and Fortunes been the principal Actors in rescuing their Religion and Country from the inevitable Evils of Popery, Slavery, and arbitrary Power which then threaten'd 'em, might with the utmost Justice be entitul'd to a sincere and disinterested Affection to the Liberty and Happiness of both, which they had with so much Glory preserv'd. Men in their Senses seldom run the Hazard of facrificing their Lives, Estates, and Families, with what ever else is dear and valuable in the World to precarious and imaginary Expectations; nothing but the real and folid Good of their Country's Freedom, and the Preservation and Security of their Religion, is capable of inspiring generous free-born English Men, who know the Merit of 'em, with the noble Resolution of hazarding all Things to perpetuate such precious and invaluable Treasures to after Ages; nor shall they be refus'd by their greatful Posterity (who shall peaceably enjoy the Blessings of their noble Toils and Dangers, however ingratelfully they may be treated here) all the just Tribute of Acknowledgment and Admiration that are due to the uncommon Vertue of Men who dar'd to oppose the Current of Tyranny and Slavery, that like a Deluge was preparing to overwhelm'em.

These great and worthy Men then were the principal Obstacle to the traiterous Defigns and Pretensions of a Faction, which has been ever labouring to overturn that goodly Fabrick the Wisdom and Vertue of the former had erected and long preserv'd, and whom Heaven for the Punishment of our Sins in some measure has fuffer'd to succeed; yet is their Work not yet finish'd, and by the Blessing of God upon our Vertue never shall; two principal Points therefore were necessarily to be gain'd; the Removal of the late Glorious Ministry, and the discrediting the Dissenters; and therefore to facilitate the Execution of the Designs of the Faction, Means were to be found out to deprive the one of the Admini of stration of Affairs, and to render the other odious and suspected those great and incomparable Ministers and the whole Body of Dil fenters must be blackned and misrepresented as the worst and most dangerous Enemies, from whom all the dreadful Evils that threatend no less than certain Destruction to their Church were suppos'd w derive; for without this they could form no reasonable Prospect of Hope of the Success of their Enterprize. 'Twas equally then against the former as the known Bulwarks of our Religion and Liberties the latter as a formidable Force entirely opposite to their Design Hand, that the Faction's Engineers pointed all their Batteries of Malice, Scandal, and Detraction. Strange Method in such who pretend to love their Country, and to be animated with the Zeal and Spirit of Religion, to endeavour the Conservation of em by Practices unbecoming em both as honest Men and Christians; but with these it imports not what the Means are, so the Work of Darkness be done. They knew full well, that generally Mankind to their great Credit and yet but truly it is spoken) are much more readily inclin'd to receive evil Impressions than good; a cerain secret Guilt, arising from the general Corruption and Pravity of the Mind, makes every wicked Man believe, or at least wish, hat all Men were like himself, that under the Shadow of the niversal Contagion, he may more easily conceal his proper Imerfections; hence it proceeds that such Men take a secret, but macious Pleasure, to see Men of more Merit and Vertue than themelves impudently aspers'd and malign'd; they naturally hate an excellence in others, which is a Reproach of the Want of it in themselves; they rejoyce to see 'em loaded with Reflections which they are conscious they in no manner deserve; nor is there any furer way to tarnish the Character of a Man of however uncomon or elevated a Vertue in any eminent Station, than boldly to alumniate him; some of the Dirt that's thrown at him will cercanly flick; do but once deprive him by fuch Means, however unjust or dishonourable, of that sort of Reputation which is founded only upon popular Opinion (for there is another more valuable one enablish'd upon Innocence and the intrinsick Merit of Vertue and Honour, which no Malice can reach or affect) and it will no longbe a difficult matter to tumble him from his Post and Dignities, and possibly render him the Sport or Contempt of a People, who but a few Hours before admir'd and ador'd him for a thousand excellent Qualities. Hard Condition of great and honest Men! If he were not for the secret Pleasure and Satisfaction that arises from the Conscience of having well discharg'd ones Duty to his Country and Religion, there's little else to engage a Man who has any Thing o lose, in the Service of the one or the other; yet the subtle Vilgains his point, and leaves the poor disgrac'd to the Consolation on of his Innocence and Philosophy.

To begin with the Dissenters, whom they infult with all the indiscreet and hery Zeal that feems to be much rather the infult of Rage and Fury than of a temperate and rational Regard for the Interests of true Religion. I set not my felf up for an Advocate either of the whole Body, or any Class of 'em, as such; but but I set up for an vocate of Truth and Justice: I can look on, and consider 'em as Fellow-Subjects and Fellow-Christians united with me under fame Bonds of civil Society, and the same Principles of our comppos'd to an Faith, without branding 'em with the odious Characters of ob-cospect of the sate Schissnaticks, or persecuting 'em for being so. I can bewail an against in Error of Separation, in such as do it purely for Conscience-sake, hiberties in the establish'd Church, and heartily pray that God will in his Design in od time dispose their Hearts to return into her Bosom, without exteries of the into a Judge to condemn or punish 'em, much less by uch who and wicked Calumnies endeavour to render 'em odious to the the Zeal overnment under which they demean themselves with the same f em by celity and Allegiance with the rest of their Fellow-Subjects. know no Religion that obliges me to treat 'em with Asperity and Contempt, or with the violences of a bigotted refentment because they don't believe exactly as I do, or conform to all the Externals of the religious Worship of a God, we equally confess and adore; but I am fure that on the contrary I am peremptorily commanded, by the only Authority under Heaven that can influence my Conscience in such Matters, and which I shall ever prefer before the Institutions of the wifest and most Religious of Men, to love my Neighbour as my felf, nay to forgive and love even my Enemies, and to pray for those who persecute and despightfully use me. This refin'd and exalted Degree of heavenly Charity, is what ever Man who makes profession of the Christian Religion is indispensibly oblig'd, at least to endeavour to arrive at; and if such a State of absolute perfection, by Reason of the Disobedience and Rebellion of the Passions with the Frailties of felf-love which inseparably attend the human Nature, is with great Difficulty, if at all practicable; yet I am very fure that he who does not exert his best Endeavours to approach as near it as is possible, shall give but a very lame and imperfect Account of his Faith at the great Day of Retribution; but I think I may with much greater certainty maintain, that they shall be in a much more terrible and deplorable Condition, who giving vent to all the Impetuolities of Rage and Revenge, shall perfecute their Fellow-Subjects and Fellow Christians with the utmost violences of Cruelty and Oppression, because possibly they may have it in their Power to

This is a Truth, that there is not a Man of that furious High-Church Spirit can be insensible of, and I leave it to the World and their own Consciences to determine, what Mercy such Men may one Day reasonably expect to meet with, who know not what Mercy and Forgiveness are here; when they shall shall think fit to reflect how willfuly they contravene a Divine Command, the most solemnly and politively enforc'd under the severest Penalty of any in the whole Book of God. Whatever the Faults or Errors of the Diffenters in general, or particular Sects of 'em, may be, there is nothing more certain than that Methods of Violence and Cruelty will never redress 'em; 'tis but too much the Nature of Man to be exasperated by severe and rugged Usage, and to express and return with the like Asperity their Resentments of it; Charity and good Manners will always work upon good natur'd and ingenuous Dispositions, and the Conversion and Punishment of obstinate and harden'd ones is only the Work of a Power superior to Human: I hope and believe that the Breach between them and the establish'd Church is not irreparable even by the ordinary Methods of human Prudence, and if it cannot be totally heal'd up, it may questionless be lessen'd by Measures of Charity, Complaisance and good Manners; but I am very fure that it will be widen'd and render'd incurable by those of Pride, of Rigour, of Contempt and an uncharitable Haughtines; and this one Thing I will pretend to maintain, that there have been greater Numbers of 'em banish'd from the Communion of the establish'd Church by such unchristian Practices than possibly will ever be retriev'd by preaching, tho' attended with never so much Brength of Reasoning, or probity of Manners. If they fail in that Respect, which is questionless due to the National Church, if they erry their Folly further, and make Attempts to the Prejudice and subversion of it; if they can so far forget themselves and their own we Interest, which a wise and prudent People cannot reasonably fupposed to do, as to fly in the Face of the Civil Power, and to eate Disturbance and Contusions in the Commonwealth which herishes and protects them; 'tis the Business of the Legislature onto find out, and apply proper Remedies to the Disorders, and what Methods they shall think ht to reduce 'em to better Maners, and restrain 'em within the limits of their Duty to both; But ho made thee a Ruler and a Judge over 'em? By vertue of what Commission, except that of his own Arrogance or Self-conceit, shall very intemperate High-Church Bigot, who is pleas'd to be offendtake upon him to brand a whole considerable Body of Men th the infamous Imputations of Schismatick, Fanatick, or Remblican?

Sometimes the whole Body of Dissenters are huddl'd together, d the Zealous Author fets himself loose in all the unbecoming Violence of an Enthusiastick Madness against 'em, as the most bitter and irreconcileable Enemies, who have actually laid the Ax to the y Root of the establish'd Church, in order to affect the utter oversion of it; sometimes he is pleas'd to separate the Presbyterias the wifest and more moderate of 'em, and treats 'em with a little more Respect and good Manners than the rest: Yet this is no more than a Fit, and affectation of good Humour, and lasts but a little while, and the Danger to the Church is soon after to be apprehended as much from them as upon any of the others. One ould be glad to be inform'd, for what Purpose he gives himself trouble to tell us that the Calvinists, and Lutheran Churches oad will not suffer any Communion distinct from themselves, to we at a rivalship of Power with 'em in the Places they are estah'd, who doubts it? And, how does it appear that there has any Design been form'd legally to put 'em upon a level in Charch-men have in all Ages given the World but too many fatal ances of their jealousie of Power when any other have set up a Participation of it; and of their Abuse of it, when they have rois'd it to themselves, to the Destruction even of that Secular hority to whose mistaken Zeal and Simplicity they were first ined for it; but what have we to do with Rome, or Geneva, or sburgh, or Germany, or France, to feek for Presidents, or take mple by? Unless it be to inform us how wretched a People must who are under the Government of Ecclesiasticks. Our wise and s Reformers, wou'd to Heaven they had been wifer, and left Power to ours, have fram'd a Communion and Confession of h, and Discipline very different from 'em all, choosing what ve been esteem'd good and profitable for Edification, and rejecting the the estawill ever strors, the Vanities, the Superfluities of some, and the nakedness and barrenness of others; of which they compil'd a beautiful, yet venerable System of Religion and manner of Worship, which we' are fatisfy'd comes nearer the Primitive Purity and Perfection, than that of any Church under the Sun, and which we doubt not shall ever continue so without the Fear or Jealousie of any Rival, nor be increased otherways in her Numbers, than by such as shall be charm'd and attracted into her Bosom, and Communion by the excellent Purity of her Doctrines, and Primitive Candour and Integrity of her Manners; which as she has ever been since the Reformation subordinate, and dependent as a primary Part of the Constitution on the supreme Civil Power and Authority; so we hope for the future Good and Happiness of these Nations, she shall always continue so, whatever wicked endeavours our High-Church Enthufiafticks in their lust for Power shall make use of to hoist her above 'em, or rather to make her independent only, to make themselves, like their dear Brethren of the Popish Superstition, exempt from all secular Jurisdiction; which supreme Authority, as it has in all times hitherto preserv'd the Church, as in her legal Honours and Immunities, so within the limits of her Duty; so it is not to be question'd, but that the Legislature will always exert the same Power to curb the Insolence of those unhappy Sectaries that are sprung up amongst us, when ever they shall so far forget themselves, as to fail in their Respect and Duty to the Civil Government, or National Church.

As much as I am scandaliz'd at the Insolence of the Author, I cannot but do him Justice, where I think he deserves it, and commend him, where he fays, and ingenuously acknowledges, on a Supposition of a struggle of the different Sects for the first Place of Power and Authority: That, whichever of 'em shou'd succeed in fuch a Defign, the others would not fare so well, or meet with the fame good Treatment that they all of 'em do now from the establish'd Church; than which there can be nothing more certainly true, if understood of the Primitive Purity and Genuine Spirit of Christianity, that eminently distinguishes her from all others, as it is profes'd in the true National Church of England, exclusive of what its reverend Partifans are pleased to call their High-Church, of which we shall have Occasion to speak more at large in the fequel of the following Discourse; from which Consideration I think it evidently follows, That it can never be the Interest of any one Sect to pretend to usurp the Place of the establish'd Church, or the others to suffer it if they should; and I think I may, with great Real fon, pretend to persuade and convince our own People, that it is much less the Interest of the Presbyterians, than any others, (be cause they have much more to lose) to pretend to set up for the establish'd Church, upon the subversion of that which is at present so for to carry on so great a Design as totally to change the Form and Manner of Worship of a Religion once establish'd by the Authority of the Laws, and continu'd by a long Prescription of Time, there ought to be necessarily Means employ'd proportionable to so great and daring an Enterprize; and I am firmly perswaded that nothing but the immediate Power of God, or by his Permission, the whole Su-interest preme

preme Legislature of a Nation are capable of performing it; I am very much mistaken if the Presbyterians can pretend to be ascertain'd of the Co-operation, and Permission of the former, without which is impossible; and they are too wife and judicious a People to magine that they can ever be Masters, or in full Possession of the letter, without which it is utterly impracticable; they are a People hat very well know their Interest, and their Condition too easie id secure under the Indulgence and Protection of the Laws, to zard either of 'em, in the bare hopes of succeeding in so Chimerial and Precarious an Undertaking, by which, if they should miserry in the Execution, they might justly draw down upon themdives, if not the Vengeance of Heaven, at least the Indignation and Resentments of a whole offended Nation, which might probably terminate in their final Extirpation, by the Effect of a terrible Persecution which the audaciousness of the Attempt, and the exiencies of the State may make both Just and Necessary; nay, if they would be so far infatuated as to form such a Design, a Man must eve but a very despicable Opinion of every Branch and Member that composes the Legislature, who have the Power and Strength of the Nation in their Hands, if they did not employ their Wildom Valour either to prevent, or vigorously to punish an Attempt, that must necessarily reduce all Things into a State of the last Conmuon and Disorder, and dissolve the whole Frame of our Laws, State and Church, upon the Foot and Principles of the prefent State and Church, upon the Foot and Principles of the present blishment.

It is true indeed, what he fays only to fix a Mark of Odium upin on the Presbyterians, that what has been, may be; but it is false Resoning to affirm that what once has been, shall be again. 'Tis ertain that in the Confusions, which from the Year Forty, to For-Eight, on which he lays a wonderful stress, turmoil'd these unpy Nations, the Sectaries of all Classes had a principal Share; without all doubt, aim'd at a total Subversion of the Govern-at, both in respect to the Civil and the Religious Constitution, in a great measure by a strange sort of fatality, which no hu-Wisdom has hitherto been able to account for, succeeded in Design; yet the Frenzy lasted but for a short time, which sufently demonstrated both the natural Vigour and Roburstness of Constitution, and that the Difficulties which are inseparable n Attempts of that Nature, to overturn an ancient fettled Gonment, are next to insuperable: Since the first false Step that is le (like an Error in the first concoction) is very rarely, if ever resi'd, but leads 'em on into the unavoidable Confusions of e e incils, which feldom terminate but in the abortion of the Defign, destruction of the Conspirators. 'Tis very well here worthy of nark, That in that diastrous Time of Forty One, wherein that ible Calamity began to break out, that House of Commons was there t and copos'd, for the greatest Part, of Gentlemen of as distinguish'd g but Characters for their Zeal for the establish'd Religion, and the true e Sul Interest and Happiness of their Country, as well as for their great preme

Parts and Abilities, as possibly any that ever had the Honour to sit within those Walls before, or fince; and it was their firm and immoveable Love and Fidelity to both, which animated 'em to excel their Wildom and Courage to make a stand against the Encroachments of an unfortunate Prince, who was actuated by the violent Counsels, and furious Zeal of the very fame High-Church Principles, which are made use of to involve us in the same dismal Calamities at this Day: This was one of the Principal Occasions of those Misfortunes which so miserably harrass'd these Nations for so many Years; their attempting to stretch the regal Power and Authority beyond the limits which the Laws prescrib'd, justly alarm'd those generous Patriots to stand up in the Defence and Maintainance of their immemorial Liberties so openly violated. Who ever is but moderately acquainted with the Tragical History of those unhappy Times, which I have not undertaken to write, may be inform'd by what villanous Arts those Noble Commons were worm'd out of their House by the Heads of the prevailing Faction; they in Process by the Independents, and those by their own Rump and the perfidiousness of Cromwell: A wonderful Scene indeed of the most surprizing Evenements that possibly was ever open'd to the World carry'd on with as much Craft and Dissimulation, as unnatural Heat and Violence thro' all the Mazes and various Fluctuations of Frenzy and Ambition, which at last brought on the Murder of that unhappy Monarch, and with much more Reason and Equity the Fate of his Two Principal evil Councellors Land and Strafford, and in the end terminated in the Infamy and Punishment of the principal Traytors.

Such End have always had all fuch wicked and ill grounded Defigns to overturn an ancient well regulated Government, tho' push'd on and manag'd with all the Cunning and Malice of Hell or wick ed Men, and such End may they ever have; yet as all great and publick Calamities carry their Instructions along with 'em, and make or ought to make Men wifer, we may draw this useful instructive Piece of Knowledge from our own, viz. That the Superstructum of our ancient Government is erected upon such solid natural Prince ples of Reason, Equity and Justice, in which the just Prerogative of the Prince, and Original Liberties of the People are so admirable poiz'd, both equally limited and restrain'd by the Wisdom and E cellent temperament of the Laws, the whole constituent Parts to strong and vigorous Stamina, as render it next to impossible for any Power meerly human, tho' assisted by the most refin'd Craft and Malice of wicked Politicians to alter, much less to subvert; unle for the Punishment of our Sins we are totally abandon'd of Heaven which I hope, with every honest Englishman, shall never be ou Case: And the we have dearly bought this Experience and Know ledge of our Strength, from the late and some more modern Dil sters, I think the very Consideration of the innate Force and V gour of our Constitution, supported by the Wisdom, Integrity and Courage of those who may be intrusted with the Management it, may be esteem'd a just Security to thinking reasonable Mer that humanly speaking, we can never be liable to the like dreading Confusion

Confusions again; tho' we very well know, that there are not wanting among us, great Numbers of Men of the same Principles and restless Spirit, for introducing Arbitrary Power, who are all this time imploying all their Arts and Industry for its Establishment. which if they fucceed, they will inevitably reinvolve us in 'em. Two Ages ago we were all in these Nations of the Religion of e Church of Rome; the Wisdom, Piety and Courage of our Forethers under our enlighten'd Kings, by the Blessing of God, rought us out of the House of Darkness and spiritual Bondage, and is to be hop'd, and I think reasonably believ'd, that we shall neer be so wretched as to return into our Chains of Ignorance and Slary, inseparable from the Possession of the most impure and corrupd of all Superstitions; yet no Englishman in his Wits can be ignoint how near we were brought to our former Captivity by the fuous Councils of Papists, Jacobites and High-Flyers, and their Sibant enflaving Dostrines, in the late Reign of a bigotted despotical ince, ambitious to Madness of Arbitrary Power, together with the files Indeavours of vast Numbers of Men among us at present, of the ne Principles and Doctrines in Favour of a suppositious Pretender; we must be infatuated beyond the Reach of Hellebore, if aftet-Re-establishment of our holy Religion and civil Liberties by our py Deliverance from the Tyranny of the Father, we suffer our ves again tamely to be either cajol'd by crafty Priests, or hector'd designing Bullies out of such inestimable Treasures, let their Enwours be what they will for the Establishment of the Son. Nor I at this Time make any other Use of this Instance, than to shew Impossibility of changing an ancient well constituted Governnt, by any other human Means than the Consent of the whole fillature; that being visibly the Design of the late King James. the Usurper Cromwel, of the former, to introduce a Form of bitrary and Despotick Dominion in the Prince, in the Place of an thority limited and circumfcrib'd by fundamental Laws, which is most fatal Change can be made in a Government; and of the latto change the Face of Monarchy into that of a Commonwealth. h this Difference, that the one would have establish'd Presbytery the Room of Episcopacy, and the other Popery, which in the nion of all honest Men is infinitely worse; and the the Diffities in the Attempts made 'em equally impossible in the Executiyet they both terminated in the same end, that is, in the Infamy Destruction both of the one and the other.

red to carry on the Interests of a Faction, to the visible Prejudice of the Honour and true Interest of his Country, shall suffer himself to be deluded with the Apprehensions of chimerical Dangers which have a Being no where but in the Brains of Men fruitful in Wicked. ness! As he can at the best but deserve the Character of a weak and credulous Person, whose irrational Fears have got the better of his Judgment and Reason; so he will never be able to do his Country any real or confiderable Service, when any Occasion of Importance may require it: Numbers, 'tis true, are of considerable Weight in any Enterprize of Consequence, when wise and cunning Heads have projected and form'd it ripe for Action; and it is in this View principally, that this defigning mercenary Politician endeavours by an Artful Address to infinuate into the Minds of honest well affected People Fantastick Apprehensions of the Church's Danger, as the most plausible and popular Topick to affect and move their Passions; as well knowing, that however loofe the Generality of Mankind is in the Observance and Practice of the strict Rule and Precepts of Re. ligion, they cannot bear the Thoughts of having it infulted; and it is most certainly true, that there is something of that intrinsick Brightness and Merit in pure Religion, as by an unaccountable Impulle, stamps such strong and forcible Impressions on the Minds of Men, as no Corruption of Manners, or wicked Artifices of deligning Knaves can totally efface or remove; and it is as certain, that no civil Government can either be rightly constituted or long subsil without it; this is evident from the universal Practice and Opinion of all the Nations in the World, the most barbarous of which have been found with some Notion of a Superior Being, and some som of Worship paid to it, however false or superstitious, which to them has the Force and Efficacy of true Religion; it being not on ly a common natural Notion strongly imprinted on the Heart of Man, but invigorated and inforc'd upon it by a secret divine Influence from above.

Now whether a Man has either just and well grounded Fears of Dangers of an establish'd Church, or whether out of Design he labours only to infinuate 'em to carry on a private Interest, the Arguments to prove 'em ought to be clear and felf-evident in themfelves and of a Strength sufficient to carry the Force and Power of Conviction along with them. Plaufible Surmifes and well varnish'd Inclinations will not serve the Turn; they may indeed amuse and puzzle great Numbers of poor and ignorant People, but they will certainly open the Eyes of the judicious and more discerning, to see the Weakness and Vanity of such Fears, if the Man be honest who offers them to the Publick; or the malicious Craft and Wickedness of fuch Suggestions, if he be not: He who sedulously, and with real Intentions of doing good feeks after Truth, and has a Mind to communicate his Researches to the Publick, can never fail of being furnish'd with Arguments of Force and Merit to fustain and propagate it; they flow easily from the very Nature of the Thing; for it what he advances be true in itself, it is eternally one and the same, and there is much less Difficulty in proving than conceiving it, especially especially if it lies a little above the Level of ordinary Capacities; for all Men are not equally capable of forming just Ideas of sublime and elevated Truths, and the wifest of us but too well knows that there are many utterly out of the Reach of human Comprehension. But on the other hand, a Man who makes it his Business to propaate manifest or notorious Falshoods, whatever Opinion he may onceive of his Art or Ability in dreffing 'em out, may rack his Brain to invent Disguises and Appearances to prove 'em, but will Iways find himself very wide of the Mark he proposes to hit; the tmost of his Success shall be only to impose on the weaker fort of eople: 'Tis true, his Interest, his Vanity, or Self-love, may put im upon the frivolous Design of hunting after popular Applause; but he will find it but a poor and empty Recompence, let him areve at never so high a Degree of it, for the Prostitution of his Honour and Conscience, and the Infamy of deceiving; nor will all the little Services he may do his Faction by an artful Villany, counerballance the Scandal and Reproach that inseparably follow such Practice, when discover'd. There is something so very deform'd id detestable in a serious Lye which is divulg'd folely to abuse and pose upon the World, as is infinitely below the Character of a an of Parts and Learning, who defires to make a Figure in it; when it comes abroad, attended with the odious Circumstances Calumny and Detraction, there is so much of the Devil and the Villain in the Composition, that it receives an Aggravation, which s off the Father and Divulger of it, from all manner of Pretenn to the Character of an honest Man, a Gentleman, and a Chri-Let such a Man, if he pleases, rejoyce and triumph in the Success of his Wickedness, so we have good Sense and Vertue eigh to discover or prevent the Infection of his Poison : He shall have the Honour of profaning sacred Truths, in the commendable Defign of seducing poor ignorant People, by the gilded plausible spearances of 'em, instead of the Substance, provided we are not Dupes and Bubbles of his Imposture; and if I am not mistaken, rs ot has, and shall further evidently appear, that this is the primary e lad and Defign of this admir'd Piece and Author, whom his dear rguh-Church Brethren have thought fit to raise from the infamous we he was bury'd in, with so much Contempt and audacious Aflves, Confront to the supreme Authority of the Nation. d In-

fame, ing it, ecially But the Opinion of Dangers to the Church must at any rate be blish'd, whether real or chimerical, since they would equally tribute to carry on the Intrigues of a Faction, who have suffintly convinc'd the World fince, that they have nothing less at art than the real Good either of the State or Church; and in orto this, no Corner of the Dominions offers it felf fo commously and seasonably to furnish out a popular Argument, as that t of Great Britain where this terrible Bugbear of Presbyterian cipline is made the establish'd Religion of the Country; 'Thefe, the zealous Author, with the Assistance, and in Conjunction b their Brethren in the South, Shall, whenever the Fancy takes in the Head, pour in like a Deluge upon us, to over-subelm the poor Hierarchy of the Church and the Monarchy of England. How ingenious are such Men's Zeal and false Concern for Religion to form luch dismal Apprehensions of Dangers, where really there are none? And how industrious to stifle and conceal 'em where there really are? 'Tis with a very good Grace he tells us, that within this Twenty Years Episcopacy was the establish'd Religion of that Country, tho' we have ever been taught before, that Episcopacy was no more than a certain Form of Religion, and not the Thing; but if he had had but half so much Probity or Sincerity, as he has Malice and Perverseness, he would have inform'd us too by what precious Means it had been introduc'd there, against the general Bent and Inclinations of the People; for nothing in the State or Church can properly be said to be establish'd, and made National, that is not made so by the Consent and Majority of a People that compose it : He should have told us by what commendable Efforts of a despotical and Arbitrary Power the unfortunate Charles the First, at the most Pious and Christian Infinuations of their High. Church Archbishop Land (whom Foreigners, acquainted with his Principles, and who saw into the Drift of his Designs honour'd with the Title of Pope of the other World, meaning of Great Britain forc'd an unwilling People to receive, tho' never to submit to a Difcipline they could not suggest. What Blood, a Design so against the Genius and Sentiments of the Nation it was the unhappy Occasion of spilling; what Confusions and Disorders it created amongst all Or. ders and Degrees of Men; what Animolities and implacable Aver sions it rais'd in a wife and valiant Nation, accustom'd to be go vern'd by their own ancient Laws, independent from us, and which never ceas'd but in the final Extirpation of it, is not of this Place Pro to determine. Behold the fatal Effects of a bigotted High-Churd Zeal and Policy, which when they cannot prevail by the gentles les Methods of Reason and Perswasion, never fail to apply the more forcible Arguments of Fire and Sword, to constrain Men to serve God in a manner against their Conscience! An excellent Copy of the the right Pious, and most Christian Original, from which they draw me it, the Church of Rome; to which, both by their Practice, Prince ples, and Doctrines, they have, especially of late, given the Worldon but too much Reason to believe, that great Numbers of 'em would Dan find but very litle Difficulty to return upon a proper and favourablether Occasion.

Let it not displease the Memory of this worthy Gentleman, whatever good Opinion he, or his worthy High-flying Disciples and Successfors may have conceived of his Parts and Capacities, if I tell both him and them, that it is absolutely in the Option and Disposition of every free People, not only to frame what fort of Form of Worship in Religion they think most proper, and conform to the Taste and Genius of their Nation, but to alter, to change, and introduce and other, if the first shall not be found to answer the End of its Institution, as they shall think fit. Yet this is to be understood only on what I call the Form and external Manner of the publick Worship of which the Legislature of every free constituted Nation is the only

ly supreme Judge and Disposer; for as to the inferiour Part and Subhance of the Christian Religion, that is, those Articles of Faith absolutely necessary to Salvation, and which draw their Evidence and Obligation from the Authority of Holy Scripture, there is no human ower under the Sun can dispence with or alter a Tittle of it: But Ordinances of Men, such as is the Manner of the outward Worip of all Religions, the supreme Power of every Nation (accordg as the Peace of the Church, or Exigencies of the State require) by; for that supreme Authority which had originally the Power constitute and frame such or such a Scheme of Discipline, may, when they see fit, employ the same Power to alter the old, and in-coduce a new one, if it appear more for the Tranquility and Advantage of the establish'd Religion, or Good and Security of the State. And in this Consideration, it may possibly be worth the while for these furious High-Church Men, who so apparently diforb the Peace and Tranquility of both, seriously and timely to re-Whether a Conduct so very insolent and full of Contempt of the higher Powers, as theirs, may not justly provoke the Legislature his higher Powers, as theirs, may not justly provoke the Legislature ith higher Powers, as theirs, may not justly provoke the Legislature ith me time or other to take such Measures as their Wisdom and Eximite me time or other to take such Measures as their Wisdom and Eximite more within the Limits of their Duty and proper Function by the the cour of the Laws, and yet the Establish'd Religion and National Church be preserved entire in its legal Lstablishments; and if at any or which is far from impossible, they draw upon themselves such an instance of Severity, they may thank their own Petulancy for it; by their contumacious and arrogant Comportment to the Legislature, hich severy unworthy and foreign to the Nature and Character of their Place Protession; by abusing the Divine Precepts of the most pure Religion, under the base and traiterous Designs of enslaving their Country; and interpretation the base and traiterous Designs of enslaving their Country; and interpretation their services. Nature and Calumnies that Malice can invent, which in their services. Nature and Tendency, are directly opposite and destructive of opposite only End and Intention of all true Religion and Civil Governdrawment, by their original Constitution, sounded upon Freedom? Frincially to return to our formidable Enemies in Scotland, our wise Workauter, in his great Foresight, derives his principal Fears of the would Dangers to the Church from thence, upon the Score that Presbytery is purablisher established the National Religion; and 'tis allow'd him, that upon a Supposition of a Joint Design of the Presbyterians, and whatches Diffenters of both Nations, they may be involved in very great

Diffenters of both Nations, they may be involv'd in very great onfiderable Diforders for a Time: But who has told him, or has he prov'd that they either have, or can ever be capable of ng such a Design again, or of executing it, if they should? riend the Prefacer, indeed, has told us from the Authority of hirty Diffenting Lords, that it is no way to prevent Dangers, ting there are none, and he has discover'd to us a most wonderret, for I believe no Man in his Senses ever imagin'd or af-ir was; and I tell him and his Author that there is no Reaits Inth Vorshipsa be apprehensive of Dangers where there really are none, but the of corrupt and mercenary Brains, and that the Necessity of preventing 'em is at an end, where the Things to be prevented, exist only in Vision; nor are the Whimleys of a petulant Mercenary, or ought to be of any Weight with those in the Administration, further than to find out and inflict due Punishments proportionable to the Insolence of such who dare, without Reason, infinuate 'em, The People who compose that Nation, are a wife and sensible People, and who very well understand their Interest; how can it rationally be conceiv'd that either in this Reign, or indeed ever for the future, they shall be willing to form an Enterprize, supposing in Conjunction with their Brethren in England, whereby, if they miscarry, they will infallibly expose all that is dear and valuable to 'em in the World, to the Fury and Arbitrement of an inrag'd and conquering Nation, who in Revenge, will not fail to make what Changes and Alterations they may think fit both in their Church and State; and whatever Opinion they may conceive of their Wif dom and Courage to effect so great a Defign, they can never be in sensible of the vast Disproportion there is between the two Nation in Wealth and Numbers, which are the Sinews and Strength of Kingdom; and if in the Course of all Ages, they have found u always more than a Match for 'em, and generally made them pa dear for their Invasions, when they were supported by the Assistance of the most formidable Power in Europe, 'tis to be suppos'd we can never want the Will or Power to oppose 'em with a much superior Force, fince they can never reasonably lay the same Weight and De pendance on the Junction of the Presbyterians in England, as bear ing no manner of Proportion to the Troops and Counfels

Let any unprejudic'd Person but reflect upon the present Positive and Scituation of Affairs of that Kingdom in regard to England Exception only of what Confusions High-Church has of late bet the Occasion of there) and compare the Circumstances of it wi those they were in at that disastrous Time, when they were bo involv'd in the utmost Disorders, by the unhappy Influence of figning High-Church Traytors, upon an abus'd and credulous Prince and he will easily be convinc'd not only of the Absurdity, but en of the Impossibility of their ever attempting the 1 ke Enterpri again: Let him consider at that time, the People of Scotland, t originally free and tenacious of that Liberty as our felves, in all Exasperations that a fierce and warlike People lye under; the precious Freedom oppress'd, and trampled under Foot by the forts of a despotical and arbitrary Power; the ancient Discipling their Church annull'd and overturn'd by the fatal Advice of H Church Sycophants, to introduce that of the Church of England der the Oeconomy of Episcopacy, to which the Generality of Nation had an insuperable Aversion. Scotland at that time as and independent on us, as we of them, and as absolutely gove by their own Laws and Customs; nor had we any Power to pret to innovate or change any thing in their Government or Religi (both which the King had folemnly fworn to preferve inviolation unless by the general and free Consent of the whole Nation;

by the pernicious Advice of his High-Church Favourites, he not on? ly broke in upon the Laws of his native Country, which fenc'd in their Liberty, and which he knew many of his Predecessors justly oft their Lives for attempting: But against all the Rules of Pruence, Policy, and Christian Charity, forc'd upon 'em the Liturgy f a Church, which however rational and excellent in it felf, was et the universal Abhorrence of a People long accustom'd to another lanner of Worship. This rous'd the Courage of a free and valiant eople, born in the Spirit of Liberty, and fond of it to the last begree; an odious Violence upon so tender a Point as that of Conience, exasperated their Minds into all the Madnesses of Rage and espair, and was the principal Motive that gave a Beginning not aly to the Effusion of all that Christian Blood that was afterwards ift in the Quarrel, but rais'd in both Nations that dreadful Flame never could be extinguish'd; but, as I have said, by the Blood of at unhappy Monarch, and his principal Advisers. These were the effed Effects of the High-Church Zeal of that Age, if that ought be call'd Zeal, which was attended with all the Marks and Chateristicks of a furious and intemperate Bigottry, void of all the timents of Humanity and common Obligations of Christian murity; but so the Pomp, the Authority, the Dominion, the Reues of High-Church be cary'd on and augmented, 'tis no matter : So pious and charitable a Work carries along with it all the dence of Sanctity, and the Love of God in the Promoters. Let e faithful Friends of hers be Atheists, Libertines, or open Diwers of the publick Peace and Tranquility of Nations, the End ins all, and stamps upon them the Character of the devout, the ious, and the peaceable; such Power is there, such wondrous gy in their dear High-Church, as is capable of making Saints he most infamous Villains, consecrating the barbarous Effects of anny and Arbitrary Power, with all the Mischiess that are inseble from them, into evangelical Precepts.

nt; there is such a Change in the very Fundamentals of their litution, so happily brought about under the Instuence of our ous Queen, and the great Wisdom and indefatigable Application of the late Glorious Ministry, that they cannot properly be to be the same People; an Action so great in it self, and of important Consequences to both Nations, and which was in the Wish of all the Kings of the last Age, as will be reckon'd ofterity to be the principal Glory of a Reign compos'd of Won-

The Minds of the far greatest and honestest Part of the Peouieted, and at Ease, in the legal Enjoyment of their desir'd ion; their Liberties and Properties upon the same Foot of Sey as those of England, united by a happy Coalition under the Bonds and Obligations of Civil Power with our selves; and e add (as none of the least Blessings) the Emancipation of leaner Sort from the insupportable Vassalage and Tyranny of former Lords. As Interest is the principal Movement both of Nations and private Persons, the Advantages of such an Union in the Space of a few Years will undoubtedly open the Eyes of a People less numerous, and more indigent than we, to shew their Prudence in discerning, and readily laying hold on such as must necessarily redound to em from a free Commerce with us, and the Benefit of Foreign Traffick. We are not at all ignorant from what fort of Men, and of what Principles a Design so Glorious and Advantageous to both Nations in its Consequences, was from the Beginning clog'd with Opposition and Difficulties, that in their first Appearances seem'd insurmountable; nor what Pains were taken by 'em to exasperate the Minds of their Countrymen, by perswading 'em that nothing less was intended than the utter Subverfion of their ancient and independent Kingdom at best, to be reduced only into the Form of a Province, subject to the Dominion of England; nothing left unattempted, that the Rage or Malice of the Jacobite Faction amongst 'em could invent, or that was not put in Execution, to obstruct the Commencements of so great and noble a Design; to puzzle and embarrass the Progress, or to disturb and overturn it, when accomplish'd. They very well knew, and foresaw, that the Conjunction of a great and valiant People, who had for to many Ages been always in the Interests of their good Friends of France, with a Nation who had cut off forever from the Succession to their Crown their beloved Popish Pretender, were likely to prove an invincible Bar to their restless Desires and Designs of restoring him: Yet, as in all free Nations it is reasonably to be supposed that the wisest, greatest, and honestest Part, are ever for the true Interest and Honour of their Country, those noble Patriots of both Kingdoms, who were employ'd in so glorious and difficulti Toil, overcame the impotent Opposition of the turbulent and disat it is fected; well foreseeing, that as the Benefits and Emoluments of Traffick will in a short time render 'em much more easy and happy than ever they were fince they were a People; fo the Addition of their Strength and Numbers will raise our own into so formidable Scituation, that as we shall always thus united, be a Terror to the neighbouring Nations; we can never be under any rational Appre hensions of being insulted by the greatest and bravest of 'en fi whilst we continue so, and thereby be enabled to raise the Glory and See Reputation of Great Britain to a higher Pitch of Renown and El Pun mation than ever she arrived at under the most Warlike and Succession ful of our Kings; and tho' this should not happen, yet even the bare Security of our own Kingdoms, which does always confift at refult from the Riches and Numbers of a People whilst at Uni amongst themselves, is a more than sufficient Compensation for the Toils and Labours of those great and generous Patriots, w had the good Fortune to place us in so happy and redoubtable Scituation.

Now I think from all these Considerations, it may with grant Evidence appear, that the Fears of Danger to our establish'd Church from this Quarter, are not grounded upon that Justice and Solidary of Reason this wise Author endeavours to infinuate; or if the were any just and valuable Force in his Argument, whilst we want divided, as it was in his time, I think it may with more Reason be suggested, that it looses that Force, and ceases with that State of paration, fince we can be no longer esteemed but as one and the me People; nor is there the least Probability, whatever Endeayours such Incendiaries as he and the rest of 'em may use to incense that we shall ever come to cutting one anothers Throats in their le Quarrel upon account of the differing Manner of Discipline of r respective Churches, whatever we may be compell'd to in Oppoion to one another, which, with their beloved Prevender, they elabouring hard to introduce; for let'em not in the least question but that the far greatest Part of both Nations will unite their utmost Force and Courage to prevent such a Misfortune as must necessarily involve us again in the most terrible Confusions, and terminate in the final Subversion both of Religion and Civil Government; but let it be suppos'd, but by no Means granted, that the Presbyterians in Scotland, and the whole Body of the Dissenters in England, should form the Design to change the Hierarchy of our establish'd aw, Church into that of Presbytery, and the Monarchy into that of a for commonwealth, what Means have they to carry on fuch a Defign ? what Probability of Success? Men in their Senses, who have any to lose, when they conceive in cool Blood any great and note that Enterprize, especially one so difficult and hazardous as the enterprize of the sense of the sen for fue the Subversion of an ancient establish'd Church and State, sit down support and well consider if they have a Force and Strength proportionable of the Importance of the Attempt, and sufficient to carry it on with ots o any Likelyhood of Success. This cannot possibly be supposed to be culti undertaken or effected but by Violence, and the Way of Arms; it disat is utterly impossible ever for 'em to hope for a general Conspiration dilate is utterly impossible ever for 'em to hope for a general Conspiration nts of the different Parties in so detestable a Work. In such Cases then happy 'tis absolutely necessary that Men should be assured of some fortify'd into Cases, Forts, and Places of Strength, to retire to if they should hable haven to be beaten in the Field: They must be form'd into Armies to the egular Troops; for tumultuary Incursions and Insults will never Appre do their Business, which must be well Officer'd, and regularly subsolved in the same paid; for which End, there must be vast Magazines and only an Stores of Arms and Ammunition, and Forage, with the necessary and Establish these Things be had? Such Preparations and Provisions can seen that all these Things be had? Such Preparations and Provisions can seen that all these Things be had? Such Preparations and Provisions can seen that all these Things be had? Such Preparations and Provisions can seen that all these Things be had? Such Preparations and Provisions can seen that all these Things be had? Such Preparations and Provisions can seen that all these Things be had? Such Preparations and Provisions can see that all these Things be had? Such Preparations and Wanner of raise that all these Things be done but by, and with the Constitution of the People. How shall this possibly, be done, when the of the People. How shall this possibly, be done, when the former of the People are in the last Confusion, and actually in Arms one aets, w another, according to their different Parties and Interests? The and greatest Generals have ever found it a very difficult Matubtable b subsist great Armies, even in an Enemy's Country, when they o deal besides with a brave and valiant People; how then shall rith gre d Chur lArmies subsist in the Bowels of our own native, ruin'd Country? d Solidars may, indeed, in such Combustions, be ample Matter of Profit if the illains, Robbers, and Free-booters, in the Ravage and plunder we we but great and regular Armies proportionable to fo arduous an divide UnUndertaking, can never be long subsisted and kept together, but

by constant and regular Means and Supplies.

Besides all this, prudent and thinking Men in an Enterprize of this Importance, are apt to weigh and compare the Loss with the Gain; they will consider what they have, and may lose, and put em in the Scale against the Hopes they may indeed conceive, but possibly may never obtain the end of 'em. These once dangerous Enemies are now, and are ever likely to continue so for us in a hapry Tranquility and Security of their Possessions. They enjoy their Liberties and Properties under the shelter and protection of the same Laws with our felves; they enjoy the free Exercise of their own Religion after the Manner, and according to the Wishes and Desires of their own Hearts; they will in time find their Account in all the Advantages of Traffick and Commerce in proportion as we do; what is there to exasperate Men in so desirable a Scituation to abandon themselves, their Religion, Estates, and Families to the Hazards of a doubtful, or an unsuccessful War? Will Men in their Senses sorfeit a present happy Condition of Life with Ease and Plenty, for Visions? Or sacrifice all that is dear and valuable to em, to the empty chimerical Hopes of bettering their Fortune in the Profecution of Impossibilities? But what shall be their Partage if they happen to be beaten, or otherwise miscarry in the Execution of their ill grounded and fantastical Projects? How miserable must their Condition then be? Ought they reasonably expect to find Mercy from a conquering Enemy, exasperated to the last degree by an Attempt as full of Insolence as Ingratitude? Can they entertain the least Hope of being reinstated in the free Exercise of their Religion, and Possession of their Estates, Fortunes and Liberties at ter so audacious and wicked a Rebellion? Shall Ease, and Peace and Plenty be again the Reward for all the Miseries in which they may involve their Native Country and ours? Will not the guilt of the Effusion of that Christian Blood of their Friends, Relations and Fel low-Subjects, which they may be the wretched occasion of spilling call loud on Heaven for Vengeance, and justly bring on 'em the extirpation of so viperous and ingrateful a Brood, who neither un derstood their own Interest or Happiness, nor suffer their indulger Neighbours quietly to enjoy theirs? Yet this has always been the course of human Affairs in the like Cases, the just Punishment of suc inpious and ill grounded Designs, and ever will be, whilst there is Wile and Just Providence that governs the World.

Yet further, suppose 'em in a Condition to confront the Powe of the Government, the Success is still in the Clouds, and the Issue all great Designs is ever dubious and uncertain: By this Gentle man's own Confession, the whole Body of Disserters in England bears no manner of Proportion to the Numbers and Riches of the of the establish'd Church; and I heartily hope, and firmly belief too, that they never can, and I will be bold to add the who Kingdom of Scotland into the Bargain, and yet pretend to make they can never be able together to form a Strength in all a cessary Respects equal to the Powers that will be found to oppose em; yet this is principally to be understood of the disaffected, of which we are but too fure we have amongst our selves but too reat Numbers; for it can never enter into the Heart of any Man conceive, that the whole Body of 'em can never enter into fuch Conspiracy, as in all human probability must miscarry, and consesently expose them and their Interest to certain Destruction; neier can a Design of this Nature be carry'd on like a Conspiracy of few private Persons, in the mystery of Darkness and Iniquity; it ill not break upon us like a Clap of Thunder unforeseen, to orwhelm us at once, and unprovided; it cannot be, but there ust necessarily be some intimations of a Mischief that is to renrse an ancient establish'd Government, the Work of many Ages. an these Men think to find us asleep, or in the Lethargy of a too ral Security? Or do they expect that we shall sit still with our ands in our Bosoms, whilst we suffer 'em tamely to cut our roats? Or be the tame and idle Spectators of the ruin of our ligion and Country? Have we not the same Blood in our Veins, d Courage in our Hearts, that have so often forc'd their Norern Troops back into their Country, by the defeat and slaughter their Brethren, and the effusion of the best Blood in their Nan? Have we not yet remains enough of Old English Vertue to sole our Lives and Fortunes to the last Perils both in Defence of and our Holy Religion? Have we not more than sufficient mbers of honest and gallant Men, animated by the Justice of Cause, to oppose to them damp'd and enseebled with the Guilt Iniquity of theirs? Have our generous Fore-Fathers, and we, houghl'd so hard against the Encroachments of our Princes, (when have prov'd wicked and tyrannical enough to attempt it) to ferve their Freedom, and transmit it down safe to us, and which hope to transfer, together with our Religion, to our Posterity, ely and cowardly to betray and abandon 'em to the Infults and prices of Domestick Rebels, once our Fellow Subjects! Are we in Possession of what Places of Strength there are in the King-1! Have we not at our Head a Queen, Wise, Pious, Just, tchful and Courageous; and can she ever be suppos'd to want est English Hearts and Hands to secure her, own Person and le to the Throne, and maintain the present Establishment against banish'd Popish Pretenders, or any Body of home-spun Rebels of fud atever? Is not the Treasure of the Nation, and the legal Means ereis raising it upon all emergent Occasions in the Hands of those who Power fels themselves of the establish'd Church? May we not have a et in the Hands of such who will never scruple to sacrifice their Isfue es and Fortunes for the true Honour and Interest of their Coun-Gentl ? And have we not yet the remains of an Army of gallant Englas pops, which have been long in possession of beating our Enemies, of tho belief ere ever they meet 'em, and which we can augment in what Protion we please, according as the exigencies of the State may re-re? All these Things duly consider'd, Prejudice, Passion and e who to mai n all n tiality apart, and tell me ye wise ones of wondrous High-Church to oppo

Policy, what apprehensions of real Dangers to our Church are to be reckon'd on from a feeble impotent Enemy, unprovided and unfurnish'd of all those Things, so absolutely necessary to carry on a Design of such Importance, as the renversment of an old establish'd Church and Government; 'tis true, that we are not out of Apprehensions of Dangers from that Country, both to our State and Church, and better founded too than those he wou'd amuse us with; but it is from another fort of People than he intends, even his dear High-Church Brethren, whom his favourite Priests of the Episcopal Ordination have, to the great Surprise of all the World, most miserably infatuated and perverted : Let us but have Security that his High-Church Jacobites in Scotland shall not combine, and unite with the High-Church Jacobites in England, to invite and pour in their Popish Pretender upon us, and we will give him our honest Words that we shall not disturb our selves a Moment with any of his terrible Apprehension of Mischiefs from the Diffenters, for one very good Reason which is worth all his; because we are very certain, that the greatest and honest Part of 'em, of both Na.

tions, with Heart and Hand joyn with us to keep him out.

A Man who writes for the Interest of a Faction, is much better bleas'd with a Topick that gives him a hint for Scandal, than any be other fort of one whatever; and he always lays more stress, and wi racks his Brains to expatiate upon it with much more Pleasure, than in the research and proof of a Truth ; this will appear in him from his po rude and violent Reflections upon those terrible Gentlemen of Forty One, whom he will by no Means allow to have left a Child be pro hind 'em of either Vertue, Honour, or Love for his Country : But, ufin besides what I have already said upon that Subject, I shall further has add, That with the leave of this wife Author, and his hotheaded w Followers, I believe it will appear to all Persons truly Sober and Religious, that it is a very uncharitable Presumption, that the Hein ou and Descendants of those unhappy Fathers who were instrumental in on contriving the disastrous Calamities, that afflicted their Native Coun. try from the Year Forty One, are Heirs too of their Principles, and the same pernicious Defigns; he cou'd not but be sensible that a the time of his publishing his infamous Forgeries, there were great many worthy Gentlemen their Descendants, that had, after a very diftinguishing Manner to their eternal Honour exerted themselves, and nobly hazarded their Lives and Fortunes in the Service of the State and Church, and particularly inbringing about the happy Revolution, which is so grievous a Heart-burning to em. Some Qualities of the temperament of the Body, may per haps be communicated down from the Father to the Son, but the Seeds of Vertue and Vice are in the Mind, and receive their Ele vation, or Depression in a great Measure from the Benefit, or Mil fortune of a good or bad Education; but we never heard that the were inseparable from Blood, or heritable by Law, or that Chill dren succeeded to the Vertues, or Vices of their Fathers, as the do to their Elates ; but if that Rule be true, 'tis as unlucky one for the Author; for I will venture to affirm, That it is no very unchi

Trable Presumption, according to his Divinity, that he was descended from a Father no better a Subject, or no better a Christian than hanfelf; to all which, fince he has led me into it, I shall add this one Remark, that is, that the descendants of those noble Patriots of One continue firmly in the generous Principles of their Fore-bers, and have continued conftantly opposing the Encroachments ucceeding Princes upon the Liberties of their fellow Subjects, have stood up for the Honour and Interest of their Country, h a firmness that shall perpetuate to their Vertues and Memoild, rie the Character of Immortality; whereas I may with fafety affrom that great Numbers, if not most of them, who are descended from those Fathers who had the Management of Affairs from Forty and Three, to Forty Eight, by a wonderful caprice of Fortune, or a our certain fatality in human Affairs, are generally in the Interest of with High-Church and the Pretender, to whom there is due another ters, for of Immortality, which I have already mentioned, and no hoare nel Englishman can grudge 'em, as if they could not attone for the Na. one vicious Extream of their Fore-fathers, without running into the other themselves.

etter it is acknowledg'd that some of the Descendants of those undarry disturbers of their Country's Peace last mention'd, are grown and wile by the dear bought Experience of their Ancestors, and have than exerted themselves with great Vigour and Integrity for the Supom his poor and Desence of that Government their Fore-Fathers in their Fort, and unaccountable statility of a Juncture, which in all human do be probability will never be offer'd again, labour'd hard to renverse. Men But, usually grow wise by Calamities and Missortunes, and he is much arriver happier that does so at another Man's Expense than his own and arther happier that does so at another Man's Expence than his own; and leaded when such a one has always before his Eyes, or in his Memory, the er and term le Examples of the Miscarriages, and Punishments of all rebellier and term le Examples of the Milcarriages, and Punishments of all rebellie Heim on the Enterprizes, he must be either a Fool, or a Madman, who upintal in on the same Principles and Views, will ever hazard his Life, his Countries, and his Family in the like hazardous and es, and characteristical Designs again. However, Men's secret Inclinations to that a Noveties, and a desire of augmenting their Fortunes may lead were a the consideration of their present Interest, and the sear of the same what they already have, will generally deter 'em from Unexerted er a the don't succeed; and which will never sease to sing 'em with in the on't fucceed; and which will never cease to sting 'em with uilt and Remorfe of having broke through all the Obligations ning to ty and Honour, if they do. Tis but a lamentable Purchasea Man of Estates, and transitory Honours, at the Expence of the Repose ranquility of his Mind and Conscience; this past all doubt, has may per but the of Weight with all such as this zealous High-Church Author ieir Ele Heirs and Successors of their Father's pernicious Principles or Mis hat the lefigns, as well as their Estates; yet so false, and illogical hat Chil of Reasoning, is enough to create Suspicions in the Minds of , as the no rent and unprejudic'd Persons, of the Probity and Sincerity y one for an the rest of his Arguments, as well as of the whole Design he ry uncha

terest of a Faction to which he has fold himself, racks his Brain to gloss over notorious Falshoods, and guild 'em with the plausible Appearances of Truths, to make 'em be the more easily swallow'd by fuch as he intends only to delude into the fame Interest; when a Pract. ice so unbecoming the Character of a Christian, a Gentleman, or a good Subject, comes to be discover'd, as is evidently this Author's Case, 'tis impossible for him to maintain a Reputation of Honesty of Integrity long, with such especially, as have Sagacity and Penetra. tion enough to see thro' the Fallacy; and thus, besides the Opinion of an infamous Deluder, which he justly deserves, will in the En do more Prejudice than real Service to the Interest he designs to promote; for tho' most Men may be easily enough deceiv'd, ye they always detest the Deceiver when the Cheat is once discovered because Men generally having a good Opinion of themselves out the secret Influences of Self-Love, they cannot bear the Thoughts having their Judgments and Understanding call'd in question much less impos'd on; which always implies a Degree of Weaknesse Detect, there being no Superiority to which they do not more eafill

fubmit, than to that of Wit and good Sense:

This great Politician should have considered; that a Government rais'd upon to folid a Foundation as ours, and that has flood the Shock of to many boisterous Ages from its Original, is not easily of be changed or subverted; it must be a Power something more that human that can bring it about, and the Violences with which was attack'd and agitated in the last Age, sufficiently demonstrate the innate Force and Vigour of the Contexture; and it is, and en will be so, with all Governments founded upon Principles of Re fon, Equity, and the Consent of a People; whereas all those white take their Beginnings from Injustice, Conquest, or Usurpation, a in as often and as eafily alter'd or overturn'd as any Superiour Pow shall attempt to do it. We are not insensible that there was no An Address or Measures of Crast or Violence wanting, in that Confusi and Frenzy of the State, to reduce the ancient Monarchy of the Kingdom, into the Form of a Democratical Republick; every this feem'd to concur to the Defign. flanding, or common Charity would have confider'd feriously, how wilfully against the Dictates of his Conscience he acted in down right Opposition to 'em all, who brands the whole Body of Whigs, or moderate Low-Churchmen, with the wicked Defign of concerting with the Diffenters, the Ruin of the establish'd Church, tho' they have been ever known and allow'd to exert themselves with the utmost Prudence and Vigour for its just and legal Establish. ments ever fince the Reformation, more than all their High-Church Bigots together; I say in her just and legal Establishments, for 'tis no. toriously evident to all difinterested Persons, that these latter have all along aim'd at, and carried on an Interest distinct and separate from that of the State, by constantly employing all their Art and Cunning, to free her from the secular Jurisdiction, to which as a Mem ber, she is subject by the original Constitution, and to render he altogether independent, or rather, superiour to the civil Power, which I shall prove more at large in its proper Place.

This inordinate Ambition of the High-Churchmen, her genuin and more moderate Sons, have all along, and I hope ever will oppose with the same good Success that they have hitherto had in her Prefervation; yet this fober thinking Son of the Church; or fince I and compell'd to use the odious Term of Distinction of Whig or mode rate Low-Churchman, who will not blindly give into all the criming to Excelles of these intemperate designing Bigots, shall not only be rank by 'em amongst Dissenters whom they cannot treat with common Charity, but with Atheists, Deists, Socinians, Latitudinarians, and it a great Favour if they allow him to be of any Religion at all; the I hope on another Occasion, to prove, that such Monsters herd mud more among themselves than us, and are more nearly related to 'en both in Principle and Practice; for as it is the Business of successions Wretches, by broaching and propagating their impious Doctrines fin to create, and then widen the Rents and Schisms of the Church and consequently to weaken the Strength of the Nation by divi ding and disuniting them; I think it will pretty plainly aeppar, that they bear a nearer Relation and Resemblance to their High-Churd Friends, whose Ends, Doctrines, and Designs, are demonstrable the fame, than to the more moderate Low-Church ones, whose per petual Aims and Endeavours have ever been, and I hope ever wither, to their great Honour and Satisfaction of their Conscience, promote the Peace and Unity, as well as the lasting Security an Happiness of both. In the mean while I shall be bold to maintain that we neither know or allow of in the Nation, any Fam ticks, according to the Rigour of the latter, but High-Churchmet nor true and genuine Sons of the establish'd Church, or faithful an loyal Subjects to the State, but the more moderate and low one We do not expect to be credited upon our own Words; we deli to be tried by our Works, and not the railing and malicious Acces fations of our professed Enemies; and we question not in Despis of all their wicked Artifices to revile and misrepresent us, in Order only to render us odious and suspected, that our Truth and Inno

so cannot in Complaifance to High-Church, get the better of their Igment and Confcience, are treated by 'em with a Scurrility and ternels without Example, ranked amongst those they account most dangerous and mortal Enemies of both, branded with the oachful Titles of Fanaticks, Republicans, Antimonarchifts, and ayers of their Religion; and if they are favour'd only with Character of Presbyterians, 'tis to be esteem'd as a Mark of a surogating and uncommon Civility. Amongst these particularly are ted out our most Venerable and Religious Primate the Lord hbishop of Canterbury, and the Right Reverend and Learned the Bishop of Sarum, who in the present Age, and whilst the ld endures, shall be esteem'd and rever'd, as long as there are Remains of Vertue and Religion in these Nations, for their great mplishments, Learning, Wisdom, and Courage, they have so exerted in the Service of their Country. Whilst on the other those eminent Men of that Order, whom they think more ufly in the Interest of their High-Church, are with the utmost ies and Flourishes of an outstretch'd Eloquence applauded and ed to the Skies, for their Courage and Constancy, as the only is and Defenders of the Church; Men, who in the Billing squte orick of our Author, are neither to be aw'd by Lambeth, nor ld by Sarum. The Expression, indeed, is quaint; but much proper for Cheats and Ruffians, than those venerable Bishops to n they are apply'd. I shall leave to the Judgment of the iml Reader to determine on which fide the Ballance of Merit inand shall only add one Remark on another ingenious and erly Conceit of our Author upon the same Subject; that if Sleeves are not always a certain Sign of true Sons of the b of England, on such as he is pleas'd to be offended with. le they may not happen to run in with all the Frenzys of his Church, yet they may at least be allow'd in his Favourite Bito be the certain Signs of the true Sons of a certain Church. bears an Exceeding Refemblance to one which the Learned been frequently pleas'd to call the Whore of Babylon, because these modest Men, if they can prevail with themselves to do ing that is honest and generous, be pleas'd to separate us a litto the Regards of Religion from other Classes and Distinctions re amongstus; we have the Happiness to have been born and ted in the Bosom and Principles of the same Holy Religion themselves, and as we hope we both understand, and shall tractice 'em better, so we hope likewise to prove that we have er Title to be esteemed the true and genuine Sons of it, than such weening Pretenders; and let 'em assure themselves that they shall find us in as little Disposition to be bully'd and frighten'd out just a Pretension, as to be either rail'd or cajol'd out of our tand Honesty. We own we are not without our Faults as but we neither glory, or shall continue in 'em, when we are not'd we are in the Wrong: They will do well, if they can, ssy the World that they have sewer, or are without any. Let

em object to us nothing but what is true, and there is no Confide. ration of private Interest, or of that of our Party, shall ever prevail with us to defend any thing inconsistent with the strict Rules of Morality and true Religion, especially at so dear a Rate as the base Proftitution of our Honour and Conscience: They shall find us in every thing fair Enemies to deal with, fince they have determin'd to make and account us fuch, tho' I'm forry I can't make them the Compliment, and call them fo; but let 'em not do us the foul In. suffice to father the Faults of other Men, or the Patronage and Par. ticipation of 'em, upon us; every Man will have enough to do to account for his own, and we know of no fort of Men without 'em, but those of High-Church, who, if we may believe them felves, cannot Err, and consequently have none. We know too as well as themselves, from what Fountain they draw their Infall bility; and we by no means grudge 'em the Honour of Resem. blance and Relation to a Church, from whose Errors and aboming ble Superstitions, we bless God, we have long ago reform'd. Much good may it do 'em, with their pious Inclinations to return to the Vomit; but they shall excuse us, if they please, if we shall reful to be influenc'd by their Example, and we promise'em, they shall find much more Difficulty in the Attempt than they imagine; for the shew 'em the Difference of our Charity from theirs, instead of the b debauching over the Nation to their impious Designs of their Faction they shall once more be indebted to us, for preserving em in what is left of their Integrity, as little as they deserve it from us, even against their Will: For with what Contempt or Meanness soever they may think of the Numbers and Capacity of the Moderal and Low-Church-Men, they may depend upon meeting with Vor tue and Courage enough to render their Treachery altogether in practicable upon the Fund of our own Power and Sufficiency, eve without the Help of the honest Dissenters; or if they continue their Obstinacy, probably to return the Mischies they intend the Country and us upon their own Heads, to their Confusion, while they defign'd for ours; at least, if they will take the Advice of fair, but certain Enemy, it may be too hazardous, if not fatal to't to attempt to make the Experiment.

We disown many of the Dissenters Principles, and we are so most of them do so too, scatter'd up and down in their Writings the last Century, as much as our zealous Author, as contrary to the true Maxims of civil, well regulated Governments, and particularly own. We lament their Separation, and pray for their Return, but that is a Blessing only to be expected from the Power of God, whumbly leave it in the Hands of Providence; but if the Dissente either by the natural Tendency of such Principles as we condem or hurry'd by the Violences of an inordinate Ambition, made and tempt heretofore to the Subversion of the Establish'd Church, and force their Discipline in the Place of the Hierarchy, we have as must reason, and do as heartily detest it as much or more than any High Church-Man in the Kingdom; and if the pass Missortunes and Calarties they drew upon themselves, have not sufficiently instructed'en moral Impossibility of the Success of such ill concerted and ish Deligns, and taught 'em more Prudence and Moderation for future: Heaven be prais'd the Nation is not, or ever can be rnish'd of Power to restrain 'em within the limits of due Obece to the supreme Authority; yet we are still to learn, speak burely of Interests of State, how a Commerce and strict Union so confiderable a Body of People, is in the least incompatis with the true Rules of Rational and Christian Policy, when the ck Good of the Nation is in question, as this Author out of his Concern for the Church, infintates. Is it absolutely impossihat because Men differ in their Opinions and Sentiments about ers of Church Discipline, that therefore they may not very hape united to carry on the true Interests of the Commonwealth; t all the Enemies of it, whether Foreign or Domestick? Or e any Thing more common than in the Case of any eminene fal Danger to a Nation, to see Men of the most distant and ng Opinions to unite themselves to present or repulse it? Is e long expensive War we have been our felves ingag'd in, a strable Evidence of this Truth ! Have we not seen Powerful , and Commonwealths, not only of different Opinions, but t Religions combine together in the common Cause of Li-Have not almost all the Protestant Powers in Europe been in aion with the Catholick, at the Expence of so much Blood easure; and was it only to establish Popery, or to augment tend the Power and Dominion of the Church of Rome? Or not folely the Defence and Prefervation of the Liberties of pe against the unjust Encroachments of a Tyrant, whose in-Ambition had been long preparing Chains and Slavery all, that was their only Motive of uniting in their common the different and discording Religions, out of a just Ap-ion of a Danger that equally threatn'd 'em all? Where is e unreasonableness, or the absurdity of that Policy which two great Bodys of Feople professing the same Fundamen-Faith, and only disputing about Things in themselves in-, when such Union not only tends, but may be absoecessary for the publick Good of the Nation, of which they lly Members, and equally lie under the same indispensible ons to defend? There lies no Difficulty to reconcile this to Sense and good Reason, but in the Caprices of such burch-Men, who think themselves wifer than the rest of d, and yet whose Knavery alone has reduc'd the Nations an unhappy Scituation, as makes such a Conjunction absoecessary for their Preservation. n such Men presume to reproach their Fellow Subjects with of a very high and dangerous Complexion, they ought to

fure and careful, that they are not reproachable for the very hings themselves; otherwise, wise and thinking Men will o fancy, that they give but too just Resson to fix on 'em It and Infamy of a vile Hypocrify; this is so evident n it self, as needs not be enforced by the Authority of Holy

Scripture, which peremptorily commands all Men to do as the would be done by, and not to dare to throw a Stone at a Crimnal, if our Conscience accuse us of the same Measure of Guil Is as the Author infinuates, the Dissenters were guilty of preva ricating with the late King James, let them Defend and Excust themselves as well as they can; yet I will take leave to Affin That these very honest and sincere High-Church Men, are the People in the Universe who ought to find Fault, or condemn 's for it; for all the World remembers that they were guilty up certain Occasions of the same Practice, in a much higher Degr themselves. If the Dissenters disappointed the Hopes and Expects on of the Prince, the Prince had shown 'em ( if I may be permin to speak so in an ill Case ) a very good Example; Dissimulation always a Fault, yet we very well know from the Authority be of facred and profane History, that there may be certain Exigent and Scituations of Life, which may make it sometimes absolut necessary; and so far in some Degree just, at least excusable. the World, as well as the Diffenters knew, that King James not show 'em those Marks of his Favour and Indulgence that did, out of any love he had for them or their Religion; but knew 'em to be a very considerable Body of his People, wh they cou'd be any way taken off, or lull'd into Security, wou'd w derfully contribute to the facilitating his Delign of oppressing enflaving the rest of the Nation by the Establishment of an Arb ry Power, with the Notion of which his High-Church Priests infatuated him; it was therefore no mean Policy at that Jund if he cou'd not engage 'em as his real Friend, to prevent 'em appearing publickly his Enemies. They on the other Hand well understood that the Toleration he granted 'em, was not than a plausible Bait to cajole and draw 'em in, and were com ed in appearance for their Repose and Interest, to be the Dup a Reign, which they knew was impossible shou'd last long: as well faw into the Defign he had form'd to enflave the Nat and to introduce his abominable Superstition, from which could only hope for a miserable Consolation of being the last your'd, after having render'd themselves odious and contempt by contributing to the Oppression of their Fellow Subjects; in view, nothing but sugar Words, and golden Promises on the of the Court, and on the Side of the Diffenters abundance of lity and Allegiance: Thus, for a while, was the State Fard ryed on, till our great Deliverer arriv'd to put an end to the of the one, and the fandy Hopes of the other: We have told. That fallere fallentem non est Fraus; here it was in this litical Mummery, practic'd in a noble Instance on both Sides those who are most concern'd defend it in the best Mannet can: But the Part that High-Church Perfidy and Duplicity by every Circumstance, exceeded; there are many Thousands yet alive who well remember what fulfom flattering Paneg what nauseous hypocritical Addresses were fent up by'em from Corners of the Kingdoms; what repeated Affurances of and delity and Allegiance, what specious reiterated Promises of spendathe last Drop of their Blood, and Penny of their Fortunes in Service, and Support of so Good, so Just, so Gracious, so Reous and Indulgent a Monarch, established upon the Throne of Ancestors, by a Divine, as well as Hereditary Right; and to whose Commands they had taught their Fellow Subject to pay a d and unconditional Passive Obedience, under the Pain of Eter-Damnation; risum tenestis? For how these venerable Hypoes served him in the end, shall be more at large recounted in the uel.

his can never be reproach'd to the Whigs, as their Practice; as they faw their Ruin come pouring in upon 'em, wifely emd the Means that God and Nature, and the Laws had put in-eir Hands for the Defence of their Lives and Liberties; they no Obligation upon'em from the Word of God, or Nature, ason, to sit down contentedly, and like Slaves suffer their Religion to be extirpated, to introduce the most abominable of sperititions; or their precious Civil Liberties, which they had 'd from immemorial Prescription, to be trampl'd underfoot, ntirely subjected to the Will and Arbitrement of a Weak and uded Prince, solely actuated by the furious Influence of Popish igh-Church Priests; who by deluding him into an Opinion of fect of their Jure Divino, and Passive Obedience Doctrines, I'd with him to make the first Steps to that Arbitrary Power, inevitably led him into the Misfortunes, that in a little Time overwhelm'd him. All the Wife and Honest Heads in the were then busie to concert the properest Methods to save lyes, and Country, from the fatal Mischiefs such Traytors were the Point of involving 'em in; this to their immortal Hohey happily effected, by the Bleffing of God, under the Afpif our Glorious King William, in the accomplishment of a erful Revolution, which, as it has re-establish'd these Nations the Foot of their original Constitution in a full and free Posand Enjoyment of their Religion and Liberties in the last shall be the Wonder, as well as Imitation, of all free People unjustly attempted to be oppress'd in all succeeding Generatimust be allow'd that to carry on so noble and arduous an Enze, great numbers of all forts of Men of Diffinction and Qualiowever different in their Opinions, and many of em of the first and Consideration generously ingaged in it at the Hazard of Lives and Fortunes; but whether some of 'em upon cooler ction began to thing they had acted against the Principles they lways profess'd; or were touch'd with remorfe for having car-Things, as they thought too far, and with too much violence at a King they had plac'd above the Reach and Power of the ; or others, who did not think they found their Account, were not fufficiently or fuddenly enough rewarded for their urrence and Share they had contributed to effect it; for which ele Reasons and Considerations, or for all of 'em, I shall not pretend to determine; but this we are certain of, that many of the High Church Principles, and those of the first Degree and Quality in the State and Church, recanted early, and show'd their Sorrow in their future Conduct for its Success; who afterwards not only labour'd all they cou'd to retard the Progress and Establish. ment of it, but during the whole Course of that Glorious Reign clog'd it with such Difficulties, as nothing but the Wisdom, Patience and Courage of that great Prince were capable of furmounting; so variable and unsteady are the Minds of Men that are not actuated by Principles of true Honour and Conscience; but the Whigh or moderate Church-Men have ever acted consonantly to them. selves and Principles, and therefore upon the same Motives and Reasons they first engag'd in it, have ever since, with a Firmnel and Constancy, which can never be sufficiently commended or ad mir'd, inviolably adher'd to the Preservation and Maintenance of it; how long they shall be able to do so, amidst the many an strong Efforts of the contrary Faction to unravel it, who with the Lips indeed continue feemingly to honour and approve, but wit their Heaats we are but too fure are very far from it, is only in the Hands of Providence.

Another great Reason this angry Politician produces of his Zell for the Church, and Spleen to the Diffenters who threaten it, h just as much Truth and Solidity in it as all the rest; and that is, I Apprehension lest they should some time or other, the Lord know when or how, be upon an equal Foot in every respect with t establish'd Church; for then in time they may come to be establish'd Church, and we the Dissenters from it, and subject to Penalties of the Laws as fuch, which at first were design'd again them. How are we oblig'd to this Man's Fears for so notable Discovery? Witty and Fanciful Men, when they are tormented an unruly Fire which they mistake for Zeal, are apt frequently create Fantoms of the Brain for themselves to fight with; and I am not mistaken, this is one of that nature; otherwise it wo have been but his Duty or Business to have let the World into important a Secret, which so much concerns the Happiness of Country, who, or what Power it was that ever dreamt of, or capable of effecting such a Design as placing the Dissenters int same Equality with the establish'd Church. As to a Ministry of fort, it is evident to any Man who is not out of his Senfes, the they are not able to introduce fuch a Change, tho' we have a pre fresh Instance before us, how far a corrupt One can proceed in figns fatal to their Country; for it is one thing to conceive, another to execute: And I think it is a thousand Times more furd to believe, that the Supreme Power of the Nation which can do it, can ever be suppos'd to be in a general Conspiration agi themselves and true Interest of their Country; tho' we have to late been more than sufficiently made sensible of the Extent Power of Corruption. That Englishman, I mean of the establishman Religion, who ever makes a ftep towards it, is a Knave and a tor; but that Englishman, who upon the Account only of the tional Fears of a High Church Visionary, endeavours to oppress way use ill his fellow Subjects, who have an equal Benefit and tection of the Laws with himself, whilst they live peaceably and formably to 'em, is a Knave of another fort, and a Persecutor; thas it is a Character we utterly disown and abhor ourselves, do not grudge the Glory of it to the zealous Partilans of High rch, tho' I am satisfy'd we never shall want both the Will and er to prevent the Effects of it. For what solid Reason efore are the Diffenters to be continually treated by 'em with utmost Severity of ill Language and worse Manners? The thing ally answers its self, even because they are a very considerable y both for their Numbers and Riches, who are an invincible ier and Obstacle to High Church Designs; and therefore in Divinity they are to be remov'd by Oppression, or render'd is and useless by Detraction, for the terrible Projects against eace and Security of the establish'd Church they never dreamt his is indeed a very notable Reason, and as commendable a of inforcing it, and both extreamly worthy and becoming the ious Author. Whatever this wife Gentleman, and his dear ren and Followers, may think of themselves, it will be etertrue, that the Strength of every Nation consists in the Numad Unity of its People, as much or more than in its Riches; and er by any Means or Artifices, endeavours to divide 'em, enirs to weaken 'em, and can pretend to do that in no other han to make 'em a more easse Prey to their Enemies; the Hof which Practice we freely leave to the Incendiaries of the hurch Faction, who have sufficiently convinc'd the World constant Inclinations to another fort of Government than at present establish'd amongst us.

palt all Question, that it is within the Compass of human m to preserve the Peace and Unity too of a Nation, tho' the may be of very different Sentiments in respect of Religion, ut admitting any Sect or Sort of Diffenters into an Equality hose of the establish'd one, or without admitting 'em into a pation of such Posts and Employments as may impower 'em to chief. We need not travel far for a remarkable Instance of uth: Every Body knows that in the Seven United Provinces f'em confist almost of all Papists, besides great Numbers of pers'd thro' the rest, not to mention the vast Multitude of and all other Religions under the Sun; who as they all the Benefit and Protection of the Laws, all of 'em equally and ut murmur, contribute in Proportion to the Exigencies and rt of the Government; yet there is not a Man of 'em admitted ny Employment in the State, and but very few of the Ro-Catholicks intrusted with any eminent Command in their Na-Troops; yet from the famous Union at Utrecht to this Day, ave not been troubled with any Domestick Commotions that ndanger'd their State, but what were occasion'd by the Dilof their own Priests of the Remonstrant and Antiremonstrant tion; which by their great Wisdom, and a rigorous Execution Laws, they foon quieted. A Staff and a Pair of Shoes is an D 3 admirable admirable Cure for the spiritual Distempers of the Brain: A fair Example! And which we hope in good time may prove of good Use and Imitation for some of their Neighbours. I am very sensible how much I shall be thank'd by our venerable and charitable High Churd Priests, for producing an Instance of a People whom they have bee accustomed, of late especially, every Hour of the Day to send to the Devil. But as I equally despise their Malice and their Friendship I will be bold to maintain without suspicion of Flattery, that the great and noble People have given Instances of a Wisdom, a Courage, a Generosity, of a Justice, Fidelity and Love to their Country that equals the sublimest Vertue of the most renowned Common wealths that ever were under the Sun.

It were heartily to be wish'd that our gracious Queen were tirely in the Possession of the united Hearts of all her Subjects, it is most certain that if she were she wou'd be, notwithstanding the Disproportion of Dominions, at the Head of the most formidal Power in Europe; nor is it impossible, however Men may differ their Speculations, were it not for the restless Endeavours of wretched fort of Men amongst us, who notwithstanding all the specious Pretences, are more her Enemies than any fort of Dissente inasmuch they are visibly labouring to introduce and establish Out-law, whilst the others unite their Interest with ours by utmost Efforts of a joint Power to defeat em, and keep him of If the great and important Obligations they have to the Goods and Indulgence of her Majesty were not of Force, both to gain the Affection, and keep 'em within the Compass of their Duty and 0 dience; yet the Calamities and Persecutions they know they must unavoidably expos'd to under the Administration of a Prince of Religion that knows no Mercy, undoubtedly will. What Rea then is there for Englishmen, who demean themselves as Peaces and as like Loyal and Duriful Subjects as the rest, should lose Benefit and Privileges of the Birth-Right of Englishmen, only cause they cannot bring themselves to think and believe as H Church commands, and wou'd have 'em? Let 'em themselves g the World Proofs of their own Probity and good Intentions, bet they erect themselves into the Authority of being Examples to of Men: The Laws we are govern'd by, are of general Influence to the Distribution of Justice, which is one of the principal B of entring into Civil Societies, and extend their Benefit and tection to all Degrees, and forts of Men, who live within their Re and Cognizance, till they forfeit their Claim and Pretenfions to by Misdemeanour; and as it is absolutely impossible in great a municies, that all Men should be of one Mind in all Things, it is just that the greatest Part of the People of the established Religi who make the most formidable Part of the Body Politick, should only in all respects have the Preheminence of any other Sect or of Men who differ from it, but also preferably to all others by trusted and employ'd in the Management of all Posts and Station Trust and Honour for the publick Good; yet all this neither nor ought by any Means to exclude others from those Privileges

uments of the common Liberty, which the Difference from the ish'd Church by the Laws leaves 'em capable of, without ing the Peace of the Commonwealth; for whoever of any degree is guilty of that, either throws himfelf out of the Pron of those Laws, or makes himself liable to the Penalties of ithout distinction: Whenever this appears to be the Case of iffenters, I have already faid that we have the Authority of the in our Hands, and the Power of putting 'em in Execution ft'em; and if we do not exert it for our own Security and ice, the Fault is ours and not theirs : But it is something hard too much Precaution of what may possibly never happen, to te and inflict Punishments by an unseasonable Severity upon llow Subjects, before they commit the Crimes that may deem, because they may happen to be under the unjust Suspicifuch as are their professed Enemies. We have hitherto ever he Revolution found 'em firmly adhere to it, and contented he peaceable Enjoyment of the Bleflings of it in the free Exof their own Way of Worship, and it is not I think to be ed but that they will continue so to the End of Time; and I repeat, that it is difficult to conceive upon the bare Sugof a High Church Enthusiast, that so considerable a Body thinking Men, will ever run the Hazard of Sacrificing their he precarious Profecution of an Enterprize against the State. rch, in which their Fore-fathers miscarry'd; or by fresh atof the like kind, renew the Guilt and Infamy of a Crime has been with so much Mercy and Indulgence forgiven 'em; y know there are those implacable Spirits amongst us, who little Charity as Generosity, take so much wicked Pains, that never be forgotten.

part of the Character he is pleas'd to give to those reverend arned Prelates whom he distinguishes for standing up for the It of the establish'd Church, in contradistinction to those he scandalously represents as the Betrayers of it; that they en who, tho' the Court be the Fountain of Preferment, dare and it in Defence of the Church, and who wou'd not in aisance to any Ministers, leave it the only Protestant Commuot secur'd by Law. This indeed were the Character of truly eous and religious Prelates, if it were true; I am very far medling with, or disputing the Merit of his favourite Bishops; could wish he had got the better a little of his Passion or Malice nce, and treated those other who differ'd from 'emin Opinion, with good Manners and Respect which are undoubtedly due to their acters and Station, at least from a Man who wou'd be thought we so tender and conscientious a Regard for Religion. I think ould much better have become him both as a Gentleman, and a of the Church, to have suppos'd those venerable Fathers of it to acted purely upon Principles of Reason, Honour and Consci-, than so leudly to infult 'em, tho' impotently, under the odious burs of Treachery and Proflitution. But I maintain, that the polition he advances is notoriously falle, and that there is ne er a Protestant Communion in Europe that is fenc'd in and secur'd by so many wholfom and vigorous Laws, as the establish'd Church of England; and happy and flourishing would she always continue in her original Purity and Safety, by the Number and Force of 'em, they who pretend with as much Arrogance as Falsehood to be he true and genuine Sons, did not wickedly disturb her Peace and Tran quility, as well as proflitute her Honour, by forcing such Doctrine upon her, and purting her upon Practices of Violence and Oppression of their Fellow-Subjects, more fuitable to the Spirit of their de bauch'd corrupted Friend, the Church of Rome, than the Innocem and Purity of the most excellent Church in the Universe; and any Difgrace or Misfortune is to happen to her, (which good He ven avert) I will venture to foretell that it shall be more owing the Non-execution of those excellent Laws she already has, than the want of any she has not; and that if she continues as secure a undisturb'd from the furious Sallies and Violences of her own m tended Sons of the High Distinction, as from any Attempts of the fenters, the shall infallibly, by the Grace of God, remain as the m Pure and Innocent, so the most Flourishing and Happy in World, till fhe be refin'd into Triumphant in the next. But if her further Security here, it should appear necessary to multi Laws, let us have the Modesty to suppose the Legislature to be mi more competent Judges of that Matter, than any private Man; when they shall see it either expedient or necessary, they doubtless in their great Wisdom, and regard for so dear and in luable a Treasure as their holy Religion, provide and enact the without the faucy and presumptuous Advice of any private h Church-man, whether Priest or other, before it is ask'd.

If the Diffenters, and particularly the Presbyterians, who are most numerous of 'em, have the unhappiness of differing from establish'd Church, and that Separation from her involve 'em in Guilt of Schism, let 'em excuse and defend themselves as well they can: I know of but little Advantage the Churchmen h gain'd over 'em hitherto in the Dispute ; yet whilst they disturbe the publick Peace of the Community, they are more accountable God than Man for it, who is the only equitable Judge of the Int tions of Men's Hearts: But till they do that, we are yet to feek they should be treated by their Fellow-Subjects and Brethren, fessing the same common Faith, with that Scurrility and Avenue which we are peremptorily, by the divine Precepts of Christian forbid to Practice to the most Foreign and Barbarous, or charg'd criminal Defigns against the Church, which the worst of their mies have never been able to prove, otherwise than by the irra nal and ill-grounded Surmises from what is past. When it shall pear, that they in good earnest attempt it, I hope it is not to doubted but that the common Danger will unite all those who her true Sons, and whom at present unnatural Jealousies and fund Animolities divide, for her Support and Security; but as at pres they enjoy the free Exercise of their Religion by a perpetual La which was before but precarious, upon the Foot of the Revolution

hink it may reasonably be concluded, that they will sit down ented with it, and not attempt again to disturb a Government, whose Indulgence they enjoy all the Benefits and Advantages reemen and Englishmen, consistent with their State of Separanecessary to maintain 'em in a Condition of Life in Ease and ity for ever; their peaceable Deportment and Conformity to Bovernment, in a regular Obedience and Fidelity equal to that eir Fellow-Subjects, ever fince the Revolution, in bringing tof which they had so considerable a Share, is not only a suft Evidence of this Truth, but a sufficient Guaranty of their viour for the future; and if it be, we would be glad to be m'd from our very wife and zealous Author, or any of his wers, by what Religion or Policy it is unlawful for the mo-Low. Churchmen, (who as to the Revolution are of the same pents with 'em, and are not asham'd to own it) to endeato engage and unite 'em to us, in order to oppose all the les of our State or Church, whether foreign or domestick, re by much the most dangerous ones; and I constantly mainthat the Malice and Aversion of High-Church do not rage oully against the Dissenters, as Dissenters only, but because e a confiderable Body, that with us eternally stand in the their Design of introducing their Pretender.

know, as well as they, that the Peace and Happinels of lingdoms, both in Respect of the State and Church, can be asting Continuance, but upon the Foot of the Revolution, hich they have happily been re-establish'd; and therefore t have stronger and more forcible Reasons than those have n offer'd by our zealous High-Church Politicians, before we with 'em, and deprive our selves of the Strength and Asof so considerable a Body of our Brethren, and Fellows, whose Interest it is, equally with our own, mutually to e our selves under the present Establishment, in which ave can both be fafe; but whenever it shall appear, that orm any real Defign against the Peace and Interest of the b'd Church, we promise heartily to forget our present un-Distinctions for our common Safety, and unite our selves to Church of England Men under any Denomination, to derender it ineffectual; or if our Brethren, who are pleas'd inguish themselves from us, shall refuse the Conjunction flistance we offer, we question not but to be able upon our fund to keep 'em within the Measures of their Duty without I cou'd heartily wish, that upon another Occasion, which eedily offer, we may find the Gentlemen and Partifans of Church as sincere and forward to give us their Assistance athe common Enemy of us all, from whom with Ten Thouimes greater Reason there is much more Danger, nay more n and unavoidable Ruin to be apprehended, than from the ters; for we freely acknowledge, that the Church in the

t Juncture of Affairs is in greater Danger than ever it has nce the Time of King James; but it is from another Quarter

as I hope in the Sequel of this Discourse to demonstrate; and that the principal End of the Contrivers in blackening the Diffenter and by that means rendring them odious and suspected, is only with the greater Facility to accomplish their wicked and traiterou Defign; this being their furest way to weaken, by depriving us so great a Number of our Friends and Brethren, whose Interest they know it is, as well as our own, eternally to oppose them these then are the known Artifices of the profess'd High-Chun Enemies of the Government, to effect its Subversion; first by la ing the Grounds of their Fears upon the Diffenters, as the me dangerous Enemies of the Church, and then dreffing 'em up fuch frightful Colours, as if true, would indeed not only prove the most mortal Enemies, but the most wicked and ingrated the ever had, or can have; but in this, to their great Mortification they have found themselves deceiv'd; yet, had their Success again 'em answer'd their Expectations, their Work of Wickedness would have been but half perform'd; there was another invincible 0 stacle in their Way, which if not remov'd, all the fantastick brick they had erected upon a fandy Foundation must have fall to the Ground; that is, the Glorious Ministry, in whose Had the Administration of Affairs was at the time of the publishing infamous Libel, which is the fecond Topick the Author makes of, and which I shall in the next Place consider; and I think laudable Means, when feriously reflected on, employ'd to carry so good a Work, cannot choose but make Impressions on the Mi of honest considering Men, extreamly to the Glory and Adv tage of the Characters and good Intentions of the Conspirators; the one Hand groundless Surmises and irrational Fears impuded advanc'd without Proof, or indeed Probability; on the other infamous Arts of Scandal and Detraction in the utmost Extent lewd Licentiousness.

Ministers are the political Eyes and Ears of the Prince; and in the Natural Body those Organs, when they are either im feetly form'd, or by Accident vitiated, they can no longer rig perform the Office of their Institution, but must necessarily con their Objects to the Understanding, either but imperfectly or ciously, from whence it unavoidably forms Ideas and Concept either false or defective according to the Representation; for the can be nothing in the Understanding which is not first in the fes; so when Ministers of State whom the Prince employs in most important Affairs of his Administration, either thro' was Capacity which is Imperfection, or of Fidelity which is Corrupt it is next to impossible that they shou'd represent to him Thing they truly are; nay, that they shou'd not represent 'em as they not; fince such will always act with a Design either to impose or betray him, to secure their own Establishment, because regarding their own private Interest more than the publick of they carry on an Interest always distinct from that either of Prince or their Country. a come to the Knowledge of the Truth 'till they are past Reundone by their Ignorance or Treachery; and tho' fuch ers well know that they stand but in slippery Places, and discover'd may answer with their Heads and Honours for Mismanagement, yet the Sweets of Profit, especially when led with Pomp and Magnificence, are so alluring, and the ns of Power and Ambition so bewitching, that they for the art shut their Eyes to all Considerations of Danger; nor are amples of lo many great and unfortunate Men, as have fallen fice before 'em either to the Indignation of an abus'd Prince. Fury of an inraged People, of any Force to deter 'em from dangerous Practices, or to teach 'em to shun those Rocks ve been so fatal to so many of their Predecessors. There is no ing that more evidently demonstrates the Wisdom and of the Prince, than the Choice of the Persons he employs in ministration of publick Affairs; if he be wife and just himd studies only the general Good of the People, he will not eek out such as are of the same Principles and Tendency; in such a Choice the Royal Favour is a Mark and Reward ted Merit, his Honour and Interest, and the Happiness of on, with which he is intrusted, are sure to be fafe, lasting, ious; neither can there be any Commendation or Reward e Merit of an able faithful Minister. Most Men are cof the first and highest Stations of Honour, Profit and Trust Country, but very few Men are equal to 'em; and as Amnever very clear fighted, they for the most part court their truction. There can be nothing more ridiculous than for tho is not really wife, to expect to be thought fo, or long fuch undiscover'd, in the difficult Management of Affairs of specially if his Life and Honour may be the Penalty of his stion; such a Man may indeed make a passable Figure in his sphere; but out of it his Motions are all excentrick, they and become him but awkwardly; but in the State he is baeton, who seldom fails to set it in a Flame, and tumfelf headlong from the Precipice, the Laughter, or Contempt eople.

are more great and eminent Qualities necessary to finish racter of a compleat Minister of State, than are commonly bund amongst Men; and even in the best and most accompanies there must be Allowances made for the Frailties inseparable uman Nature, otherwise 'tis a Chimera not to be found in ature of Things; there is no finite Being can be comperfect: And when a great Man discharges the Trust he our'd with, with all the Application and Exactitude that the End of his Institution, he does all that is requir'd by his Prince or the Nation. A Man may be wise, a Man may he may be vertuous, brave and honest, and yet have many al Failings and Impersections, which are the inseparable Appess of Humanity, or there is no such Thing as wise, as just, though the property of the control of the Grave: I should the Grave: I should be glad to be shown the Man of any Party, who is without Faul of this Nature, and great ones too, that I might fall down att worship him; but as such an Idea is only a Phantom of the Brain or a pharifaical Affectation of a Perfection, which is not to be found but in such Hypocrites as pretend to more Grace and Purity than the rest of their Neighbours, I conceive I am in no great Danger of often falling into the Sin of Idolatry on that Article. Man's Vertues greatly over-balance his Vices; if he makes the Use he can of his Reason to correct and restrain the impetud of his Appetites, and if he calls Religion in to his Succour as best Guide and Rule of the Actions of Life in relation to his or domestick Oeconomy, or the publick Good of the Commonweal he shall find his Account in the Endeavours of discharging Duty before God and Man; there shall no more be requir'd in him than what is confistent with the Condition of Humanity managed, the Frailties of which if an insuperable Necessity can justify, will at least excuse; nor shall such a one fail of the Hou or Reward of his honest Industry, and a Vertue arriv'd to as a Degree of Perfection, as it is capable of arriving at in World. When Wisdom, Justice and Integrity, within these grees and Limitations of Perfection are to be found in a Man, a one has a solid Foundation for all other great Qualities neces to the Composition of a Minister to center on, and finish the racter. There is necessary to carry a Man thro' the Drudgen Business a happy vigorous Contexture and Temperament of Co tution, which are naturally productive of Health and Stren without which all Men must infallibly fink under the Bur of perpetual Application; a Force of Mind, equal to the Toil Slavery, if I may so speak, of constant serious Thinking; an versal Genius bold and comprehensive, that by the Strengt its own Sufficiency, as it were with one View, can look bad past Events, and foresee the future, as far I mean as what is finite may pretend to; an Understanding firm and strong, not fily to be impos'd on, or deceiv'd by false Ideas, or sway'd by possessions; a Judgment sound and vigorous, and form'd to I and Probity, without the Teint of rough, inflexible or opinia a Wit lively but well temper'd, easy and free without the Sout of the Pedant, or Lewdness of the Libertine; gay but not lo open and innocent as the Charms of a modest vertuous Virgin, wanton or lewd as an abandon'd Prostitute; a Penetration and piercing as the Light to fearch and discover the dark myster Subtilties of crafty and defigning Knaves; a commode and Nature; Affability, the usual Polish of the Court; Address, to the jarring Minds and Sentiments of Men into the one hone harmonious End of the publick Good; Dispatch, the Life of nels: And to fum up all in one Word, that Rectitude and Pro of Mind we call Vertue, which is every Man's Defire and Men's Partage, without which all political Vertues are dead ineffectual, as all religious ones without Humility, which is ultimate Perfection and Complement of all other Excellent

How far a Change of re, especially if made without any manifest Necessity, of ly the Good of the Nation is the infallible Rule, may Person of the Prince, I shall leave to others to deter-pecially if any pernicious Consequences attend it. But ill be bold to maintain, that if through Incapacity or y the Nation is made to fuffer by 'em in their Honour, or Commerce, such Ministers deserve to pay the Penalty Male-Administration with their Heads and Fortunes, ; and however the Laws may be indulgent to the Perhe Prince who employs 'em, the Reasons and the Nef State justly demand the Punishment of the Ministers. d not travel further than our own Histories to be furith Instances of the Gavestons, the Spencers, the Tre-Empson, Dudley, Cromwell, Laud, Strafford, and many who justly deserved and suffer'd the utmost Severity of the t their pernicious and fatal Advice to their respective

Princes; and if the Examples of those unfortunate great Men a not of sufficient Weight to deter others from the same unwa rantable and destructive Practices, they will at least want the Co solation, if it be any, of not being fore-warn'd of the like en Destiny. I am very far from exposing the personal Failings those whom her Majesty has been pleased to employ in the pres Administration, they are to account for 'em somewhere else; may be eminent for their Birth, their Quality and Capacities, a to comprehend all in one Word, they may be Englishmen, wh in my Opinion imports all that is necessary to carry on the Interest of their Country, and the Respect and Fidelity due the Honour and Majesty of their Queen; yet I hope it may permitted to an honest Man who loves em both, I mean Country and his Queen, to maintain and defend the Merit Characters of those great and excellent Men they have succeed from the impudent Calumnies and Slanders, which any info mercenary Scribler of the Faction (who thinks he has Wit end to attempt, and ill Manners enough to abuse, and faucily aff his Superiours) thinks fit to throw upon 'em. As the Defig this Essay and the Author are utterly unknown to em, and fibly the latter may ever continue to be fo, I by no means flan fear of the Reproach of being accounted Venal, if I throw poor Mite into the Treasury. I owe my Endeavours what they may be esteem'd to my Country, I owe 'em to the M of those incomparable Men who so nobly serv'd it in the difficult Times, whilst they had the Power to do so; and I em to my own Conscience and Honesty, whose Interests I ever prefer to all other Considerations in this World. I may deed fail in the Performance, the Subject may be too great for but the Defect shall not be in my Will; and I shall at least the fecret Satisfaction of having endeavour'd to discharge my ty, both as an honest Gentleman and an honest Englishman, heartily loves his Country; and who, as he has frequently zarded his Life in its Service, will ever make it his Glory crifice it in so glorious a Cause, as the Defence and Preserve of her Ancient Liberty, and all those who have so generously ferv'd it hitherto.

There is no Vertue or Innocence that can be altogether from the Venom of malicious Tongues; the more eminent and vated they are above the common Level, the more they become Object of the Vicious and the Malevolent; for it is natural to to wish all Men like themselves, and since they cannot become 'em by an Imitation of their Vertue, endeavour to debase 'em a Resemblance and Participation of their own Vices, by the mous Arts of Scandal and Detraction; yet there is nothing certain than that there is a certain genuine native Brightness alted Merit, such secret and irressibile Charms in Truth and affected Vertue, as compel'em in their Hearts to admire what have the Wickedness invidiously to Asperse: 'Tis just the Condo of the Damn'd, who are forc'd to adore the Being they tremb

No Man, 'tis true, desires to be thought sed; hence so many Hypocrites in Religion, and Cheats in civil rs; for fince they are incapable of arriving at any Degree of an plary Perfection, they are at least fond of the Appearances of it, by a ridiculous Affectation of what they knew they can never reoffess, add the Guilt of a detestable Hypocrify to the natural Coron of their Inclinations. I know not whether ever there was re notable Instance of these Truths than the unaccountable Rage is trantick Author against the Merits of those excellent Men, se Defence I have undertaken; he gives the Reins to a Passion hich one can only give the Name of Fury, with a Rudeness ecoming a Gentleman, or Man of Learning, that there is no even in the Interest of his own faction, who does not as fee, as he must be necessarily scandaliz'd at it; with what a Fiercenets does he ferment and evaporate his Frenzy against e Lord Treasurer, as the first Mover and Contriver of all the ary Mischeifs and Dangers which threaten'd no less than Ruin State and Church? Who but a mercenary Fool, or Knave, or an, abandon'd both of Honour and Conscience, cou'd adthat Sodomy, Adultery, Pox or Profancis, were Qualities It the Whigs to make Men Saints, Prophets, Martyrs and Apo-Yet these are the distinguishing Characteristicks he ascribes to Joble Peers, Immortal Patriots, and Lovers of their Country, rds Somers, Sunderland, Wharton and Hallifax; this is to Flight of a leud and profligate Wit, in a vile mercenary Slave Interest of a Faction, as must create an Abhorrence in all soaking Men, as well as a Suspicion of whatever he advances, th never to much Appearance of Truth; I am not for exany Men's Faults when they are real, yet I am not brutally oling 'em, or vilely inventing new ones where they are not, ive 'em to the Determination of the only equitable Judge by they are cognizable; but I pretend to justify the Merits of eat Men, whose Reputation he has endeavour'd to blast and y Calumnies as groundless as they are wicked and ungenerous. ot thus after his foul Example we shall treat those eminent s for whom he expresses so extraordinary a Veneration, and to the Skies for their great and excellent Services they have their Country; for he wou'd have exceedingly oblig'd the d if he had been a little more particular upon so important and ite an Article, and pointed out those wondrous Performances Heroes; for we are at present a little in the dark where to enfor 'em, but Heaven be prais'd we have good Plenty of glorines of ours, which in due Place we shall take a Pride to rethe World of, with as much Justice as Truth; yet instead of detestable Vices he with so little Manners and so profligate a tiousness bestows upon ours; we have Vertues enough which vill not refuse or disallow to be in an eminent Degree in theirs; rankly acknowledge the fincere Piety and unaffected Devotion eir Duke of B____m, we never envy'd him the great Sobri-Temperance, Good Nature and Moderation of their Earl of thining Ornaments of our own.

I shall begin with a Noble Peer, whose Vertues and effect great Services have not been able to skreen him from the Malice this intemperate Railer, and of others of his Principles and Faction I mean the Right Honourable the late Lord Treasurer Godolphia and as the publick Testimony of a whole House of Commons is infinite more Weight to recommend the Integrity and Abilities of great Minister in the most considerable Imployment of Profit, H nour and Trust in the Kingdom, than the Opinion and Sentime of any private Person whatsoever, I shall on his Behalf produced of the most glorious and authentick ones that ever was or can offer'd in Justification of a great Officer, who perfectly underst and faithfully discharg'd the Duty of it; I mean the Testimon the House of Commons in their Address to her Majesty, in the ! 1702, when one Robert Harley Esq; was Speaker, which, if I mill not, at this Time of Day is a Circumstance may pretend to men little more than ordinary Observation. The whole Address is w the Subject of the Mismanagement of the Treasury, and Misman cation of great Sums of the publick Money to other Uses, the was in the Hands of certain Persons in the preceeding glor Reign, wherein after the Enumeration of the many Defaults Abuses in the Treasury, and the Means and Persons by whom were introduc'd, they proceed to the just Acknowledgment Commendation of the Management of the publick Money, un the Administration of this great Man, in the Words which I fi fully transcribe, as much as it is to my Purpose, as any Man will give himself the Trouble to inform himself from the Original may be fully convinc'd.

This evil Practice, amongst others, of striking Talleys with terest, before the Money was paid in, was also attended with a ther great Inconvenience to the publick, that whenever the Nathad Occasion for ready Money to answer the present Necessian the Kingdom, many Persons who advanc'd their Money upon to knowing they should have the same Advantages by Delay as prompt Payment, wou'd not bring in their Money into the Exquer, for several Months after the Talleys were struck, when the Government was forc'd in the mean Time to pay excessive Refor Stores and Provisions for the Army and Navy, in regard Merchants and Tradesmen cou'd have no ready Money for the

nd by these and other undue Means, a very great Part of all ublick Aids were squander'd away in extravagant Interest. Premiums, and in excessive Rates for Stores and Provisions, has been one of the great Causes that has brought so heavy

here we cannot in Justice omit to acknowledge the present Management of the Treasury, whereby for the Honour of your nment, and the Advantage of the whole Nation, no unue-Talleys with Interest are permitted to be struck, nor more y at any Time borrow'd than the Necessities of the Nation do and Care is taken for supporting the Credit of the Course Navy, victualling, and other publick Offices, that all Stores ovisions are in a good Measure provided with as great Advanthe Publick, as if the same were purchas'd with ready Mohich Frugality and good Management, will be found to be the most effectual Means to make your Majesties Governfy at Home, and to carry on a vigorous War against the Enemy abroad.

I think is as ample and honourable a Testimony of a Man's and Capacity, as a wife and honest one can defire, or so au-

Assembly as a House of Commons cou'd bestow, and is an undeniable Evidence of his perfect Knowledge of the of the Treasury in penetrating into the Faults and Abuses o it by the Inexperience or Knavery of former Managers, is Rectifude and Integrity in correcting and redressing 'em. honourable and toilsom Station he continu'd for seven or ars longer, with the same Character of a wife, just and fruconomist to his own perpetual Honour, and his Country's , and had more than once during that Time, both the of the House, and the Approbation of the Throne, for the e and prudent Management of the Nation's Treasure; 'twas mpossible that a Man who with so much Glory and Advanhis Country had continu'd so many Years in the Office of the Trust and Importance of any in the Nation, shou'd be withmies; yet even those Enemies were never able to find a h upon any just and solid Reason that cou'd give him the of a Blush to his dying Day: When a Number of Men all their wicked Arts and Address, and combine to ruin the ion of a great and honest Man, by the base Means of infaggestions and Calumnies, they may indeed by the Fickle-Caprice of an unconstant People, or a certain Fatality that tly attends Men in high Places, in a great Measure find ccount with the Multitude, for the most Part pleas'd with and Detraction; but they can never disturb the Tranof his Mind or Conscience, grounded upon a faithful and ested Discharge of his Duty; they may prejudice the States-ut the Philosopher and the Man of Vertue secure in his Innois above the Reach of their Malice, they may hurt a Man in. egree who had all the Virtues of an Angel, if that were pofhis publick Character with the unthinking or the prejudic'd;

but they can never affect, much less despoil him of his Honour and Integrity with the sober and discerning, who are capable of searching further than the Superficies of Things, nor apt to swallow the Cajoleries of designing Knaves, who scribble for a Faction without examining the Fund of their Pretensions; and the they be not the greatest part of Mankind, yet I am sure they are the best, and such, on whose Opinion a wise and honest Man would desire to found the Merit of his Character and Reputation; the Applause of Fools never added any Thing to the worth of the tormer; nor the Dislike or Malice of Knaves ever in Essect tracted any Thing from the inherent Value of the Latter; the Man, who is sensible he has done Nothing to deserve the he proaches of his proper Conscience is as unconcern'd at the Van of the one, as he may justly despise the impotent Rage or Envy

the other.

Tis visible to a Demonstration, that at the Time when the rem sentative Body of the Nation did this great Man the Justice and nour of so Meritorious a Character, that whatever our difgu and envenem'd Author, bigotted to the Interest of a Faction, thirsted for his ruine, so audaciously advanc'd with the Design of to discredit him, cou'd be only understood rather as the result of inveterate Malice, than Judgment founded upon Conviction of real Milmanagement; or of the infatiable Defire of the Faction destroy a Man, who resolutely stood in the way of their peraid Deligns; nor cou'd they devise any readier way to attain their h than by attacking him on the fide of his Reputation; it was a lutely necessary to remove such a Man in the first Station. gave, as it were, Life and Movement to all the others in the tion; and no matter how, so he were remov'd; and the Murder of a Man's Honour and Reputation be of all others the fest, and most ungenerous, yet it is ever the surest; for they have an uncommon Fund of Vertue who can always Support Credit against the Poison of Malice and Envy, or the Raged incensed and deluded People; this has been in all Ages the Rock on which most great Men in publick Stations have been wrack'd, and the Favour of the Prince tho' founded upon new much Vertue and Innocence, has feldom prov'd fufficient to sk 'em from the secret Malice of their Enemies, or the open Fu the Multitude: But if this premier Minister had so early me the Thanks and Acknowledgments of both Houses of Parliam how happen'd it that in fo short, or rather almost at the same I he shou'd be guilty of such Practices as must necessarily have feited a Testimony so glorious to his Vertue and Reputation fuch a Case they would doubtless been as forward to con him, if they had found him guilty, as they were to do him when they thought he merited it; what then were the h and Inveteracy of an abandon'd mercenary Scribler, of weight with the Opinion of both Houses, and the Approbati the Throne? Or is it not rather as evident, as Light at Noon, his only End and Defign was to belch our his detractions again that had so admirably maintain'd the Honour and true Intel his Country? If the Lord Treasurer took those Measures, in his great Wisdom and Knowledge, of the true State of he thought most conducing, in concert with other great to the Security and Happiness of the present Establishment, ade our wife and politick Author a Judge either of him, or Every private Man may doubtless entertain what Thoughts ntiments he pleases in his own Breast, of any great Minister Degree, for any private Man to decide dogmatically of nfactions of the most abstruct and mysterious Assairs of it, or first Springs and Movements of fecret Councels, and their ons; of the former of which, 'tis absolutely impossible he ver come to the Knowledge; and to dare to impose upon ick for Truths, the ravings of his Passions, and the most and groundless Calumnies upon bare Surmizes, and Suggehich never had a being, but in the Caprices of his own cormercenary Brain, or fertile Wickedness of his Faction. Man, tis true, may be as wicked as he pleases, but no be so long in a well regulated Government with impunihall some time or other, either fall under the Judgment or Animadversion of the Laws. If this Noble Peer had any dangerous Measures, to the Good and Honour of the wealth, he stood in a height that expos'd him to the View hole World; Defigns of that Nature are not to be carry'd or in the Dark; and if we stand in need of Conviction ve may possibly in a short Time live to see that whoever t, tho in confederacy with others, shall perish in the 'Tis not only difficult for any one Man, or Numbers of it next to impossible upon the Strength of a particular Gean Opinion of their united Capacities, (however favouramay conceive of themselves) to form any dangerous Denst an establish'd Government, and yet hope to escape the on of two Houses of Parliament; or not to meet in the the Punishment due toan execrable Treachery. Gorrupeasily slide into great Societies, and Bodies of Men; but Nation can never be suppos'd to be in a Conspiracy to purvn Ruin, and a great Majority will always be found who htly understand, and vigorously maintain their true Inteless peradventure for their Sins, they may provoke God to 'em to such a Degree of Degenerary and Corruption, as lensibly prepare 'em for Slavery, the dreadfullest of all Puts can befall a generous Nation born in, and inur'd to Liof which inclimable Blesling, as the Powers that compole illature, are the proper Conservators, so are they the only udges to whom all Ministers of State, as Delinquents are able. that enormous and dangerous Complexion objected against him. nothing less was expected by such as had unwarily falln into Snare than to fee him impeach'd for Crimes of Peculat and Tre against the Crown; his Enemies who had as artfully as wick endeavour'd to Wound him in his Reputation, knew too well own Interest (and we are but too well acquainted with good Nature) to spare the Life of a Man whose Death was folitely necessary to the Success of their Designs, and their on stablishment; if they had been in Effect able to prove their C against him of Crimes they had made him esteem'd guilty d his Administration; what then was the Issue of all this? Wh came of all this terrible Out-cry? Why just parturiunt mon If he was Innocent, why was a Man turn'd out, who had his Queen and Country with so much Glory? If Guilty, wh he not call'd to an Account, and punish'd as Crimes of that Nature, which they affirm'd him guilty of, might deserve there be a more evident Demonstration that the Innocence, the tue, and Honesty of the Man were incorruptible, and above Malice of his Enemies, fince like to many Guardian-Angels were capable of preferving him from a formal Defign again Life and Honour? There is I know not what fecret fort of ftiny, which, at certain Periods of Time unaccountable by Wildom, evidently interpoles and determines of the Fate of ons and Kingdoms; which not only permits, but contrives a fects great and notable Changes in 'em when in all human h rances they are least soreseen or expected; we are not to it into the mysterious Counsels and Methods of a Provident is above our Comprehension, but to accommodate our finite and Prudence with a becoming Refignation, to an unfear Power we are neither able to understand or controul; of w think I may reasonably be permitted to say, that the late G Revolution, and the latter change of Affairs in our own Co are as notable and remarkable Inflances, as our own Hill that of any other Nation, to confider all the Circumstances Those excellent Persons who had so in Europe can afford. a Share in the Accomplishment of the former, and those who as notably as undeservedly suffer'd in the latter, seem'd to the fecure Possession of their Honours and Employments, of Trust, as the Rewards of their great and eminent Service had done their Country at the Expence and Hazard of ther and Fortunes. By Even by fuch, as fince they succeeded 'em, have not made that has not stamp'd a Mark of Infamy and Dithonour upt possibly no length of Time shall ever be able to obliterate. s of a high and dangerous Nature to a Government, ought arly prov'd, they ought to have a Foundation in Fact capae plainest and fullest Evidence, before they are impudently to the Publick for Truths; and as, when they are made e can be no Punishment too vigorous and severe for such nts; so on the other hand, if they manifestly appear to be than the villanous Surmises and Suggestions of the merces of a Faction, there can be no Penalty, no degree of Inare not below the Wickedness of such abandon'd Defad the World will excuse all honest sensible Englishmen, Il conserve that high Opinion of the great Characters of linistry, which they know their Vertue, Probity, and in-Love of their Country so nobly deserve. If Praise, Re-Estimation are ever the Reward of high Trust, manag'd grity and Exactitude, what degree of em are due to the this great and excellent Minister, who with so just and ad-Oeconomy, manag'd so many Millions of the Publick Moproper Ends for which it was design'd? Men do not usuheir Money to the Publick, let the Security be esteem'd ne-, if the Ministers, who have the Management of it, are suforruption or Infincerity; and I think there cannot be a lance given of the noble Opinion the World had conthe honesty of this great Man's Character, than the wondiness of all forts of People to make the offer of their upon any emergency of the State, during the whole Course ministration; its well enough known, even to the great-Enemies, (if Truth were a Vertue to be expected from upon many extraordinary Occasions, he has frequently rast Sums of Money from the City, upon the Strength of redit, as have fince in the Memory of some of 'em, been a Parliamentary Security, when a Person of suspected nd Principles has been in his Station. This single Instance eniable Testimony both of the Opinion they justly conhim, and the Credit of his Security; for as Men's Hearts y where their Money is, they wou'd never have trufted it y in Hands, where they were not fatisfy'd it was secure; certain, that it is impossible for the worst of his Enemies to ngle Instance of Fraud or Disappointment, that was purely t of his Will, or Contrivance. Nor was it only at Home that o glorious a Reputation; Foreigners during his whole Mini-'d in their Money into our Country, with a Profusion never at any Time before, and we are sure never have been This proceeded not only from the Advantage of improving their Stock, which naturally influences all Dealers in Money : from the Opinion of their Security, in the Integrity of a Man, w had establish'd a Character abroad above Consure or Reproach, he had been so infamously traduced by his ingrateful Countrymen home; yet is it as clear as the Sun, that had it not been for h and other great Men, in the late Ministry, who were equally ferers with him, there wou'd have been such Runs upon the B both from Foreigners, our own Merchants, and other Persons cern'd at Home, upon their removal, as wou'd inevitably have the Credit of the Nation past a possibility of retrieving it. Nature of Man is seldom apt to forget outragious Injuries when deserv'd; they are always more prompt to Revenge, than for em; and it must be a very rare, and uncommon Vertue that pre with 'em to facrifice their Resentments of a private Injustice, to publick Good; for tho''tis no more than what all Men ought to yet we find but very few who are capable of doing it; 'tis an en tion and refinement of Vertue, so much above the common that it is very difficult to arrive at, and much more difficult to clife; and if we here and there meet with a fingle Instance in course of many Ages, in the Greek and Roman Story, they are but they may indeed be justly admir'd for their rareness and singula but have but seldom been brought into Example for Pra yet with all their Merit, they bear no Proportion to that whole sett of Men who have the ill Fortune to lie under grace they have no way deserv'd. When Men are outrag their Honour, which is the most nice and delicate Point the Honest and Vertuous, by the base and ungenerous Artific Calumny and Detraction, and yet stifle and overcome their ons and Resentments of it for the sake of the publick Trange nay who still continue even to outvie those Enemies who have triv'd their Disgrace for its Service, it plainly evidences that are Masters of a Reason and masculine Vertue that even under pression and the Chagrin of an ill Fortune, will eternally de the Admiration of all Men who have penetration enough to cern, and Sincerity to acknowledge it; and convince the reft, if they are no longer permitted to enjoy the Honours and luments of their Services in their former Stations, they at leaft deserve 'em. A Proceeding so generous, a love to their Con not to be shaken, and a disinterestedness so much out of the nary Practice of Men, have long ago open'd the Eyes of all those, whose Interest it may be to shut 'em, to see both the nocence, and the poor Injustice their Enemies have had the er to do 'em; yet shall they have the secret Satisfaction by ning an Instance of so sublime and elevated a Vertue, to lea their Posterity the fair Example of a Probity; a Courage, a Fil and Love to their Country, which they shall find more easy mire than to imitate. I have the more largely infifted upon the and Circumstances of the late Lord High-Treasurer, because ever I have offer'd in general Terms of him, difference of Sta respected, is equally applicable to every one of those extraord Persons who with him composed the late Ministry, and who respective Scituations I shall take Occasion to mention with Honour they deserve and that Integrity I make a Profession of; n the mean while shall I think I offend either Truth or Moif I give this great and noble premier Minister the following ular Character.

Man whole comprehensive and universal Genius was superior Toils and Difficulties of the most intricate and important Emnents; who had an Understanding capable of conceiving eae most mysterious Arcana of the State, with a Dexterity and is necessary to that Dispatch which is the Soul of Business, atwith a native Probity and Rectitude of Mind that had ever d him from the Corruptions of Fraud; who had the rare sels of maintaining both his Innocence and Honour, under imptations of a Trust of all others in the Nation, most likely strong Allurements of Gain, to debauch and corrupt a feeble ; his Diversions were only Refreshments and Relaxations of rampt and bent under the weight of constant Business, but subservient, and consistent with the inteparable Fatigues ils of Office; a rare Assembly of Vertue and Reason in a Ian under the highest Temptations of Profit and Pleasure! anag'd the publick Treasure with a Fidelity and admirable my, as render'd him the Admiration of Foreigners, and all his Countreymen, but those whose Interest it was to ter, and procure his Ruin; who exceeded by an irreproachugality those who have been before him, and shall rarely, if equal'd by any who shall have the Honour to succeed him; priginal for Imitation in a dangerous and Ilippery Station, in any considerable Men have made Shipwrack of their Vertue nour, frugal of the Publick Money, but without Coverousness, er lost an Opportunity of Service to his Country, either for want unwillingness to part with it; a Credit never exhausted, and Il readiness to employ it to answer the Publick Exigences; but t Vanity, and ever without Profusion; who always inviolaer'd to the true Interest and Honour of Great Britain, estaspon the Foot and Principles of the Revolution, in the aching of which he had fo great and glorious a share, and with an inflexible Courage and Constancy, thro' a Thoufamous Calumnies and Reproaches, he to his last Moments bully supported and maintain'd; 'tis an eminent Vertue, that to get the better of a Man's Passions; but it is a Degree of ion very rarely to be found amongst Men, for a Man to grow of the most profitable as well as most honourable Station in untry, whilst he has Health enough and Vigour to enjoy it; Men have a feeble on the side of Riches, and we have but h if ever heard or read of many great Men who ever faid or ht they had too much; yet I may pretend confidently to adthat the fole and pure Defign of serving his Country, prevail'd him beyond his private Repose to continue longer by some in the Execution of an Office, that it is impossible to serve in without Envy, or manage without Toil; yet the Glory of the Nation and his Sovereign in the difficult Juncture of a tedious and expensive War prevail'd above his Resentments to ingrateful and inexorable Enemies, and the Confideration of greatest Blessing of Life, his Health, to remain in the Slavery Business attended with perpetual Cares and Fatigues, the dangerous Enemies both of the Mind and Body, in an Advanta when most wife Men of Antiquity and all Ages, after a Course noily and toilsom Glory, have endeavour'd to pass the remain Life in the delicious Innocence of the Repose and Solitude of tirement. A Love so tender for the publick Good, the sacrific made of him elf for its Service, and a difinterestedness so great uncommon in his own Regards, merited at least the Happiness quiet and peaceable Exit; and not that the Malice or Wicken of Enemies shou'd put the end they design'd to the Life and De of fo great, so wise, so able, and faithful a Minister, whose Men shall always be dear, and whose Loss shall be always regretted all honest Englishmen, Lovers of their Country, when they reflect upon the different Management and Effects of those

My Lord Somers, late Lord President of the Council, is kn and allow'd even by his Enemies, to be a Man of that profi Knowledge of our Laws, of so sound and solid a Judgment, Understanding, that with an admirable Penetration, can pien to the Depths of the most perplex'd and difficult Affairs, and great Facility, foresee and comprehend the most distant En and find out the proper Applications to direct 'em to their respi Ends, as abundantly render him fit to be one of the noble well as most serviceable Embellishments of a Prince's Cali Happy may the Nation be which abounds in the Multitude of Counsellours. The Testimonies that a Man's Enemies give Vertues, as they are least to be suspected, so are they ever glorious to him; for as such can never be suppos'd to compli and less to flatter, we may depend upon the extraordinary Me the Man, whose Abilities they (whose Interest engages 'em vy or hate him) are compell'd to acknowledge and admire. a Felicity inseparable from Truth and elevated Vertue; they intrinsick Charms, which by a fort of irresistible Magick, en their Esteem and Admiration; and I don't know a more testable Evidence of the Truth I have been advancing, that universal Character of this great Man, for even Envy and traction cannot refuse him the essential Qualities that enter in Composition of a Minister of the first Eminence; his Enems forc'd to diffinguish, and are compell'd to admire the Excelle tho' they hate the Man. It was admirable to observe, in the and ticklish Station he was lately in, with fo much Glory to felf, and Good to his Country, with what Address he manage different and discording Sentiments of the wise and able that composed the Council he presided in; and tho there w quently an uncommon Unanimity amongst them, as to the go Good, yet as most Men are apt to make a Merit to themselve the Superiority of their own Genius, and are difficultly brough Submit to that of others, it is impossible sometimes to avoi

Men of ordinary Capacihay do the Business of the Helmin calm and serene Weather. e must be an able, bold, and experienced Pilate, that must come hip of State in a Storm; there is a vigorous, masculine fort rtue that is necessary to stem the Violence of a Hurricane, one but a little reflects upon the present ticklish and precariate of Affairs, one may venture to foretel, that the Exigenf our Country shall, in a little time, call again for the Service s able and generous Statelman, with the rest of 'em, to re-lete Disorders, the Treachery of others have occasion'd, upon Foot of Safety and lasting Happiness, which it shall not be Power of its Enemies ever to dilturb again to the End of

atever the Envy or Malice of a restless and inexorable Faction lurt out in Detraction of the Merit of the Noble Earl of Maris no small Part of his Glory, that they dread and tremble at isdom and Courage of a Man they cannot love; and it is an in-Sign that the Man is possessed of eminent Vertues in an elevaegree, whom the Enemies of his Country are under a Necessity ing. If this Noble Lord had not been all along, and continu'd to be one of the principal Bars and Obstacles to the villainous ns of those frantick Betrayers of their Country, they would spar'd him the base and ungenerous Reproaches and infamous nnies with which they have labour'd to affect his Reputation, o render him suspected and useless; but as even the greatest of nemies are compell'd to acknowledge a Courage in him that is o be shaken either by the Insinuations of Flattery, or Apprens of Danger, a Strength of Judgment equal to the most It Enterprizes, never to be diverted from the Honesty of his by the Menaces and Affrontery of an impotent Malice, a Mind ul upon fudden Emergencies of the boldest and most retional sels, and a Resolution to animate 'em into a speedy and vigo-Execution; his Sentiments hardy, strong and daring, with a ng and infinuating Eloquence to inforce the Reason, or Ney of 'em; a Fire in his Actions, mingled and temper'd with the ity of a confimmate Experience in an advanced Age, which is y to be found in the most youthful; a Spright liness and Vivaof Wit, balanced with a becoming Prudence, that give Life to most agreeable Conversations. Joyn to all this, the noble the had in bringing about the Glorious Change of Affairs, under our immortal Deliverer King William; his indefatigable Appl cation of his great Qualities in the Defence and Maintenance of the true Tast he has of the invaluable Blessing of our original Fred dom, which he has often expos'd his Life and Fortune to prefer and let the Malice of his Enemies swell till they burst, they a disgorge their Posson, but it will not reach or affect him. Eve Man's Vertue is liable, by hir'd, hardy Villains, to be traducaspers'd, malign'd, and yet he may be evidently the more hon and meritorious for it; for if a vertuous Man's Character had in better Security, both in the Conscience of his own Innocence, in the Opinion of Men of equal Honour and Vertue, his wh Stock of Reputation would be at the Mercy of every mercen Raskal, who had Malice or Wickedness enough to bespatter traduce it; yet in despight of all the leud Efforts of factious R and Detraction, this Noble Peer shall carry with him (and Ih late) to his Grave, and leave to his Posterity a noble Stock of @ ry, which in all Ages has been deservedly given to all true and nerous Affertors of their Countries Honour and Liberty.

If my Lord Hallifax had the Fortune to have liv'd in an a where a free and generous Wit, attended with a found and temper'd Judgment, where the Scholar, the Man of Quality, a Thousand amiable Accomplishments, that conspire to finish lish'd Gentleman, were more in regard, than the poor and Suggestions, of crafty and defigning Knaves, he might at this continu'd an Ornament both of the Court and Country, and Quiet have enjoy'd the Honours and Employments his Great Mil who was a Sovereign Judge of Merit, honour'd him with, thought he fo well deserv'd; but to retain a grateful Sense and knowledgment of that Glorious Monarch, and to venerate a Me ry that ought eternally to be dear to us, is a Crime that some in Fashion, we are sure, will never forgive; to continue moveably firm in Principles founded upon Reason, Equity, and Nation's Good, if a Man cannot prevail with himself to run into the Furies of High-Church Fanaticism, is to be, in the Opinio those Reverend Casuists, a Traytor to God and his Country; resolute in the Defence and Support of the present Establishm and to employ the utmost of a Man's Ability and Fortune to vent the laudable Design of a Faction to bring in their Dar Pretender, tho' with the Certainty of introducing Popery, Slavery Arbitrary Power, is, in the Opinion of these hot Heads, to be un thy to be treated with the common Offices of Humanity, good M ners, or Christian Charity; yet whilst Wit, good Humour, Learn Integrity and Firmnels of Courage are of any Estimation amongst this Honourable Peer shall remain forever in the Possession of a racter composid of a Thousand amiable Vertues and Qualities, as make the Delight of the Friends, and the Reproach and Terro the despicable Enemies of his Country.

These are the Great and Honourable Peers and Patriots which this bigotted mad Man is pleas'd, in his Frenzy, to reproach with detestable Design of overturning the Protestant Religion; and

I have done my self the Honour to enur to defend 'em from an Imputation as false, as it is groundnd malicious. I acknowlege the Presumption of an Attempt h above my Capacity, and have been only able to trace the nes, and hope to fee the Portrait receive the finishing Strokes he Hands of an abler Master. I am not conscious to my self, have any way finn'd against the Rules of Truth or Modesty, m sensible I have fail'd in the Performance, as unequal to the yet, with this Confolation, that the Failure is purely the of an Inability to perfect fo great a Work; nor am I in the in at the Adversary's Imputation of Flattery; 'tis a Vice I and if they who shall think fit to charge me with it, will fo much Credit as to believe me, when I assure 'em that I the Honour at present, and possibly never may, to be lly known to any of 'em as the Author of this, 'tis all the I either expect or desire; for a Man, I suppose, may be justitted from the poor Delign of Flattery, who is, and may ever e an absolute Stranger to the Great Men whose Defence he ertaken; yet I shall assure such, that I am much more conlest I have been wanting to give those Noble Lords the hat are so justly their due, than for having given them more ey deserve. No Consideration shall ever prevail with me to the Interests of Truth, of Honour, and of injur'd Innoand the Cause of my Country. I place the only Merit I can to, in the Sacrifice I make of a Life, long ago devoted to the of the latter; and if I am capable, by any poor Endeavours to contribute any thing to the Vindication of the one, or vantage of the other, I shall at least have the secret Satisof having discharged a Duty which every honest Englishman enfibly, by all the Obligations of Honour and Conscience, to perform, to the best of his Power; and if any Friend of hor's, or other High-Church-Man, will be at the Trouble to eme of Error, I shall never be asham'd to own, or recant if he can prevail with himself to do a Thing so contrary to tant Practice of his Faction, let him be fure that it be done ength of Reason and good Manners that become the Chaf a Gentleman, or a Scholar, otherwise it will but increase ntempt I have already for them; for I shall neither take their Topicks of Railing and Invectives for Argument, ess, think 'em worth the Trouble of a serious Answer; but n, they will be pleas'd to give me Leave to continue in the n and Sentiments I am at prefent, and which I hope further ve, are founded upon Reason and Justice. these Great Men have the Honour, and esteem it their

there Great Men have the Honour, and esteem it their st Happiness, to have been born and brought up in the Comn of the Establish'd Church; they have given the most unde-Proofs of their inviolable Love and Attachment to it, when a nobly hazarded their Lives and Fortunes in its Defence, as a time when it was brought to the very Brink of Ruin, by the forts of a Popith and Arbitrary Power, supported by Jacobite High-Church Principles, which leave to the Prince the Power difposing all Things folely by the Lust of his Will, without any gard to the Laws of the Nation, or the Obligation of the m facred and folemn Oaths that can influence and bind the Co science of Men. What have these Noble Men Jone fince, to for the Glorious Character they had merited of the vigorous Defend and Maintainers of the Liberties and Establish'd Religion of Country? Can it be thought reasonable, or even possible, that of Parts, of Learning, of Honour and Sense, who enjoy'd greatest Places of Dignity and Profit in the State, could be previous with to act in Contempt of 'em all, for the Ruin and Defined of that Church, the Conservation of which had been the Wor their own Hands; or to endeavour the undermining and Subven of a Fabrick they had fet up, at the Expence and Hazard of Things of most Esteem with Mankind? Men of Honour and grity do not eafily shift their Principles, when they are established upon the Convictions of Reason, right Understanding, and science; tho' it too often happens, that Men whose private lim gets the better of their Concern for the publick Good, do; and is as rarely feen, that Men, eminent for their Wifdom and dence, shall run the Hazard of losing the Possession of the nours and Employments, the Favour of the Prince, or the Reputation they may have establish'd by a Thousand Great and rious Actions, may have invested 'em in, only for a ridiculous chimerical Prospect of greater Advantages in the Clouds, and with tis next impossible they should ever rationally expect they should rive at. How can it enter into the Heart of any but a For Madman to conceive, that a few Men, tho' of the first Rank, of Communion of the Establish'd Church, should enter into a Co racy to extirpate it, only to introduce Presbytery? Men whot and know any thing of the Affairs of Kingdoms, are fenfible hazardous and dangerous a Thing it is to make even small lan tions in Matters of Religion, tho' visibly for the better; but is of the last Importance and Consequence to attempt a total Chi of the whole Form of that, which by the Legislature, has been establish'd National: Nor is there any other Power under ven can effect it, except by a superior and irresistible Force, whi Usurpation, and implies no Right, otherwise than by the mous and universal Consent and Authority of the whole Body Nation, which it is hardly conceivable they should ever cond accomplish; for how little Regard soever particular Persons have for the Practice of the indispensible Duties of Religion, is the most tender and delicate Point the collective Body of tion can be touch'd in; and they are no fooner alarm'd with dangerous Defigns against it, which our Adversaries have to but too well how to improve, but it is the Signal to Arms they are ready to spend their Blood in the Defence of anReligio which most Men's Practices are a Scandal and Reproach; nor is ng more common, than to fee Men fight with the same Furyand is for Religion, which they neither understand, or practife as no really do. The very Difficulty that naturally attends the n of such a Defign, is, doubtless, sufficient to deter any rational m attempting it, fince as there feems not to be the least Probasucceeding, the Ruin and Destruction of the Undertakers must navoidable Consequence of their Miscarriage. Such, thereare in Possession of noble Estates, Employments and Hon some of which they may be succeeded by their Children, difficultly brought to be engag'd in Enterprizes that may, if carry, justly cut 'em off from their Pretensions to 'em all, and der themselves both the Objects of a Divine Vengeance, and empt of all honest Men. 'Tis to have Time to throw away, lotice of all the Fooleries and Chimera's of this enthusiahor; the Vanity and Impossibility of the Success of his faners are sufficient to destroy the Credit of 'em; yet those of a heated and corrupted Brain, manag'd with the Craft lty of a dangerous and malignant Wit (thro' an unhappy on Men have to be pleas'd and influenc'd rather with Scanwhat is Truth) have been able to make Impressions upon s of unthinking People, to the prejudice of these Great Patriots, against all the Appearances and Evidence of Equity, or Reason. I have not undertaken to follow all the Mazes of his imaginary Fears; there are many fo nd visible Falshoods advanced, as not to need Animad-The Großness and Impudence of them at first View, apfuch as consider 'em without Prejudice; and others so very ind impertinent, as not to be worth it; yet I cannot omit tice of one or two more, which carry the Appearance of equence, but which upon the Scrutiny, will appear to be s, as ill grounded an malicious as all the rest; and the where, our of his abundant Zeal and Concern for the he with a wonderful Tenderness bemoans the hard Forill Treatment the Episcopal Clergy of Scotland met with, y apply'd themselves for Relief for what he calls their unngs, in the following Words. "And when the perfe-Clergy of that Kingdom, in the Anguish of their Souls, ed for some Comfort and Relief under their Miseries, they ent back with an Answer that had more of Reproof than flion in it, without Hope of Remedy; and the more to imbitter Voes, besitting only tumultuous Rioters, or seditious Re-rants. A lamentable Case indeed, if they had not more ciently deserv'd it; and if they did not meet with someore rigorous than Reprimands, 'twas more an Effect of the s and Indulgence of those who were then in Power, than derit of their Behaviour to the Govenment. There is no o is but little acquainted with the Affairs of that Nation, ot blinded beyond the Power of Truth to open his Eyes, or sufficiently convinc'd that all the Consusions and Diforit fire the legal Establishment of Presbytery, are entirely owing to the Reftless Endeavours of those Episcopal Clergyn Whatever Opposition was made in the Commencement, Progn or compleating the defirable Union of the Two Nations; or mosities and Jealousies that have perpetually turmoil'd and perpe it ever fince it was happily effected, have been folely the Remitheir High-Church Principles and Doctrines. With what h cou'd Men who have all along acted in Contempt and Defiance the Establish'd Government, expect to be better us'd ? Are Care Favour and Preferments to be the Rewards of Disobedience Sedition, of Rebellion ? If these Men believe in Truth their ved and darling Doctrine of Passive Obedience to the Higher Por why have they not convinc'd the World of the Sincerity of Belief, by the Conformity of their Practice ? They banter us Hour from the Pulpits and the Press with the Divinity of Arine, to which they can never bring their own restive Inclina to conform; they eternally amuse and fool us with the Sigh Tears and Prayers, as the last and indeed only Resource of primitive Christians under their Sufferings and Persecutions they would have us think they believe themselves what the firm, why don't they imitate em? Yet we know, that upon Difgust they never cease to incite and animate their Fellow iects to Arms and Rebellion against the Legitimate Supream of their Nation.

What would these Men have the World to believe of shameful Prevarication? Of such a manifest Difference of Opinion from their Conduct? Either they are Traitors to the for propagating such unwarrantable Doctrines, with a Def Subvert it, if they do not believe 'em; or frontless Deceiver Hypocrites before God, in not conforming their Behaviour regulating by 'em the Actions of their Lives; if they do not known to all the World, that these very Reverend Ep High-Church-Men both pray and preach up the Interests of King James in their publick Assemblies, and as often a meet in their Jollity and their private Cabals drink frequent Health, Prosperity and Restoration, upon whose Exclusion Peace and Happiness of their Kingdom entirely depend? sensible of a Fault is the first Step towards quitting it, but a stinate and relentless continuing in it is an infallible Sign bo a harden'd and profligate Conscience, and of a depraved an rupted Understanding; have these Men hitherto given the any Marks of Sorrow or Remorfe for their Crimes in diffe the publick Tranquility of their Country? Nay, do they no ever fince give new Proofs, and administer such Occasions of dal in a continu'd Perverseness, which must infallibly at end in the Ruine of their Country, or their own final E tion? If there be any amongst 'em of that Order of honester ciples, and more upright Intentions, which I hope and wish, God forbid that they should equally suffer and be confo with the Guilty; their Condition may truly deserve Comp and will doubtlels receive the Favour and Protection of the

Heaven be prais'd, we live under the happy te of a Government and Religion, where all Men of all ons are equally liable to the Reach and Power of the tho' we know some that have an exceeding Itch to be out ; and if the Justice of those Laws, however severe, had ectually executed upon some notorious Delinquents of their h all probability the rest by their Example and Expence have been taught better Manners, and restrain'd, for the is of the Nations, within the Limits of their Duty and n. There is no Sort of Men under the Sun that too nity and Indulgence is so hurtful to as Ecclesiasticks, for re naturally aspiring and assuming, they are but too apt themselves a Body too formidable for the Legislature to with; and are as forward to continue the Folly or Madhe Errors they may espouse, whilst they are suffered to an Opinion of themselves that they may do so with This I am very far from understanding of the whole beak only of High-Church, and but of fuch of them, as the Nature and Duty of their holy Function, interwith Things which of all Men upon Earth they leaft d, and have less to do with; yet these are the oppressed d People, who in the Opinion of this Railer, deferv'd not Compassion, but the Encouragement and Favour of Persons, whose Authority and Interest in the Gothey have, and do still incessantly labour to over-

eternally buz into the Ears and Hearts of their People frines as tend directly to dispose 'em to receive and rer beloved King James VIII. to the ancient Crown, and te, as they call it, of his Forefathers, of which he has heir good Opinion so unjustly depriv'd; they keep up of their Country-men in a perpetual Ferment and Agihis Regard, which otherwise would long ago have fettled into the publick Tranquility, by the Bleffing by Union, the Advantages of which they are fensible the End be principally theirs, and in a short Time, if rupted by these Incendiaries, have render'd that Nation , more flourishing, and more powerful than ever it has they had a Being; but whilft there is a Race of Men amongst 'em, who by their slavish Doctrines and Prinntain the Rights and Interests of a vile Pretender, and livide the People into Jealonsies, unnatural Feuds and s, it is absolutely impossible the Peace and Security of should be preserv'd by the most wholesome Laws that Wildom can devile; of this I think they have given the undeniable Instance not long ago, in the notorious Fact of the late traiterous Medal; a Defign so fatal to the true Interes of their Country, is entirely owing to the pernicious Principle which these Men, with as little good Sense as Love to it, has and continue industriously to propagate, with which that M jority of the Faculty of Advocates was poison'd and corrupte One may justly wonder that a Society of Men of confideral Reputation for their Learning and Knowledge of their La should be guilty of so scandalous and bare-fac'd a Violation 'em, if it were not to be consider'd, that in all Governments the are ever to be found two Sorts of People, who are never content with the present Establishment; either such who out of Prince may disapprove the Original Constitution, who as they are ge rally few, are least to be fear'd, and may possibly be best excus or such who out of the Natural Pravity of their Inclinations, Defire of Novelty, or the Pressures of a scanty Fortune, flat themselves with the Prospect of improving 'em by a Revolution they succeed; and as these are always the most numerous, therefore the more dangerous, and most to be apprehended; though there is the greatest Wickedness that Men can be gu of in Respect to the Publick in such Designs, yet such Men to make a Merit of their Treachery, and expect the greatest ( ces of Trust, Honour and Profit, as the Reward of Actions, which they much better deserve to be hang'd; I appeal to Man, who is but moderately acquainted with the History of land, even from their own best Authors, Whether he can see that the me any one Nation in Europe, which has given so many h of their Love of their ancient Liberty; which has perform'd Great and Noble Actions, either to defend or retrieve it; which has offer'd more Violence and bloody Outrages to fuch so many of their Kings who have attempted to inflave 'em they have done? What then is become of that Noble and & rous Spirit that animated their Gallant Fore-fathers to facilities their Lives for the Good and Happiness of their Country? is become of that Wisdom and Valour that has formerly, with so much Justice, gain'd 'em the Reputation of as know and valiant a People as any in Europe? Has a bare Profpt Peace and Abundance been able, as it were by Anticipation, dull the Spirits, and enervate the Valour of a brave and People; as an actual, long-continu'd Superfluity, Ease and Lu have done before to the effeminate and flavish Asiaticks? Or they chang'd their Nature with the Condition of their Cou which by the Benefit of this long-defir'd and happy Union enable 'em in a little Time, not only to enjoy the Ease and modities of Life at Home, free from the Vassalage and Tyn of their imperious Lords, but to make a Figure and carry 1 putation into diffant Countries, more becoming the Character Merit of a brave and warlike People, than they have ever able to do in former Ages? Nothing of all this, but a deadly lethargick Poison, has been infus'd by the Wickedness of Episcopal High-Church Priests, which has infected and infan

Do Reverend Episcopal Gentlemen in Scotland, who deserve so Tenderness and Compassion, or our own at Home, take us rivelers and Id iots, thus to think to make us the Dupes of ridiculous Chimæra's, or thin-spun Politicks? But to shift the Scene, and follow this Madman in the Con quences of his own and his High Church Brethrens Principles his at Home, a fecond Thing he is much concern'd for (as danger to the present Constitution of the establish'd Hierarchy) was t frightful Design that some moderate Men, as highly distinguis for their eminent Learning, Piety and Wisdom, as any of the Brethren, with the pious and Illustrious Queen Mary of fragrant and immortal Memory at the Head of 'em, had for to invite the Dissenters, especially the Presbyterians, into the fom and Conformity of the National Church under the tern Bugbear Scheme of Comprehension. A View of the unhappy! orders and Consequences to the State and Church by the d trous Divisions of Men professing the same common Faith, g Birth to an Enterprize those great and excellent Men had o ceiv'd according to the best Lights of Humane Prudence, to u and compose those Differences, that weaken'd and expos'd a the Infults of our common Enemies; a Design so sublimely p and glorious in it felf, that tended folely to the Honour of 6 and Good of the State, deserv'd all the Praise and Commen tion that so elevated a Charity, so unaffected and disinteresta Piety could justly challenge; or at least merited to have eld the Ridicule and Contempt, with which this Enthuliast was p fed to treat it. Cou'd it enter into the Head or Heart of t a Madman to conceive, that those excellent and venerable s, who enjoy'd the Stations of the greatest Honour, Dignity ofit in it, wou'd court the Diffenters into her Bosom at the Exof the Ruin and Subversion of that Church? The Latitude he learned and pious Compilers of the Act of Uniformity the Pastors and Governours of the Church, as it is the greaidence that good and holy Men cou'd give the World of charity and Compassion for the Weakness of their Brethren, idently demonstrates their Opinion, that all lawful and homes them to all and homes them. ans shou'd be allow'd to retrieve such of 'em as had not sefrom her out of Perversness, or Obstinacy, but purely by forcement of a Conscience truly tender and scrupulous; and are as they did not infift upon a too rigorous and inflexible is themselves, exclusive of all means to reduce such kind of ers, it cou'd never be their Intention, that their Successors otherwise it wou'd have been frivolous, if not something to tell the World that they had Charity and Compassion ir diffenting Brethren, if they had been resolutely determiadmit of no Changes in the outward Form of the establish'd Worship in their Favour, or had disallow'd all the honest conal means that might occasionally be offer'd to reclaim 'em

ent Necessity requir'd. fence of the most pure Church in the World cannot be bet ress'd than in the Words of that excellent Preface to the Act formity, which I shall transcribe: " It has been the Wifn of the Church of England, ever fince the first compiling of publick Liturgy, to keep the Mean between the two Exms of too much Stiffness in refusing, and too much Easiness admitting any Variation from it; for as on the one Side mon Experience shows, that where a Change has been made Things advisedly establish'd (no evident Necessity so requi-) fundry Inconveniences have thereupon enfu'd, and those, be remedy'd by such a Change; so on the other Side, the ticular Forms of divine Worship, and the Rites and Cerenies appointed to be us'd therein, being Things in their n Nature indifferent, and alterable, and so acknowledg'd; is but reasonable, that upon weighty and important Consideions, according to the various Exigences of Times and Octo those that are in Place and Authority should from Time Time seem necessary or expedient; let them therefore shew the Right Reverend Fathers of the Church, and those that in Authority, what Alterations they defire, and the evident Neeessity or Expediency of such Alterations, and no doubt will meet with a cheerful Compliance from them. Here in is a most plain and commendable Evidence and Profession of derness and Compassion for their Dissenting Brethren, as could defir'd from a Holy Love and Charity purely Christian and p tive, and which shall recommend the pious Professors of 'en all succeeding Generations; there was not amongst them the serable Distinction of High and Low Church, but a persect mony and Unanimity of Opinions of honest and pious Men, spoke as they believ'd, and believ'd what they taught, and folely aim'd at bringing all Men into that Unity and Confor of Religion established in the Church of England, which which have render'd her the Admiration, as she has ever been the of the Reformation: But Oh how chang'd! How do now! who with as much Injuffice as Presumption stile themselve true Sons of the Church, imitate the Christian Example of Reverend Predecessors? Where is that unaffected Piety and tion, that so brightly shin'd and compleated the Character of fo truly Apostolical? Where to be found that Spirit of Med of Humility, of Condescension, of Compassion, of brotherly and heavenly Charity, that are the eternal Characteristick Glory of the Divine Religion of Jesus Christ, the Author, ginal, and most perfect Exemplar of all these Christian Va and which he recommended to the Imitation and Practice Disciples and Followers under the Denunciation of the most ful of all Punishments? 'Tis long fince they have been Sm to this once Happy Church and Island, since the Devil and Subtil Enemies have in their Places sown such Seeds of Discon Distinction amongst us, as are destructive of the very Essent Ends of all Piety and true Religion, and render us the Sp well as Contempt of all our Enemies at Home and Abroad, see and triumph in the Ruine of the most Excellent Chan the diabolical Divisions, Heats and Animosities of her Profe and of the State and best-establish'd Government under the in the consequent Weakness, Confusions and Disorders into into it by our disastrous Misunderstandings.

What Hope of ever reducing us into a better Temper and tion of Mind, when those very Men, who by the Obligation Nature of their Function, ought to be both our Instructors and amples of Peace and Union, are the principal Authors and menters of all our Disorders? What Hope of that Unanimits Secrecy of Councils and Force, so necessary to the Defence of dear Country, amongst Men professing the same Faith in the munion of the same Church, when every Man's Hand is again Brother; when every Man who is esteem'd a Low Church is by his Brother of the High, branded with the exasperating racter of a Fanatick, a Republican, an Antimonarchist, Atheist? What Hope of ever reconciling the Dissenter into the som of the Church, which would be so much to her Glory, and Nation's Advantage, when these violent Bigots are so far from

ing so much as even a Wish or Desire they should be so, that treat 'em with a Rigour and Inhumanity, which tend only to 'em at a farther Distance, unknown to Barbarians? Were violent Men sincerely in the true Interest either of their Reor Country, they would be eafily sensible what Advantage d accrue to both, by the Addition of so considerable a Strength, y were happily united; or if they were barely permitted to in Peace the Privileges of their Birthright as Englishmen, out Railing, without Reviling, without Contempt in the Inurse of a friendly Commerce; which, as Men professing the Christian Faith, as Friends, as Relations, as Gentlemen and w-Subjects, they have so just a Claim to, tho' they have the rtune to differ from us in their Sentiments concerning the of our Publick Worship and Discipline. Let those zealous Church-Men convince the World, that they agree amongst elves in an universal Assent to all the Articles of their own th, to which they subscribe; or in the Validity and Authority eir Canons, which with so much Violence they inforce, and d obtrude upon others, before they reproach the Dissent of Brethren from Things of less Moment, with the injurious errible Imputation of Schism. If they themselves subscribe to les, to all of which they do not give an unexceptionable Aiwhich can be demonstrably prov'd that great Numbers of 'em pretend a Belief of Canons which they know are not ably necessary and essential (at least many of 'em) to the Goment of the Church, only because they support their Interest; what Front can they condemn those who dissent from em urely out of Principle of Conscience, of which God, the Searcher learts, is the only proper and equitable Judge? Articles and ons, the Institutions only of Men, may be the Rules of Discipline, not of Conscience; for nothing can absolutely and necessarily that, but what is divine, and absolute and necessary to Salva-'Tis most certian there is no one Precept of our divine Reliis so often repeated and enforc'd by the Heavenly Author of it, r so severe Penalties, as that of Love to one another, and uni-Charity to our Brethren, as being the utmost Perfection and

There is no good Christian, who firmly believes the Authori the Holy Scriptures, who can have the least room to doubt that will not affift his Church with his Spirit and Grace to the End the World; but it is to be understood of such as earnestly seed deserve it by the Purity of their Doctrines, and Integrity of Manners; for he has no where promis'd to be favourable or all to the Corrupt, or the Hypocrite; and that Church or Commi of Men who set up for a greater Share of it than the rest of Brethren, are under an Obligation of proving their Title to lo rious a Pre-eminence and Distinction, by a Conduct something rent from what is generally the Practice of the present Times. of fo prelumptuous an Affectation, may, by outfide and falle Ap rances, gain with some fort of People an extraordinary Opinio Learning, Sanctity, and I know not what fort of Orthodox nity, but it will be necessary to convince others of more Judge and Penetration of the Certainty of a particular Divine Grace Testimonies and Evidences of it something very near resemble what we call Miracles, which, if I mistake not, we have taught have long ago ceas'd. If they abuse the the Laws have entrusted 'em with, only to insult with Raild Revilings, such as they think want Ability to oppose their ce and Injustice, as such a Practice is always not only an Indiof a poor and mean Spirit, but of an arbitrary and tyrannical er of Mind; so is it an infallible Argument, that they either believe the Divine Truths which they make a Profession to to others, which is shameful Hypocrify; or of inexcusable dness, in daring to run counter to 'em, and living in an open ce and Violation both of them and their Author, which is ionable Presumption. We are told from an Authority, which not permitted to question, That that Servant who knows his

There is no manner of doubt, by just, good, and merciful God, will make Allowances for Weaknesses inseparable from human Nature, even in the best most religious Men; and Ignorance, Surprize, or Inadverted may be allow'd to plead Excuse for such blameable Sallies as be purely the Result of 'em; but as he is a God jealous of his G he has affur'd us, that he will in his Anger referve the most ten of Punishments for such, as thro' an habitual Hardness, a su Malice, or a wilful Perverleness of Mind, live in a Continual I and Disobedience to the most Peremptory Precepts and Comm of his Holy Spirit. As there is something sublimely excellent doing Good, besides the secret Sweetness and Satisfaction even nest Man receives from the Conscience of noble and generous ons, they who are constant in the Pursuit and Practice of its be faid in a very particular Manner to have already some fort immediate Participation of the Divine Purity, whose Essen Goodness it self; whilst they who take a secret Pride and Pla in the wicked Arts of Envy, Hatred, and Malice, besides the menting Remorfe that is inseparable from the Practice, the dently manifest that they are more the Servants, and in the Int of a Being who delights in the Ruin and Destruction of Man than of that which created, and eternally studys the Good and fervation of 'em; for there is nothing more certain, than the Christian Religion, in its whole Design, Nature, and Tenden most admirably adapted to all the Benefits and Commodities man Life; 'tis not only of all the Bleffings under Heaven the valuable, but the most beneficent and advantageous to Manking only the Fountain, but Refinement of all human Perfections.

There is a fort of Roughness that attends meer Nature best Performances, which carries a Tincture of Corruption, and best and most commendable Actions of Life, are but the Effects unpolish'd and fort of savage Vertue; but there is an infinit Sweetness in true Religion, that mingles and sooths, and of the natural Ruggedness of our Temperaments, and gives it a ness and Polish, which it was before a Stranger to: It purges that Dross and Feculency that clouds and obscures the Beauti our Creation, and establishes in their Place an amiable which is the Effect of a Perfection purely Divine; and as when rightly understood, it banishes all Fears and Apprehensions, are naturally the Attendants of Minds doubtful and irresolution is it the only Fountain under Heaven, that furnishes all the and most solid Joys that know neither End or Allay. mable, commode and good-natur'd, ever accompany'd with tely, Affability and good Manners; he feems, by a fort of Spil Refinement, to be exalted into something more than Man, approaching nearer the Perfection of Angels. 'Tis but when weakly, or superficially tinctur'd by the Spirit and Insluence his Divine Religion; or when he has but the Appearances of iness, without the Power, the Affectation of only making a Fiin the World, that we see him still left in the Power and Tyy of his Passions and Appetites; his Vertues are all either false fected; he is no more than a plausible Hypocrite, who hunts Glory upon a wrong Scent, and will, in the End, find himbut the Bubble of that Vanity, with which he would have s'd upon the Credulity of others. Hence it is, that we see with all his Pretences to Religion, unjust, violent, and inconwith himself; his Actions forc'd, or constrain'd and irregular, centring in himself, and preferring his private Interest to the ck Good, proud, ingrateful, imperious, untractable; the ordi-Commerce of his Life turbulent, harsh and disrespectful, ated ever with Craft, Dissimulation, Envy, Hatred, Malice, inge, Uncharitableness, with all the other Appendages insepafrom Ill-nature and worse Manners.

is infallible Difference there is between the veritable Influence ire and undefil'd Religion, and the hypocritical Affectation of it. latter never fails to lead Men who act only upon Views of te Interest, into all those criminal Measures that most readily nce to carry 'em on without any Regard to the Remonstrances onour or Conscience: They are seldom touch'd with that Ree, or endeavour artfully to conceal it, which usually attends truly and conscientiously scrupulous, when they perpetrate es of a deep Complexion with an obstinate and perverse Will. If the known Rules of their Duty, and the express Commands od; and if they be such as act in Dependance on the Will and ure of others, so they gain the Points of Interest and private rment, never concern themselves about the Means, how unable soever they may be, that lead them to their End. In this they are to all degrees most passively obedient; this is the Chariflick of a poor mercenary Spirit, without any Tast of true gion or moral Honesty; they ever do what they are command-with the blind and implicit Submission of Slaves, and very ofoverdo it, by the Impulse of a natural Violence of Inclination; onstant Practice of all miserable Renegades, who cannot give a er Proof of their Renunciation of their Christianity, than to use most inhuman Barbarities upon those who profess it, when they 'em under their Hands: And thus make a Merit of Supereregaof a base and servile Complaisance, which in reality, inhances r Guilt, and ought to brand 'em with the last Marks of Infamy Contempt. Hence it is, that the Bufiness of Parties, when a ion is so unhappy to be divided into 'em, is ever carry'd on with e unchristian Heats and violent Animosities, as are a Scandal to all Religion and common Humanity; and as that is at prefent our disastrous and melancholy Case, I question not but to protect that the Partizans of the High-Church Faction, notwithstanding they have in their Mouths, like their old Pharisaical Brethren mongst the Jews, The Temple of the Lord! The Temple of Lord; have a less Share and Proportion of Concern for true Religin and act more contrary to the Divine Precepts and Commands of than their Adversaries (as they are pleas'd to call'em) of the Latho'it were heartily to be wish'a, that there were more amongst forts of Men in the Nation, and shall leave it to the Judgment every unprejudic'd and impartial Reader to determine, of the In

of what I advance.

Amongst a Thousand other Instances, there cannot, I think an Evidence of greater Notoriety of the want of Charity in former, than their continual Railings and Bitterness against whole Body of Diffenters, and more particularly the Presbyten as the most numerous and powerful, so consequently, of the dangerous Enemies of the Establish'd Church. From whence they pretend to derive an Authority by which they treat their low-Subjects and Fellow-Christians with a Barbarity unknown any other Church, but that of Rome? From God? Certainly for he has peremptorily commanded all Men who profess a B and Obedience to his Truths, to love their Neighbours as thems nay, to love even their Enemies, and such as shamefully and de fully use and persecute 'em; yet these People, who are thus etc ly the Objects of their implacable Malice and Aversion, are Fe Subjects, Fellow-Christians, of the same Houshold of Faith, fessing the same Articles of our common Religion; yet as has said, Fanaticks, Republicans, Enemies to Monarchy, the Establish Church, and Schismaticks, are the kindest and softest Expres and Epithets these fiery High-Church-Men can afford to beston on 'em; and as to the last Reproach of Schism, do not the rious Revilers know, that every Separation from an establishment Church does not deserve to be branded with the heavy Guilt Infamy of Schism? Nay, do they not know that no Man, or of Men, can justly incurit, who do not professedly oppose and ny, and that with Hardness and Obstinacy too, some fundament and essential Article of the establish'd Religion, and separate from her Communion out of Petulancy or Perverseness, but of pure scruple of Conscience for what they may esteem Error or Al of which they alone, I mean of their Conscience, are, after God only proper Judges? This we are fure was the Opinion of the verend and Pious Fathers of the first Three Centuries of the tive Church: Is the nature of Things chang'd? Or are our Reformers of the present, of more Estimation for their Lean and Piety, than those venerable Professors of primitive Christia who most of 'em sign'd the Truth of their Belief with the La their Lives? If such an unanimous verfal Affent in all Things to every Article of the Christian and Manners of Worship were to be wish'd or desir'd, it r be expected whilst the Church of Christ is only militant Earth, which is a State that naturally implies Disorder. and Disagreement; and is doubtless reserved to make up inpleat the Happiness and Perfection of it, when it shall triumphant in Glory in the World to come: 'Tis then, and Il then, shall all Men be of one Mind, when they shall, if speak, pass away Eternity in Peace and Brotherly Love and ip, in everlasting Praise, Thanksgivings, Adorations, and Hallelujahs. Why then if my Brother (for every Man g the same Christian Faith is such) happens to differ from am of the Religion of the Establish'd Church, in Things own Nature indifferent, and of meer Speculation, am I unbligation to revile and treat him as an Enemy? God forbid. omes it that he has not the same Reason and Authority, if onvinc'd in his Judgment and Conscience of the Truth of ions, to treat me after the same manner? 'Tis not a bare on from a Church made National by certain Laws, that Man liable to the Guilt and Reproach of Schism, but a Difobstinate Separation from some Fundamental Truths of the Christian Religion, which is above all human Laws. If on; I may pity, but I dare not hate him, If I pretend to My being of the Communion of the Establish'd Church. no manner of Authority to judge or punish him, there are which we are both equally subject to do that Office when may require it: I may, indeed, and am oblig'd to endearedress and make him sensible of that Error, by my Reason, Authority of the Holy Scriptures; but I may not revile, evil or persecute him; that would be to pour the Corrosive of , where the Softness of Oil was more expedient, and to te and rankle the Wound I should desire to heal. But if ry Author, with the rest of his fiery High-Church Brewho rail with fo much Bitterness and Contempt against the ideayours of those who labour'd to unite us by any rational of Comprehension, would lay aside their sierce and uncharitable Heats, and feriously put their Hand to so pious and glorid Work as the Re-union of our Diffenting Brethren to the Boson their Mother-Church, fince we are by no means forbid to use honest Means of human Prudence in our Power to accomplish a fign of that important Goodness and Happiness to the Nation, I so far presume to offer one to their Consideration, which, by Bleffing of God upon fincere and upright Intentions and Endeavo cannot fail of producing extraordinary Effects, which they can refuse to come into, without drawing upon themselves the Repu of Men, and the more just and terrible Vengeance of God; if the Success be not as universal as may be desir'd, it may least be considerable, in drawing great Numbers from their A blies, and consequently lessening their Power, and filling Churches, which will bring a notable Addition to our own, is this, God give it a Bleffing, as it is honeftly and heartily and intended.

There is nothing more certain that there is no one thing the contributed so much to exasperate and estrange Men's Minds one another, as rugged and discourteous Usage. All Men, ou Principle of Self-love, think they deferve better, and are applications offended and grow angry they meet with the Severity of ill I ment, they may think they have not merited; they look up Violence offer'd, not only as offensive, but injurious; and who does the Injury, is feldom known to forgive, he is but a turally inclin'd to hate him, to whom he has once offer'd one too often, if not always, is the principal Fountain of all Her Animolities, not only amongst private, but great Bodies and ties of Men, and whilst so unreasonable a Principle cont there can be little or no Hopes of reconciling 'em; for unla Motive that first gave Birth to 'em ceases, it will ever fomes exasperate Men into all the Excesses of mutual Rage and Aven nor hardly has it ever been known, that Differences, especial Matters of Religion, have ever been amicably concluded by Dispute. I believe that all Men think themselves in the right those Reasons they produce in Defence of their Opinions; and as certain that Opposition irritates Men's Minds and Spirits into unmannerly and unjustifiable Warmths that are inseparable Controversies of that kind; there is a fort of Jealousy and I tion of Judgment and Reason which each Party claims, and fond of, eafily to quit it in favour of the Adversary; and # overweening Opinion of their Parts and Capacities, that is the ciple of that Stiffness of adhering to the Illusions even of when it is dress'd out in appearing Plausibility; and the Truths they so eagerly contend for, are often either loft Heats of Contention, by the Violence of Prejudice and Palla facrifie'd to the poor and wretched Vanity of popular App For these Reasons, I by no means insist upon the Way of Dipu possibly impracticable, especially since we know of no proper for fince the ceasing of Miracles by the Power of the Holy gloria

As I make it my Happiness to have been born and educated in the Commuthe Establish'd Church of England, and in which I hope to utiful and fincerely affectionate Son, I do exhort 'em in the of our Lord Jesus Christ, by whose Merits we hope all to that they will feriously take into their Consideration what offer'd to 'em, purely for the Glory of God, the Honour of irch, and the Good of the Publick.

Men Minds seem inflexibly stiff to their Opinions, have been often and cajoll'd out of 'em by the Sweetness of a civil and ra-Conversation, which they were never to be bully'd out of Rigour and Sourness of an imperious or ill natur'd one; and much sooner prevail'd with to quit an Obstinacy sounded ipon Prejudice and Tyranny of an unhappy Education, than hvictions of Reason, when they see the Means of Candor icerity made use of to open their Eyes to Errors, which possiy have been confirm'd and rooted in 'em, by the former Vioand Uncharitableness of such as they might have Reason to their Enemies; they are apt to believe that such Men can intend 'em any real Good, who treat 'em with a Bitterness it utterly incompatible with the peaceable and beneficent Puthe Christian Religion; for when once we conceive a Jeawhether founded upon Reason or Justice, it imports little of s pretend to do us good Offices, we are but too inclinable to e that it is rather out of Design of some private Interest or Ade to themselves, or to fool and expose us, than any sincere

Intention of doing us any real Service; and therefore to work fectually upon the Mind of another, 'tis necessary first to establish firm Reputation of our own Honesty and Sincerity, and when that Point is gain'd, 'tis no difficult Thing for a prudent ander rienc'd Man to bend him which way he pleases. 'Tis much eafy to lead than drive Men, and they must be either ignorant harden'd to an Excess of Brutality, who will obstinately resid Charms of good Nature, animated by Reason and good Sense, in Hands of a Man who has the Address seasonably and artfully to ploy 'em. Treat their Ministers, who are your Fellow-Labourg the Vineyard, under the same Character of Servants to our and Master Jesus Christ, tho' under different Denominations, that Civility and Respect that is due to 'em from Gentlemen pr fing the same Divine Religion. The Advantages you are in Pol on of in the National Church, under the Favour and Counten of the Laws, give you no Authority to infult, reproach, or spitefully use those who are without 'em; and it is ever a Sign a mean and narrow Spirit to evil intreat our Brethren, because bly it may be in our Power to do fo, especially if there be not Motive to it than Prejudice or Passion, which, as they are the proach of every ordinary Man's Character, are more particular of those, who by their Distinction, are expected, and oughts of fair Example of good Life to others: Live with 'em as a Brethren who are travelling to one End, tho' by different Ro in a Commerce of Charity, and all other Christian Vertues; a you believe 'em in Errors, convince and redress 'em by such l as are permitted you by the most pure and excellent Religion profess; otherwise you will but the further confirm'em; for the Truth be always to be defended, yet it is of a Nature not to to be defended by a rude and unbecoming Violence; it will all hurt the Cause, and never fails to lose the Friend. 'Tis a ten Reflection to make, when by fuch a Proceeding you not only an Enemy, but run the Hazard of lofing a Soul; for which know you shall one Day be certainly accountable, when that and Precipitation, or want of Christian Charity, under the milla Notion of Zeal, which may have been the Occasion of it, when the occasion occasion is the occasion occasion. fo far from extenuating, that they shall doubly aggravate the before a just and dreadful Judge, who is not to be paid with in lous Excuses.

Importance to the publick Good; the Force of Error, howinveterate, would by Degrees begin to vanish before the powerful Influence of a Truth they may have long been n Ignorance of; nor if they were once convinced in their ience, is it at all probable that the Profits and Emoluments ir Assemblies, which are not extraordinary, would prevail them beyond the just Expectation of much greater they might ably hope and pretend to from a fincere and thorough Conforo the Establish'd Church. However uprightly a Man may enur to discharge the Duties of his Profession out of a Principle onscience, private Interest will always have its Weight, and will ever be something of the Man, that will mingle with haracter of the Divine: nor shall he fail the less to be reputed Man, who conscientiously acquits himself well in his Station, honestly pursues his Interest, whilst it prevails not with him iny thing unworthy his Character. Exceed them in Learning ue Piety, and they will respect and venerate you, tho' they not come over and imitate you: Thus you shall be justify'd God and Man, and they left without Excuse. 'Tis no unful Step you shall have made, when you have establish'd an on amongst'em, that at least you deserve to be imitated; and fuch Conviction, they shall still continue obstinate in their tion, they will feem to render themselves unworthy your Care, or to become Members of your excellent Church, yet pity'em, but by no means to revile or evil intreat'em; for Re-union must be the Work of Time, and possibly only of a infinite and Almighty; yet be not wanting on your parts in oplication of the proper Means, for God only, who is capafearching into the most dark and secret Recesses of the Heart , can make 'em to be all of one Mind in his House; yet as mot dive into, or fathom the Bottomless Abyss of his eternal s, ye ought not to despair, but that in his good Time he may, dden Turn and Disposition of an all wise Providence, crown indeavours with a Success which you could not foresee, and you may think you have least Reason to expect it, since he has d to be with, and Assistant to his Church, to the End of the ; be constant, be vigilant, and persevere. stain a constant friendly Intercourse with 'em in all the cours' nd engaging Offices of Civil Life, and you will lay Obligapon'em to esteem and reverence you, or justly bring upon lves the Reproach of being the most ingrateful and most obiti-Mankind: Let 'em be convinc'd that you no longer hate Dissenters, and you will infensibly engage them into a more able Opinion of your Communion. There are engaging s in a sweet, affable and gentle Behaviour, which cannot be elisted; there is a secret fort of Magick in good Nature and Manners, which imperceptibly finds a Way and Admittance e Heart, that both softens the Asperities and natural Rug-s of Temper, and calms the Violence and Impetuosity of the s; and Truth convey'd into 'em in such Dispositions, by these

foft, infinuating and gentle Means, always carries an Influence and Efficacy with it, that no stubborn Prejudice, or savage Wilfulness can long withstand. The Consciences of Men are inflexible by Force and Constraint; Torments may get the better of Nature, but Nothing can compell the Will; Violence may indeed confirming Men into the Appearances of Complyance, but 'tis only Truth, when attended with Meekness, Humility, and a generous Affa. bility, the highest and most amiable Vertues of pure keligion, that can as irrefiftibly, as infenfibly, conquer and fubdue the Heart. Vie with 'em in your Vigilance, your Industry, and your indefail. gable Application; let 'em not run away with the Glory of being more careful and tender of their Flocks than you are; the World is but too much convinc'd, that Remissness or Carelesness has been the Occasion of losing-more People from your Church, than the Preachings and Reasonings of the other. You need not be told how to redrefs the Grievance; fatisfy 'em that on your part then shall be Nothing wanting in a tender and fatherly Care of the Conscience, and they will chearfully return to you, and in good Company too. This will establish your Reputation with all Mea who have any Regard for Vertue or Religion; you will have the secret Satisfaction of doing Good, which of all others in the World is the sweetest Entertainment to the Mind of an hone Man; you will find the delicious Repose of your own Conscience m your Labours for the Peace and Happiness of that of other you shall regain and conserve the perpetual Esteem and Venen tion you have forfeited, in the Blessings of your own People, as the Admiration of all others; and what is the Complement all, you cannot fail of the Favour and Protection of the God you ferve, and whose Glory you endeavour to promote, but remember too that he is a jealous God, and will not be mock'd.

In a Word, Let your Lights so shine before Men, that they me see your good Works, and glorifie your Father which is in Heave Add to all the Christian Vertues, necessary to complear and a belish your holy Character, the fair Example of a truly pious a religious Life, as that which is most glorious to you, advantaged to Mankind, and acceptable to the God you adore; Men more easily led aftray by the fatal Influence of a bad Example than reduced by the Power and Efficacy of the Precept; for by Corruption of their Nature they more easily slide into a crimm Gratification of their Sences in the Profusions of present Pleasura which so agreeably tickle and flatter the Inclinations, whilf Mind is with Difficulty brought to be sensible of the Dangers of tequent to 'em, because they are at a distance; let your Demen our be such, that the World may believe that the Profession Religion may appear rather to have been your Choice, the the Effect of Compulsion, or of the Consideration of private terest; for they, who are influenc'd only by the latter, very rate if ever, come up to the Dignity and Perfection of their Character and he that does the Duty of it, only because he is oblig'd to it, will as rarely prevail with himfelf to do as much as he ough nd

for if a Man's Heart be not really touch'd with the veritable Sense and Impulse of his Religion, as all his best Endeavours will be but faint and languishing, 'tis more than probable they will be but little successful, and at best may terminate but in a blameable Lukewarmness, or a plausible well-gilded Hypocrify; but when he has a true Notion of the Importance and glorious Defign of his Function and Commission, and acts upon the Noble and Geneous Principle of doing Good to Mankind, every Thing that is reat and commendable above the common pitch of ordinary Perormances may be expected from him; the Work of God will rosper in his Hands; Nothing can resist the Power of the Spirit hat animates him; there is a Cælestial Fire in his Heart, that vithout destroying gently melts down Error and Obstinacy into he Softnesses of Truth and Conviction; a noble Zeal that warms and animates, that ingages and attracts, but never hurts or comells; such a Man's pious Labours are ever their own best Reward this World, and are certain of a better in the next; he feeks o Dignity, tho' he deserves it, and to him the Merit of deservg is in the place of Possession, and when 'tis offer'd it comes the Gift of God, and more the Recompence of his Vertue, than he Effect of Application, or the Interest of Friends, which he will fure never to desecrate to the base and vile purposes of the Vorld. Let an unaffected Difinterestedness be the Rule of all the ctions of Life, except in what relates to the Glory of God and e Good of Mankind, which is the End of all Religion, to which ith a rational well-understood Zeal continue immoveably fix'd, ore because you are convinc'd of the Truth and Divinity of it, an Custom; for 'tis but an ungodly fort of Traffick Men make, hen they don't firmly believe and practife that of which they etend to make a Profession, and as the means of carrying it on e Hypocrify or Atheism, the Returns are Confusion, Infamy and unishment.

Be inviolable Observers of the strict Rules of Moral Vertue d true Honour, the first is but the continual Disposition and gerness of doing universal Good to Mankind, and the latter but other Name for Conscience: Live in Peace and Union with one other, rather out of a Sense of Duty, and the Effect of your elief of your Religion, than any civil Obligation, or Confidetion of Policy; Love your Neighbours as your selves, not only cause it is commanded, but as the indelible Evidence of a noble d generous good Nature; Avoid all unnatural Aversions and reach of Charity, without which all other Vertues, political or ligious, are but a dead Letter, as the fatal Rock on which your wn Salvation may be lost, and that of others indanger'd; and finish all, love even your Enemies, or if that be a Persection of o much Difficulty for Human Vertue to attain to in this State of eakness and Frailty, we are not forbid to soften the Asperity and gour of a Command, which to meer Flesh and Blood seems imacticable, by resolving never to esteem or recken any Man lo; errify no fort of Men with your Hatred for Difference in Opi-G 2 mions"

nions, but foften 'em with your Compassion; retrieve 'em by the Power and Force of a masculine, but obliging Reason, or by the Effects of an engaging good Nature; court and win 'em into your Communion, but do not fright or compell 'em; you may possibly bend their Conscience, but you can never force it; at best you will not in Effect make real Converts, tho' in Appearance you may Conformists; if by the Authority of Laws, which God forbid, you should again attempt to constrain 'em, you will have only the Advantage of gaining Hypocrites, who will worship God in your Way, only as the poor Indians do the Devil, for Fear; you may indeed increase your Numbers, but it will not be with Friends, and if ever Occasion offers, the Resentments of their ill Usage will infallibly create you fo many dangerous and revengeful Ene. mies; abandon all Thoughts of it, as you value the Glory of God, the Welfare of his Church, and the Good and Happiness of your Country, and turn your Steps only into the Paths of Peace. I an very far from prefuming to give you Measures; I pretend not to prescribe; I only infinuate my Advice, tis honestly meant, rested and practife; God will confecrate the pious Intentions of fo Christian a Design with a Success that shall render you the Blessing of your own Age, and the Wonder and Imitation of all those m come; at least you will have the Satisfaction of having left No thing undone on your parts, towards the accomplishing so great, h glorious and beneficent a Work, as will convince all good Men that you will merit to be esteem'd the most worthy and venerable Professors of the most pure and excellent Church and Religion in the Universe. Consider, try, and prosper.

A Discourse of this Nature seasonably leads me to answer ou wife Author's Challenge to us, what fort of Moderation 'tis that we pretend so much to; and I tell him and all his High-Churd Proselites, that it is solely that very Christian Vertue, that an in spir'd Apostle commands us should be known to all Men. Golden Mean between the Fierceness and Enthusiasms of Bigoty and the Infecurity that naturally refults from too much Negligena and Indifference; a generous Heat that warms us into a vigorous Defence of our Religion and Liberties, without calling down for Fire from Heaven to confound and destroy our Fellow-Creature, out of a false Notion of their being our Enemies; that softens the Fire of a mistaken and intemperate Zeal into a just and rational Concern for our Fellow-Subjects; that animates us to a Defence ! their Persons, Estates and Liberties, which by the Laws they enjoy in common with our felves, without indulging, much less be coming Advocates of their Errors; that obliges us to observe the common Offices of Humanity and Christian Charity to such of our Brethren, as may differ from us in Opinions, and treat 'em as Gentlemen, as Friends and Relations, tho' they may not conform themselves to all the Measures of our Discipline; 'tis besides the Obligation of a Divine Command, the Refult of good Nature and good Manners, refin'd by the powerful Influence of a Divint Charity, that expresly forbids to treat Men with Cruelty, Scott

Contempt, who mean us no Harm, or can never have it in their wer to execute, if they did; which prevents us from framing imerical Dangers in our Brains to the Prejudice of our Church, ly to have a Handle to justify our Rigour and Severity, or deee Punishments for Crimes in Men, which it is impossible they ould ever have the Power to commit, tho' they had the Will; at will always excite our utmost Vigilance and Sollicitude in Deace of our own Church and manner of Worship, without perseting or oppressing those who cannot conform to 'em, at least I they give us visible Apprehensions of real Dangers design'd ainst'em, founded upon something better than the Dreams of a dman, and a profess'd Enemy; and even in that if I mistake , that divine and beneficient Charity, which is the Perfection Complement of the Religion we profess, gives us Leave by Prudence and Courage to prevent their Deligns, or let loose Justice of the Laws upon 'em for their Punishment, without dling a Fire of Persecution to over-whelm and destroy them. eet with no Authority in my Bible, but know not what there y be in those of the High Church Edition (and which we but well know is the Practice of another, to which she bears a y near Relation,) to warrant the inhuman and unchristian Arnents of Fire and Faggot; in a Word 'tis that very Moderawhich we have, and they want, and their High-Church a feet Stranger to, in Principle, or Practice; it is this Vertue of deration which we are proud to fay we do, and I hope ever I profess, and which we think our selves expresly oblig'd to ivate and exert towards all Mankind, and especially to our thren, who agree with us in all the fundamental and essential icles of our common Religion, tho' they may unhappily differ n us in Things of themselves indifferent and Matter of Form. Tis with a marvellous and furprizing Confidence he tells the rld of the Toleration his High-Church had granted 'em; for are fure the World is pretty well satisfy'd, that the happy Sety the Dissenters at present, and we hope ever shall, live under he Favour of that righteous and equitable Law, is entirely owto the Power and Numbers of those moderate Spirits of the v. Every Body knows with what Intention that Toleration indulg'd 'em in King James's Reign, only, as has been faid, Lure to inveigle 'em into the pernicious Deligns of the Court, was but precarious; but that granted 'em by our Glorious King liam has the Force of a fundamental and perpetual Law; and he Design of the High-Church is to establish a Pretender edud in Popery and French Maxims, if this should ever be effected, ch the great God forbid, the Diffenters very well know they uld then have but too much Reason to bewail their Insecurity, e the High-Church of France has given a notable Instance in own Memories, of their Kindness to Dissenters, and their hsul Observance of fundamental Laws in their Favour, by the mous Revocation (if I may speak so) of the famous irrevole Edict of Nantes; and our Diffenters at Home are but too

fure of the same Treatment from a Prince of the same Religion and Policy: Nay, 'tis evident already, that our Author and all others of his Principles and Defigns endeavour as much as lies in their Power to elude the Force, and deprive 'em of the Benefit and Protection of that Law, by their incessant Railing and contemptuous Usage of 'em; for 'tis next to no legal Security, when Men are not permitted to enjoy what they have in Peace and Tranquility all the Noise and Clamours daily thunder'd out against 'em by the thery Spirits from their Pulpits and Writings is only to render 'en odious and suspected to the Generality of the Nation, which is the first necessary Step towards repealing it; for it is no difficult matter to prevail with the Legislature to deprive Men of the Be nefit of a Law made in their Favour, if they can be once persuade that they no longer deserve it. It could never have entred in the Heart of any but a Fool or Lunatick, or one corrupted to the last Degree, to impute to Moderation, which is a Noble and 6 nerous Vertue, the base Effects of neglecting or abandoning to Interests and Security of our Church; such a Practice in old hour English is no other than a villainous Treachery and Cowardin neither of which I hope shall ever be found the Partage of moderate Low-Church-Men, or have any Relation or Affinity any Vertue that can contribute to the Character of a brave, a w an honest, and a valiant People in general; how far they are certain Embellishments of the Partisans of High-Church, I h have Occasion hereafter to enquire, for the Morals and Philosophia of that famous Distinction are all of a Piece with their Diving He and his Partisans may reproach the Dissenters as much as the please with the Share they had in the late unnatural Rebellion, a Diforders of this Nation after Forty one; after what I have alread faid I have no Concern to excuse or defend em; but I am proconfident, that the Dissenters will hardly forget the very obligations. and charitable Treatment they receiv'd from High-Church and Principles in the succeeding Reign, when they had for the part the Power in their Hands, as an infallible Earnest and G of their future good Nature and Inclinations, if ever they obtain what they are driving at, that is the ingrossing the same Pow of the Nation into their Hands again.

The last Thing that I shall take notice of, that seems material the wonderful concern of our Author for the Provisions that we so frequently urg'd and call'd for, (but were as often neglected by the Friends, as he calls 'em, of the Nation, for the publick serity of the State and Church, against the Designs and Attempts the Papists amongst us, whilst both Houses of Parliament seems be in a fort of Lethargy and wanting in their Care and Vigilation for 'em, at a Time when the greater Power and Numbers of the is pleas'd to honour with the Title of Fanaticks made it founds to apprehend them as the most dangerous Enemies of both this Man had not been in a lamentable Manner out of his Washe would have been apt to think, that the Union of these very paticks with the Church of England wou'd have added a wonder.

1 Strength to the Barrier betwixt us and Popery, fince we are fure at they think it as much their Interest, as we do ours, to use all e Means in our Power to oppole the re-establishment of Popery, hich can never be done but upon the certain Extirpation of both; or wou'd he have made so violent and insolent a Reflection upon ofe two honourable Houses neglecting the safety of the Nation, hen any real Danger was imminent, without supposing 'em comos'd of as great Madmen or Traitors as himself; but we must acnowledge that besides this great Politician's Opinion upon this Artle at that Time, his Disciples have ever fince exactly copy'd after e Original of so great a Master; for in all their Clamours of anger to the Church we hear not one Syllable of any from the oman Catholicks, poor, harmless, inoffensive People, and our very od Friends; but our Dissenters are such ungodly, uncharitable, d terrible Enemys, that there is no Mercy, no Quarter for the or distress'd Church of England from their Hands; 'tho there is English Man in his Sences who does not well know, that at this ime of Day there is Ten Thousand Times more Danger from ome and France, in Conjunction with our Domestick Catholicks, d thole more numerous ones of a neighbouring Nation, than from eneva, and all the other Protestant Powers of Europe, even with e Affistance of our Dissenters at Home: To follow him thro'all the etours and Flourishes of a virulent and malicious Wit, with which plausibly glosses over the most palpable Falsehoods, wou'd be th to show that I have Time to squander away upon sophistical rifles, and to give a fort of Weight and Merit to the Affected Subties of a Performance, which in effect has none. It is by no leans a fair and commendable Proceeding in him to fix the Opions of private Men of any Perswasion in their Writings, as the niverfal and uncontroverted Sentiments of the whole Community: Ve do not refuse to acknowledge with him, that many of the issenting Authors have advanc'd to the Publick Doctrines and finciples not only dangerous but destructive to a Government, tablish'd after the Manner of ours; and we as heartily and strewoully oppose and detest 'em, as he or any other High-Churchman the Kingdom; but I will be bold to affirm, and to prove too, at if amongst their Writers there are to be found many Tenets angerous to our establish'd Constitution, there are amongst those f the High-Church (which we are heartily asham'd of, and hope hey will be so too in Time) that are not only infinitely more perniious but absolutely destructive of it; for if the Opinions of the forher favour of the Republick, those of the latter tend directly to the stablishment of 'em absolute Tyranny; and of the two it will not e difficult for any People accustom'd to Liberty which to choose; nd I challenge him or any Man of his Faction to produce one fingle nstance of any Community in Europe of any Figure or Consideraion, nay or in the whole World, that is purely democratical; for hat is the terrible bugbear Notion with which he and his Disciles pretend to frighten us into a Belief of, as often as they talk of a Common-Wealth; as if the Diffenters defign'd to change the whole ancient Form of our Government from what it ever has been and reduce it into the fole Hands and Power of the People: On Government is originally compos'd as all the other great and notable ones in Europe, of the Three simple Species, the Regal, the Aristo cratical, and Democratick; or to speak English for the better Infor. mation of those that do not understand hard Words, of King, Lord and Commons, whose respective Proportions of Prerogative, Power and Liberties, frame the Constitution of the noblest and best modelli Government under the Sun; and in this Sense it is already what we may without Offence to any, but one fort of Men amongst u affirm it to be a Common-Wealth, and hope it shall continue for the End of the World, in spight both of its Democratical Enemies if there be any such, which is to be doubted, or High-Church one the only Abettors of absolute and arbitrary Monarchy, of which we are very certain there are but too great Numbers. But in poling that the whole Form of the present Government were in tirely to be chang'd; there is no Man who loves his Country and the Liberty he was born in, wou'd not be satisfy'd rather to see chang'd into any model of Government than that of an absolut arbitrary Tyranny (for all fuch Monarchs are Tyrants) wherea Things should be govern'd only by the Arbitrament and single Wil of the Prince; for no other Species of Government can possibly ful fift with our Laws, which are all calculated for legal and limite Monarchy; and those Laws are equally and naturally the Secum of Mens Lives, Estates and Liberties, in which the good of the Publick consists; whereas, when the sole Will of the Prince is the only rule of his Actions, a People may eternally be expos'd to the Caprices and Excesses of the Fool, the Wicked, and the Madmat as often as such a one shall happen to be upon the Throne; mud good may it do High-Church with their Idol, absolute Monard for as we are humbly contented and dispos'd to prefer any Condition of Life to that of Slavery, which I shall prove in its proper Placen be the undeniable Consequence of their Principles and Doctrines in the mean while 'tis in this one Thing only that we can agree with their Friend the Author, that the Church of England is indeed in the extreamest Danger, but that it is infinitely more so from Pa pifts, Jacobites, and High-Churchmen, than from the Dissenters. 'Tistrue that the Roman Catholicks of this Nation are too incomfiderable a body of Men to apprehend from 'em any eminent of remarkable Danger to the State, or confequently to the Church, to whilst the one is safe, the other will always be so; where by the Church I wou'd be understood to mean the pure Protestant Religion, as by the Piety and Wisdom of the Reformers and the Legislature is made national, and as such establish'd by our Laws; nor were it at all be wonder'd at, that a People born and bred up in the Principles and Communion of the Church of Rome, shou'd not only de fire, but imploy their utmost Efforts to restore and continue the Go vernment of these Kingdoms in the Hands of a Prince of their own Perswasion, as the only infallible Way to re-establish a Religion, of the Truth and Antiquity of which they feem to be throughly perswaded,

oughly waded, rswaded, and from which they look upon us as Diffenters: as gotry and Superstition are the inseperable Attendants on that ligion, 'tis no new or surprising Thing to see its Professors sacritheir Lives and Fortunes for the Advancement and Propagation it; and if the Roman Catholicks in England shou'd be so far innated as to hazard their Lives and Fortunes in fo dangerous and nicious an Attempt, as the Re-establishment of their belov'd Mor-Church, 'tho it were not much to be wonder'd at, they canbut be sensible that they shall undoubtedly in the End pay the nalty of their Folly and Madness; since 'tis absolutely impossible on their own Fund and Numbers, and from what is past they y believe, nor upon that of others, to depend upon a Success, ich never can happen but upon the entire Extirpation of the nanal Religion and the establish'd Government; nor even in such Attempt, however unlikely to fucceed, wou'd they be wholly without some Appearance of Excuse from the very Principles Necessity of their Perswasion, which makes all Attempts for Honour and Interests of the Church of Rome in the highest Demeritorious. But it is beyond Wonder surprizing, to see d under the happy Influence of a more pure and free Religion, t exercises no spiritual Tyranny over the Consciences of Men, exacts any blind Obedience under pain of Damnation to the amands of defigning knavish Priests, or implicit Faith, the Slavery Fools, to give into all the shameless Illusions of Men, who are in introducing the Doctrines of the most impure and corrupt urch in the Universe: To see English Gentlemen, whose Birthit is Liberty, who to the Advantages of Birth and Religion enthe Bleffing of noble and eminent Estates and Fortunes, purs'd by the Blood and Sweat of their generous Ancestors, revn'd for their Wisdom, Piety and Courage, in throwing off the ranny of Rome, insupportable to a wife and valiant Nation, beed with Notions that in all their Tendency point directly to the in and Destruction of the Peace, the Honour and Welfare of ir Country, Religionand Liberties: This is, I say indeed, of all tuations the most unaccountable, and leaves 'em of all Men most inexcusable, and least worthy the Blessing they enjoy. et is there something behind much more wonderful, to see n who are separated from the rest, and devoted to the more pediate Offices of their Holy Religion, thro' whose Hands are ister'd to us the most solemn and sacred Misteries of Christianity, ofe Learning ought to furnish their Understanding with distinct evident Ideas of the Divine Truths they profess, as far at least human Reason is capable of; whose Piety ought to be of eternal ample to lead us into the Paths of Peace, and Union, and Cha-; whose Vigilance and Penetration ought incessantly to be imy'd in the Discovery of Errors, as their Courage and Integrity to ugn and expose 'em; for such Men so shamefully to forget their aracter, the Importance of their Charge and Function, and all re both of their Faith and Country, to erect their Hay and Stub-

ble. Delusions of their own perverted Hearts upon the Foundation of the most pure Religion, and foist such Doctrines upon the Church as genuine, which are not only a Difgrace to Nature, Re fon, or common Sense, but tarnishes whatever there is of real Luft in her; for these to be the principal if not only Disturbers of the publick Peace, which of all Mankind they are under the greate Obligations to cultivate and preserve, to divide and ruffle the Unit and harmonious Concord of a Church they ought to dye to support and maintain; to break thro' all the Rules of common Humanin and the more facred Obligations of Christian Charity, and tears devour one another even of the same Communion, if they happen to differ in their Sentiments with a Rage and Fury more become Bacchanals than Profesfors of the Christian Faith; this I say present to our Eyes a woful Scene of something our Language wants Won to express; yet the Nations are but too apparently convinc'd, the all the Confusions and Disorders that turmoil 'em, all the unhan Distinctions and Divisions that set Brother against Brother, the against the Father, and the Wife aganst the Husband, forgett the facred Obligations of Nature, Friendship and Relation, de their Source from this corrupted Fountain of the High-Chi Priesthood, either through the Ignorance of some who are but Supple Tools of craftier designing Knaves, or wickeder Perverse and Corruption of others, who, acting against the Lights of & and Reason, prostitute both their Judgment and Conscience to base and servile Drudgery of a Faction, conspiring the Ruinb of their Country and Religion; these are the Men who tally hate the Diffenter, and court the Papift; a Resemblance Nearness of Principles and Doctrines easily form an Union Agreement of Minds and Practice to carry on great and danger Designs; and it is little to be doubted that where there is sud Simpathy and Parity of Morals, there will be no great Difficulty reconcile and unite Men in the Profession of the same Religion; as it is Nonsence to believe that the Papists can ever have any Co plaifance for us or our Church, it is natural enough to conclu that these Men will not find much Trouble or Difficulty to pres with themselves in a favourable Juncture to return into the Bo of that, which they are taking so much Pains to re-establish, from which by their present Conduct one cannot but believe the think they have unjustly separated.

God forbid that I shou'd lay this heavy Imputation upon the who Body of the Clergy, even of those who make it their Pridea Glory to be distinguish'd by their Zeal and Attachment to Hig Church; there are I doubt not even of those great Numbers Men of Piety and Learning, as well as Probity and Love for the Country; but there are among the Herd both the ignorant and corrupt: 'Tis certain that the wisest and best of Men may be led the Errors and salse Ideas of Things, by the violent Impulse of an in perious and mistaken Zeal, or suffer themselves to be imposed on the Crast and superiour Subtlety of Men in Power, of whose low grity and upright Intentions for the Publick they may have so

y'd a very good Opinion; yet whether fuch Men owe their Des on to a Default of Judgment, or a too easy and overweening dulity, the ill Consequences to their Country are still the same, with this Difference in Respect to each, that if a willful Perverbe infinitely the most blameable, Ignorance is always inexcufable a Clergyman, who undertakes the difficult Task of instructing ers; on the other hand we are convinc'd past a Possibility of Doubt, t amongst the more moderate or Low-Churchmen there are far ater Numbers, I mean in Proportion, whose Vertue, Piety, and urage are inflexible to all the Charms of Temptations that usually rupt Men by the Sweetness and Advantages of their Allurements, to the Menaces, the Disgrace, or Discouragements they lye under m the present Power of their Enemies; Men who are truly touch'd th a just but delicate Sense of their Religion, and of an invincible mness and Constancy in their Love to their Country, whose Inrity and good Sense will never permit 'em to broach or divulge inions to the Prejudice or Dishonour of the one, or ingage mselves in the villanous Designs, for Interest or Preferment, of raying or inflaving the other. There is not a Man alive who a more real Esteem and even Veneration for an honest, virtuous, igious and a learned Clergyman, who understands the Merit of Character, and who exerts himself with Courage and Integrity perform the Important Duties of it, in as perfect a Manner as the ailties of human Nature will permit, (for they are all but Men) in I have: But I cannot have so much Complaisance for an Ignoit, a Coward, a Libertine, or a Betrayer of his Country, as to ntinue that Esteem or Veneration for the bare Sake of his Coat Order, to which he is a Scandal; for I shall always believe and clare such a one to be a Knave or a Traytor, and of each fort of Mankind the most worthless and contemptible, whether he be the High or Low-Church; I wish with all my Heart I cou'd say neet with as much Difficulty in making good my Charge against former, as I shall Ease in defending the Cause of the latter, nich I shall leave to the Judgment and Determination of all such shall read and weigh my Reasons in the Pursuit of this Discourse; Doctrines and the Principles of the one unavoidably tending in ir natural Consequences to the Corruption of the Purity of the ablish'd Religion, and utter Subversion of the present establish'd overnment; those of the other exactly conformable to the genuine rit and Sense of the holy Scriptures, and equally calculated and apted to preserve our original Constitution, both as to the Prerotive of the Prince and the Liberty of the Subject, confirm'd to us on the Foot and Principles of the late happy and glorious Revolun; God grant that our Enemies may not lay us under the fatal ecessity of bringing about another, which it is more than probae will never be effected, but upon the entire Ruin and Extirpation one of the contending Parties; and fince there are those amongst s, as with so base an Ingratitude rellish the Blessing of that which as evidently the miraculous Work of a divine Providence, ever vatchful for the good of these Nations, 'tis not improbable but that the same Providence may for that black Sin deliver us over to fuffer the Punishment of our Infatuation, in the Confusions and Bloodshed that may necessarily attend the Accomplishment

But because the Words Revolution, and Principles of the Revol lution, are in every one's Mouth of each Party, and yet gree Numbers of both may be ignorant of the Meaning and Import 'em (this Piece being principally defign'd for the Information of fuch, whose want of Learning and Knowledge of the true Interes of their Country, or whose Vocation may either hinder, or real der unapt for Inquiries of this Nature, of how great Importance foever to 'em at this Juncture) I shall with much Plainness and Sincerity lay before their Eyes both the Nature and Means of the late notable and glorious Revolution, and the rational Principles of which it was grounded and brought to Conclusion, to the inestina ble Benefit of these Nations. In order to which, I think it first a cellary to premile, and lay down the State and Condition they we reduc'd to, and which made it of the last Necessity to take the Measures they did, to secure their present Happiness, and to tran mit it to their latest Posterity: In which Design I shall endeavou to be brief, distinct and clear, both because much need not be si on the Subject to the present Generation, many Thousands being still alive who were Actors or Witnesses of it; and because there no Doubt to be made but that Care will be taken to recommend in its proper Colours to all succeeding Ones, as well for their Wow der, as Imitation: And as I am not writing the Life or Historya King Fames II. I shall only briefly recapitulate the Heads of the Reasons, founded upon undeniable Matters of Fact, that prevail with 'em not only to banish, but for ever to exclude him, and h reputed Children, from all Pretensions to the Crown. It were the Business of an Historian to relate by what Principles, and by what Management the good People of these Nations were in the Times Charles II. already dispos'd to receive the Impressions necessary carry on the Defign of his Brother James, Duke of York. We'll ry well know that the fawning Sycophant High-Church Priests at vanc'd their infamous Doctrines of unlimited Passive-Obedience, and that of the Divine Right of Kings unaccountable for their Adian to any Power upon Earth, so necessary to inslave a free and not People: They had in that Reign all the Credit at Court, which! ever the Soil where such Vermin thrive best, and all the most em · nent Dignities in the Church, which they fail'd not inceffantly employ to the Dishonour and Ruin of the Nation. The ignomination ous Treaty with France, for the Subversion of the Protestant Release gion and Liberties of Europe, and more immediately one of the principal Supports of 'em, the Dutch, shall remain an eternal Month ment of the Difgrace and Infamy of the Tory Ministry, who contrived and effected it; neither shall it ever be forgotten, to what fort of Men and Profession the Miscarriage of the Bill of Exclifion was entirely owing, which in all Probability, by the Blefing of God, would have prevented the Dangers that were ready to overwhelm ver

whelm both State and Church, under the Administration of a ce against whom it was intended. So eternally true it is, that close Engagements and Alliances with France, our professed my, and Administration of High-Church Ministries, of different ciples from those of our Original Constitution, must be ever onourable and pernicious to the true Interest and Happiness of Nations. But King Charles, whose Wit and excellent Parts led him to understand, and who, I may say, perfectly underevery thing but his own and the Kingdoms true Interest. th can no longer subsist than they are inseparable, had too fresh in Memory the Miseries he had suffer'd in a long Banishment of Years, was not willing to run the Hazard of being forc'd and to wander, and fuffer the like in another. The Ease and ures of a Crown, and the Charms of a voluptuous Life, preabove the Consideration of the Designs of his Brother and Tory Faction, who were furiously carrying on the laudable Prof absolute and arbitrary Power. This made 'em think that this -natur'd Prince, who could not be wrought upon to fall in all the Violence of their Measures, was too long liv'd; they all the Reason in the World to hope for better Success under head-strong Bigotry of a Prince, who had neither his good or good Nature, and who was himself infatuated, and ght the People fo too, with the flavish High-Church Doctrines livine Right and Passive-Obedience, as the most opposite and lible Dispositions towards the introducing the Despotick Power much affected, to bring Three happy and free Protestant Na-under the Bondage of Popery and Slavery. What execrable is were made use of to shorten a Royal Life, that stood in the of so fatal a Design, are as well known to the World, as that Nation's Safety, during his Reign, was entirely owing to the and generous Vertue and Courage of the Whigs, who as ely, as boldly, oppos'd him and his Tories, whilst he was yet Duke of York.

at no fooner he became in Possession of the Crown, but the was thrown off, and he, who but a little before it was made on by his Tory Friends to fay he was a Papist, very gratefully em the Lye, and openly profes'd himself one; and as such being ed to act under the Influence and by the Direction of the Church Court of Rome, began as openly to put in Practice the Measures had been concerted to introduce Popery and Slavery, against andamental Laws and Liberties of the Kingdom. As he was of dvanced Age, Father Petre, at the Head of our fingular good ads the Jesuits, and their very near and dear Relations the Jaes and High-Church-Men, hurry'd him on to those violent hels that prov'd his Destruction; for tho' a speedy and vigorous ution be the Life of any great Design, Precipitation always and renders it abortive; yet they too well understood the rtance of so favourable a Conjuncture, which they had so long ed for, and relying upon the Dispositions they thought the le under, by the Doctrines of their mercenary Tools of the High-Church Priesthood, they were resolv'd to hazard all thin rather than lose it. This engag'd 'em to put this violent bigon Prince, in the first Steps of his Reign, upon Measures that entire loft him what remain'd of the Affections and Regards of his Si jects, who had any real Concern either for their Country or Re gion; for a Prince who voluntarily profitutes his Royal Worda Honour, which ought ever to be facred and inviolable, will h it impossible to preserve that Respect and Fidelity that a free Pen willingly pay to such as keep up the Reputation of 'em: These absolutely forfeited in a barefac'd and open Violation of his Coro tion-Oath, which, indeed, as a Papist, it was impossible he sho maintain; in the first Clause of which he swears to keep the Chu of God, the Clergy and People in Peace and Concord in God, wh cannot rationally be understood of any other Church or Cler but those made National by a legal Authority; tho we are no Sm gers to the shameless Arts of Equivocation and mental Reservation of his own Communion, by which they pretend to elude the Fa of the most solemn Oaths and Obligations of Honour and Relig when it is for the Service and Interest of Mother-Church; by same Reason, I mean as he was a Papist, he was as much income tated to maintain the Rights and Prerogatives of the Impe Crown, as they are afferted in the Oaths of Allegiance and Su macy, in both which all Papal Power is absolutely disown'd and jected. Pursuant to this Beginning, he daily gave most evil Proofs of his Design of overturning the establish'd Laws, Rela and Liberties, and in their Place to substitute Popery and Arbit Power; this demonstrably appear'd,

First, By raising Money contrary to Law, that is without an of Parliament, in the Instance of levying the Customs and En which had been granted to his Brother during his Life, but en with it; by maintaining a Standing Army in time of Peace, presly against the Laws of the Land; by Officering that Army Papists, Subjects of a Foreign Power, in Opposition to the Laws, and the Addresses of his Parliament, to whom he made Iwer November the 9th, 1685, that the' those Officers were not lified according to the late Tests for their Employments, yet would neither expose them to Disgrace, nor himself to the Wan 'em; by his affuming a Power of dispensing with all Statute: tot Security of the Protestant Religion; by destroying in Ireland Acts of Settlement and Explanation, placing Popilh Judges upo the Benches there, and raising a formidable Army wholly of pists, for the utter Ruin and Destruction of his Protestant Subp by erecting in England a High Commission-Court for Ecclesian Affairs, to proceed with a non obstante, that is, not only with but against Law, by which the Bishop of London was suspend the President and Fellows of Magdalen College dispossessed of Freeholds, without any legal Process, because they would not, trary to their Oath, choose an unqualify'd President, tho' it is presly provided in Magna Charta, that no Man should lose Life, Limb, or Goods, but by the Law of the Land; by imprisoning hing of our Bishops, because they petitition'd him to observe the he had taken to maintain the Laws of the Kingdom; by fetup Publick Popish Mass-Houses, Schools and Monasteries, ing out four Provincial Bishops to visit England, admitting Fa-Petre, a Jesuit, and other Papists, into his Privy-Council, ing an Ambassador to Rome, and receiving a Nuncio from the , putting Papists into the Commission of the Peace all over the dom, and commissioning Popish Judges to sit upon the Bench; gnifying in his second Declaration for Liberty of Conscience. d April 7. 1688, that none ought to be employ'd under him, uch as would contribute to choose such Members of Parliament ay do their part to finish what he had begun; by declaring elf in Scotland invested with absolute Power, and that his Subought to obey him without any Reserve, tho' he had never crown'd, nor consequently taken the Coronation Oath there, could be ignorant how many of his Predecessors in that an-Kingdom had loft their Lives by the Hands of their Subjects, ndeavouring to assume such Power; and lastly, by attempting ter the Succession, by imposing a Suppositious Heir upon these doms, in Prejudice and Disherison of the Princels of Orange, Daughter, the true apparent Heir to the Crown. This is a brief pitulation of the principal Heads of that bigotted Prince's short inauspicious Reign, and which justly put the Nation, reduc'd to very brink of the Precipice, to enter into such Measures, and proper Means that God, the Laws, and Nature had left in their is, to preserve themselves, their Religion and Liberties, from mminent Destruction that was preparing to overwhelm 'em all. his noble and vigorous Resolution of afferting their indubitable its in spight of all the Opposition and Endeavours of Highch, by the general Consent and Approbation of the Kingdom, he End terminated in the Dethroning and Expulsion of King ses II. and was afterwards confirmed (and we hope forever) n Act of Parliament, declaring, That the faid King, by endeavourto subvert the Protestant Religion, and the Laws and Liberties pefe Kingdoms, did abdicate and forfeit the Government, by b the Throne became vacant; and that being fo, and no legal f appearing that the pretended Prince of Wales had any Right unto, but strong Presumptions to the contrary, it was Lawfully by the late King WILLIAM of Glorious Memory, and his al Consort, and the Succession, in case of Failure of Issue by Her, Her present Mujesty, and in Her Default of Isue, upon the Ilious House of HANOVER, being Protestants, which claims Title of Descent from the Lady Elizabeth, Daughter of our g James I. not to mention an ancient one from Maud, the Daugh. Henry II. And further, That all and every Person or Persons, is, are, or shall be reconcil'd to, or hold Communion with the rch of Rome, or shall profess the Popish Religion, or shall marry a if, shall be excluded, and be forever incapable to inherit, posses, njoy the Crown and Government of England and Ireland, and Dominions thereunto belonging, or any part of the same, or to have, use, or exercise any regal Power, Authority, or Jurisdie within the same; and in all and every such Case and Cases, the Pa ple of these Realms shall be, and are hereby absolved of their Al giance; and the said Crown and Government shall from time time descend to, and be enjoy'd by such Person or Persons, but Protestants, as should have inherited and enjoy'd the same, in case faid Person or Persons so reconcil'd, holding Communion, or profession or marrying, as aforesaid, were naturally dead. This solemn Ad the People, and the natural inherent Power they exerted in the late Glorious Revolution, which has made fuch a Noise in World, is further acknowledg'd and declar'd in the Bill of Right to be the ancient and undoubted Right of the People of In land, by the Violation of which King James abdicated, and we dethron'd, as his Predecessors Edward II. and Richard II. for same tyrannical Measures, were ferv'd beforehand, and for wh the Crown was settled, as aforesaid, in the Name of all the ple of England, in Execution of their natural and inherent Pow for as Magna Charta is not the Original of our English Libert but only a Recognition and Declaration of those they were in questionable Possession of, by immemorial Prescription deriv'd do to 'em from their Saxon Ancestors; so neither is this Bill of Rig any more than a fresh Recapitulation and further Confirmation the indisputable Rights and Privileges of the People from the I of the Great Charter to the present, and we hope shall ever tinue to 'em thro' all future Ages.

To show how a free People, upon extraordinary Cases (as in Instance before us of the Male-Administration of King 7th which gave Birth to this notable Revolution) may exert then and rational Powers for their own Security and Happiness as well that of their Posterity, without incurring the Reproach and Guil Sedition and Rebellion, even against their legitimate Prince de ting from the Ends of his Institution) is my present purpose; order to which I think it necessary to premise something of Nature and Original of civil Power and Government in gent and then descend to apply it to the Particulars of our Gircums ces and the Constitution of our own, which I shall endeavour do with what Brevity is possible, without being obscure. I not pretend to rake into the Ashes of Heylin, Filmer, and of their Disciples, the Ignorance, the Nonsence, the Absurdities, inextricable Difficulties and Contradictions of the Patriarcha, recommended in a plausible and popular Stile and Dress to an and impose on such as are capable of searching no further than Superficies of Things, have been fo irrefragably answer'd and futed by two great and honest Lovers of their Country, one which, if I may speak so, had the glorious Misfortune to lole Head by the Injustice and Violence of a Tyrannical Reign, Int the two incomparable Persons, Colonel Algernon Sidney, and Lock, that it is long ago fince the Enthusiasms of their mercent Brains have been hooted out of the Commerce of all sensible judicious Englishmen, who understand and love their Freedom

their Freedom; it were a Folly to throw away a Man's Time to pursue him thro' all his ridiculous Chimera's, and a much greater Presumption to offer at any further Confutation of 'em after the erformances of those two great and eminent Politicians and Phiplophers; and were it not that many of his Disciples of the preent Times embrace and renew his exploded Opinions with the me laudable Intentions of enslaving their Country, his Memory and Infamy might have lain undisturb'd in his Grave, 'till the Day e and all such mercenary Traitors shall receive the Reward of heir Treachery to their Country; but the Revivers of his Dorines, Opinions and Defigns, may possibly sometimes lay me uner the Necessity to mention 'em, more to expose 'em to the Conmpt and Disdain they merit, than for any Weight they carry ith 'em; for a Man, who folemnly and gravely tells us (amongst numerable other Ravings) that we are only to regard the Power the Prince, no matter how he comes by it, whether by Conest, Usurpation, or Murder, and that we are to respect him as Lord's Anointed, pay him an unconditional blind Obedience, d as fuch esteem him to be the Father of his People, deserves. her Pity and Compassion than a serious Answer, and will ke's better Figure in the Colledge of Bethlehem, than the Liry of a judicious, learned, and honest Englishman. This innous Book, the whole Design of which was only to debauch Minds of a Free People, and banter 'em out of a Sense of their perty, and lead em in the End into a blind implicit Obedience an an Absolute and Arbitrary Power, was cry'd up when it t appear'd in the World, and extoll'd to the Heavens by all those his Principles and Deligns, as a Master-piece of Politicks, and inswerable; tho' the Labours of those two excellent Persons I re mention'd have sufficiently convinc'd the World of so illa unded and ridiculous an Opinion; and tho' No body hitherto, least that I have seen, has attempted to answer 'em in Defence Filmer, and I will boldly affirm, never shall be able to do with that invincible Force of Reason with which they have coned his Whimseys, (for they don't deserve the Name of Arguits) yet there is a numerous Brood of young Filmers, who in ht of Nonsence and Absurdity are not asham'd to propagate same unaccountable Doctrines, as the most proper and expedient ans to carry on the same traiterous Purposes to the Ruin and honour of their Country; yet as I hope to advance more just rational Foundations of civil Power and Government, and ich are accommodated, and confissent with the genuine Sense Meaning of the Word of God, of Nature, and of Reason, I Il neither be asham'd or afraid with the few other, but much te learned Men before me, to advance, That it is not possible to eive that what I call and hope to prove to be the only just and onal Foundations of Civil Power should be any thing elfe than Consent of a Free and Willing People: How far I shall succeed o honest a Design I shall leave to the Judgment of every unudie'd Reader; and tho' I freely acknowledge my felf infimitely inferiour to those excellent Persons, who have gone before me in the Noble Design of afferting their Country's Honour and Freedom, yet will I be bold to maintain, that I will yield to none of them, or of those who shall come after me, in a stead and incorruptible Love for it, which no Consideration in the World shall ever prevail with me to forsake, much less betray.

'Tis evident to a Demonstration, that there is no general and positive Rule given to Mankind by God for submitting without Re ferve to the Will and Government of a fingle Person; for if then had been any such general and positive Rule, all Men must have been under an indispensable Obligation of submitting and con forming to it without murmuring, or Exception; for no huma Power can dispense with, or elude the Force of a peremptory D vine Command; and tho' the contrary Proposition has with wo derful Confidence been strenuously afferted, it neither has been nor ever can be fully prov'd from Scripture, which, as it is on the reveal'd Will of God, can alone furnish Authority to prove Affertion of that Nature; and fince this is true, there can be N thing more evident than that God left it indifferently to all Ma kind, by the Use and Means of their Reason, to frame what he of Governments they esteem'd most convenient for their respecti Good and Happiness. This is a Proposition so far from being a pugnant to the Holy Scriptures, Nature, or Reason, that I man tain 'tis the only 'one has ever been advanc'd in Relation to in Government, that can pretend to be supported by the undenian Authority of all Three; when They, who contend for the opposite Opinion, namely, That the Government of a fingle Person establish'd by a Divine Right and Commission, shall convince World purely by the Strength of better Reasons, than I shall of in the Defence of the other, I promise em, I am not wedded my Errors, and will bring a Mind to hear 'em free from Prepole fion, and shall very gratefully acknowledge my Obligation for deceiving me; but till that be fairly done, they will excuse a if I persist in my present Sentiments and Opinion, founded w the Authorities I have mentioned, viz, That the fole Consent a free and willing People is the only just and rational Foundate of all the civil Power and Governments originally in the Univen There can be but two ways conceivable how Governments can first to be establish'd in the World; the one by a positive divi Law, the other by human Reason; if by a divine and political Law from God, then the Species and Model of it would question less have been determin'd and regulated by that Law; all Natur under the Sun would have been oblig'd to have submitted conform'd to it, and there cou'd have been but one fort of it mongst Men, and that according to Filmer and his modern Die ples an absolute, despotick, and monarchical one, wherein Lives, Persons, and Estates of all Men without Controll or ception, must be subject to the Will of the Prince, which is be the sole Rule and Guide of all his Actions. enfical Opinion, but produce to us but one fingle Instance from he whole Book of God to justify and support it, and we readily, f he pleases, will fall down, and worship his fantastical Idol; but the Doctrines of Obedience to the eldest Heir of Adam in a ght Line, or a Title to absolute Dominion in any Prince in ight of Fatherhood, be Chimera's which derive no Shadow of uthority from the facred Writings rightly interpreted, or any oundation any where else, but in the Brains of Traitors hir'd to ebauch their Fellow-Subjects, and to the Slavery of their Couny; we must seek for the Original of civil Power somewhere else, at is in the other Fountain of it, human Reason; nor I think n there be a more irrefragable Argument, that there is no Auority from holy Scripture to affert the Right of an absolute Morch, or that God indeed has never prescrib'd any particular Form d Model of Government to any Nation in the World, his own ople the Jews only excepted, than that infinite Variety that is fervable in the Constitution of the respective Governments in it, which there never were any two which were in all Things ae, nay, that were not different in the Means and Manner of pensing the Operations and Acts of the supream Power, tho' the ds of all of 'em are eternally, or ought to be the same, namely universal Good of the People, and the Distribution of Ju-e; this Instance of the Variety of Governments is an undeniable of of their Original from human Counsels, which are ever nearily found different and difagreeing; perfect Unity and Harny being only to be look'd for in the divine Essence. When God brought his People of Israel out of Ægypt by the nd of Moses, besides the admirable Character the Holy Scripes give that excellent Person, we cannot conceive of him but Man adorn'd with all the great Qualities and Accomplishments essary to compleat him for so glorious a Command; yet notbstanding the Assistance even of the divine Spirit, he found and nowledg'd himself unequal to the Burthen and Importance of lone; and therefore by the Advice of his Father-in-law fethro, appointed the Council of Seventy to affift him in sharing the is of it, known afterwards by the Name of the Sanbedrim, in om was continu'd the supream Power and Authority of that People, lft they were a Nation; so that this Form of Government ch was the only one that we know of that God immediately n'd and instituted himself, is so far from favouring his Darling olute Monarchy, that it is diametrically opposite to it; for it ifestly appears both from the Authority of Scripture, and the imony of the most learned and eminent Rabbins of their Nawho may be supposed to be the best Judges of the Nature heir own Occonomy, that thro' the Course of all Ages for four Hundred Years before they had any Kings, and even in the rest after 'em, Nothing of Moment or any considerable ortance to the Nation could be transacted without the Advice Apprehension of the Sandaling Could be transacted without the Advice erein W ul or E hich is any of the Approbation of their Sanhedrim; so that the Original Genius and not Constitution of their Policy seem'd to be an Aristocracy, or fenfice rather a Theocracy wherein God himself presided, and was their King; and who affifted and influenc'd Mofes and the following Judges in the Administration of the weighty Concerns both of Re ligion and State; and here I think is an Evidence as undeniable as can be desir'd, that there was no despotical Arbitrary Powe vested in the person of Moses their first Commander in that Mode of Government constituted by God himself; and it is as certains one that God had no manner of Regard to establish the Succession in a certain Family by a divine Right; for tho' Mofes left Chi dren behind him, there was none of 'em durst fet up a Clan in Right of their Father, but were laid aside, as if they had never been, and he was succeeded in his Command by Foshua, who we of no Kin to him; the same we know was observed upon the Death of every succeeding Judge, without any manner of Regu to Blood or Relation; so that I think here is a fair End and Co futation both of Absolute Power in the Prince by any divine Right or Title in the Children to fucceed in Right of Inheritance; a when this excellent Person by the Inspiration of the Holy Spi foresaw, that the Children of Israel would in their Wickedn rebel against, and reject the Government of their God, and Time defire a King, who like the rest of those of the neighbor ing Nations should go in and out before 'em, and fight their h tles, to comply with 'em by the Permission and Influence of these holy Spirit, he instructs 'em what fort of King they should be tented with in the 17th of Deuteronomy, from

is King

This I think is such a Description of a just and good King, fearing od and loving his People, as can neither be objected against or ended, because 'tis of a King of God's own Appointment and Relation; and certainly if any King was ever fuch by a Divine ight and Commission, this is he; yet I cannot for my Life see one ford in all this of a Divine Commission to oppress and enslave his ethren and Subjects, nor any manner of Obligation upon the latr to pay an implicit blind Obedience to the Will of this King, if deviated from the Observation of the Divine Commands, hich he was as indispensably oblig'd to be govern'd, as the meanest the People. Only fuch Wretches as Filmer and the fucceeding bble of High-Church Disciples, have the Impudence to wrest the red Oracles to patronize the groffest Falshoods and Absurdities. d force Authorities from 'em to cover and support such Doctrines tend directly to the Subversion of all Religion, and Dissolution of the strongest Bonds of Civil Government; nor wou'd it have n worth the while to have taken notice of this ridiculous Non, so long ago exploded by all honest Englishmen, if it had not en industriously reviv'd and propagated by Lesley, Sacheverel, cks, Tilly, and many others such corrupt and mercenary Incenries, to the same End and Purposes they were at first intended, debauching the People into Dispositions of again receiving the ak which their Fore-fathers and themselves of late with so much bry have thrown off.

In the mean Time we proceed to consider the other Fountain and iginal of civil Power, which is human Reason, and the Domin which that derives to any Man or Family, is either by Fraud Violence, which we call Usurpation; or by the unanimous Cont of a free People, willing to unite themselves into Societies for ir mutual Security and Happiness; and this we call just and legal minion; which of all others does not only imply and confer an ontestable Right, but furnishes the surest and most efficacious ans to preserve and continue it; and if this be not so then I will bold to maintain, that there is not a Prince in Europe or in the iverse can preserve himself in his Throne longer than he is able to so by the Power of his Arms; and yet further to prove that the reigning Families now in Europe, owe the Original of their wer and Dominion folely to the Consent of the Nations they have good Fortune and Honour to command; of which Truth their not be a stronger and more convincing Proof than the Changes Alterations which from Time to Time have been made by the Power of the People in the most potent and eminent of 'em, and ticularly in our own, which Ishall but briefly hint at in due Place as deniable Matter of Fact, without descending into a particular Relan of the Reason and Motives that gave 'em the Occasions of exing the Powers God and Nature had vested in 'em; for such a tail is more properly the Business of an Historian, and would ell the Bulk of this Essay beyond the Extent and Delign of it. It is impossible to conceive, that the Dominions founded upon the and or Violence of Usurpation, should be of any longer Duration than the Fraud or Violence by which it was first obtain'd, continue to support it; all Men, even the most strenuous Afferters of the ab. solute Power of Kings, confess that Usurpation confers no Right, (Filmer only excepted,) and where there is no natural or legal Right, every Man who has Force and Courage enough to make the At. tempt may endeavour by the Sword or Poilon, or any other Way to effect the Destruction of a Tyrant and Usurper; and if he succeed may establish himself in his Throne with as much Title and Justice as his Predecessor, till another stronger and as wicked as himself shall think fit to practise the same wicked Arts upon him, and so on ad Infinitum; this is evident from all History, and particularly from that of the Kings of Ifrael, which I choose to mention for the Ho. nour of the Defenders of the divine Right of Kings by the Authority of the Scriptures; for that Crown was in less than the Space of Two Hundred Years or thereabouts transfer'd to eight or nim feveral Families, which had no Relation of Blood or Confanguinin each to the other, and all or most of 'em arriv'd at it, thro'th Blood and Murder of their Predecessors. No Title can be good that is not founded upon Justice; but Usurpation is in its Natur an Act of the highest Injustice that Men can be guilty of, in the Oppression and barbarous despoiling a People of their Estates, Live and Liberties they have nothing to do with, as founded upon better Title or Authority than that of the Will and irregular As bition of the Oppressor; nor can any length of Time change in Nature, tho' it may the Manner and Circumstances of Things, make that Good which is originally Evil and Vicious in it felf, what is naturally and originally Evil in its Beginning, will eternal continue fo.

The first Account we have of the first Kings, is from the same History in the Person of Nimrod, under the Character of a might Hunter before the Lord, which the best Expositers interpret, a con Tyrant, or mighty Robber, 'tho it is altogether filent as to the Manner how he became so; but this we are assur'd of from the same Authority, that it is impossible he should be so either in right Succession as the next Heir, or in right of Paternity or Fatherhood which are the two precious Foundations of absolute Monarchy vanc'd by Filmer; for he was but the fixth Son of Chus, the younge and accursed Son of Noah, and by whose Curse he was subjected for ever to be the Servant of his Brethren; and besides his elde Brothers, his Father and Grandfather were then living; this his Kingdom being set up about a hundred and thirty Years after the Flood, and it is evident from Scripture that Noah liv'd three hun dred and fifty Years after it, and Shem five hundred; and because the Scriptures do not any where distinctly specify the Man ner how this Kingdom was at first erected, the most rational and therefore the most likely and probable Conjecture is, the upon the Confusion of Tongues at Babel, those of the far Language found themselves under a Necessity of associating as uniting themselves for their better Security and Defence; and as Union and Affociation wou'd have been of little or no Effect

such a Purpose without Order, and no Order can be establish'd but by certain Regulations and Agreements to a Subordination of Degrees of Power one to another, by which the common Safety cou'u be est provided for; they by a common Consent chose Nimrod, who belides the Advantages of his Birth and Family, which doubtless ave him some Pretension to Pre-eminence, was questionless a Man of reat Valour and reputed Wildom, to be their Head or King; this a natural and reasonable Supposition, and it is as difficult to coneive as prove how he cou'd arrive at it any other Way; let the artisans of the other Opinion offer their Reasons for it, and they hall be calmly and impartially consider'd, but let'em be Reasons, nd better than what they have hitherto been able to advance. I lay down therefore as a Principle that the first fingle Person me to be a King or Monarch either by force or confent, and I hink it is impossible he could become so by the Way of the former; or as he that forces must undeniably be stronger than he or they that e forc'd, I think it is not easy to form a Notion how a single Man n force himself and Domination upon a Number, a Multitude, id much less upon Millions of Men: Just Right, it is certain, he uld have none, either by Succession or Father hood, even according Filmer and his Followers, for the Reasons already mention'd. furpation upon a Supposition that this first Kingdom was erected on it, confers no Right, for that which has no Reason or Equity it self, can confer none, tho' he is pleas'd to affirm, that when e Thing is done, there is as much Obedience due to the Usurper Possession, as if he had arriv'd to the Throne by the Means most owable both by God and Man; yet there are no Absurdities so ofs, no Falshoods fo notorious, no Consequences soever pernicious hich these bigotted High-Church Politicians will not espouse and fend, rather than, allow the Original of civil Power and Domion to be founded upon the true Basis of the unanimous Confent Freemen entring into Societies for their mutual Security, Support, d Happiness: Nay, even Conquest in a Necessary and just War n establish no Right in a Conqueror over the Lives and Fortunes the Conquer'd, according to the Rules of Reason and Nature. nich are the Rules of all just and legitimate Power; but only over h who are either actually in Arms themselves, or such who are Ways affifting or abetting to those who are found to be so: And en in that Case there remains eternally with the conquer'd People Equity whenever they are in a Capacity to attempt it, by all ans in their Power to recover the natural Rights they may have en depriv'd of by the Conqueror. This therefore may rationally concluded to have been the Establishment of the first regal Power the Person of Nimrod, I mean the Consent of the People under tain Conditions and Limitations, fince other Title 'tis demonstrahe had none; and it is as easy to conceive that when he was ce thus establish'd, forgetting the Simplicity of the first Ages, d Inhabitants who were either Shepherds or Tillers of the Land, her by the violent Impulse of his Temper and natural Inclinations, e Fury of an unmeasurable Ambition, or debauch'd by the posso-

nous Flatteries of fawning Sicophants (for that deadly Vermin are as ancient as Power) he was prevail'd upon to break through all the Scipulations and facred Obligations of Honour, cemented and founded upon Confent and compact, to establish'd a despotick and arbitrary Dominion over the Lives and Fortunes of those who rais him to that Degree of Elevation above his Brethren; and thus is crificing the publick good of his People to the Lust of his Ambition by the most detestable of all Ingratitudes, render'd those Men Slave who had imprudently parted with too much of their Liberty to make him great. So easy is the Transition from regal Power, even who circumscrib'd by Laws, in the Hands of a single Person (who whi he is wife, just and vertuous 'tis acknowledg'd may preserve h Subjects in a perfect State of Happiness) into an execrable Tyrana wherein it is hardly possible but all Men must be miserable. W find in Paraus this Account of him; Nimrod filius Chus, nepos Ch mi, pronepos Noa, abolita patria potestate, vi et armis imperium alias gentes primus affectavit, et Usurpavit; avitam religione instituto ignis ejusdem sacri (Orimasda distus fuit) cult adulteran Where by the Way we may remark, that a Tyranny can never establish'd but upon the Profanation of the true Religion, and cording to this laudable Usurpation upon the natural Liberties Mankind, and Violation of the Worship of his Fore-fathers, (the usual Effects of Tyranny) was his Exit, for after a Reign of Fifty Years, ex hominum conspectu subito abreptus disparuit: Now as a is not very apt to believe that the first Tyrant was for his Verm translated, it is much more rational to conclude that some one is gle gallant Whig, or Number of 'em, found the Means to differ him to free their Country and Religion from a Tyranny that been insupportable, for by a Whig I must be understood eternally to mu an Enemy to Tyranny and a Lover of his Country, in which Set I constantly maintain that the first noble Whig is as ancient as the first execrable Tyrant: And I am the further confirm'd in the on nion I advance, that Dominion is originally founded upon Confir under the Restriction of certain Laws, because we find, that about the same Time, that is, soon after the Dispersion at Babel, the King dom erected in Egypt by Mifraim the Son of Cham, furnishes with a notable Example of it; the Laws that the Kings were folem oblig'd to fwear to before their Inauguration, were these; Firft, The Kings shall not govern according to the Lust of their Will, but the Prescription of the Laws. Second, That for the Service at Splendor of the Court, not Slaves but the Sons of the Priests dilli guish'd for their Vertue and Learning, shall be permitted to service of the Third, Certain Hours in the Morning partly for the Service of the Holy Mysteries, and partly for the Management of the publick Affin shall be set apart and appropriated. Fourth, The Priests, the Min hers of Holy Things shall frequently admonish the King of his Dut and chiefly diffwade him from the Practice of Vice. Fifth, The Kin shall not determine of the Life and Fortune of a Subject out of H tred or Anger, or raise Money at his Pleasure. Sixth, The public Tributes shall be employ'd for the Use of the King and Kingdom, Priests according to their Dignity and Distinction, the Soldiery, for the Reward of the deferving. Seventh, The King shall be tented with a moderate Table and Habit, nor neglect the Care his Subjects by the Profusion of his Pleasures. This then I offer as the most rational Supposition of the Original Manner of Establishment of the first Kingdom mention'd in the orld, and shall continue to defend and maintain it, till some thy High-Church Afferter of absolute despotical Monarchy shall ance another more agreeable to Nature and Reason, and leave in the mean Time to erect his goodly Fabrick of Tyranny upon chimerical Basis of his Divine Commission to do Evil. For since ppears that God has thought fit no where to prescribe any cerfort of Government by a special and particular Law, we need consult or enquire after any other Principles of Civil Power than e of Nature and Reason which will always result and terminate onsent; we readily agree that it is very probable, nay certain, Monarchy was the first Species of it in the earliest Ages after the d, without granting the Necessity of a divine Institution for Establishment of it; there seems to be no need to have recourse he Almighty Power of God upon every Occasion, in Affairs th are easily within the Compass of human Reason to effect, esilly when there does not appear any Evidence of fuch Necessary any Part or Command of his reveal'd Will; in all fuch Cales ertainly leaves Men to act for their own Good according to the nal Powers of the Soul with which he has vested 'em; yer in rdination to his eternal Decree, without the Intervention of a cular Providence, which it does not appear to us he has been flom'd to exert but upon great and extraordinary Occasions, he has a Mind to convince a wicked or incredulous World of Almightiness of his Power by such surprising Miracles as are abely out of the Reach of any other than his own to effect. When unnecessarily call for the Authority of Heaven and the holy tures to support and countenance Affertions and Opinions, h may easily enough be supposed to be the Result of the Princiof Nature and human Reason, it gives Occasion to suspect that Deligns they are carrying on are not founded upon much Truth Equity, and stand in need of more than ordinary Colours from e, not so much to enlighten Men's Minds to see into the Botof 'em, as with the far fetch'd Lustre of a divine Authority to le the Eyes and amuse the Understanding, the better to impose deceive under the venerable Veil and Pretence of the Favour Approbation of Heaven. This we know to have been the tice of some of the wifest and most famous Founders of Governts in the Times of Heathenism, (in how many other Things our ern wise Men copy after 'em I don't enquire ) who to induce the ble to a more than ordinary fort of Veneration for their Persons Institutions, scrupled not to feign, not only a certain Commerce Familiarity, but their Descent and Pedigree from the Gods, the er only to cover the Defects of a mean, and very often franda-Original.

Tie

'Tis very reasonable to believe that in the first Ages of h World, when Men began to multiply into infinite Numbers, found the Necessity of uniting into Societies for their mutual F and Security against the Evils they were continually like to be pos'd to by continuing in their original Freedom and Equality, who we call the State of Nature, they did at first choose such as my excell'd in Vertue and Valour, and other eminent Qualities, as re der'd 'em most capable of pursuing the Ends of their Institution which is eternally the Good and Welfare of the People, who nour'd 'em with so important and noble a Trust; for, as among quals, and all Men by Nature are so, no Man can justly claim or tend to any Right or Title of Authority or Dominion over another by his own Consent; 'tis evident that nothing could give this ference, but a Distinction of Merit in a super-eminent and extra dinary Vertue. This we affirm confidently to have been the Original of Supream Power vested in the Person of a single H which we call Monarchy, without the least Trace or Footing absolute and arbitrary Power. I am not insensible, that then excellent and judicious Hooker is of Opinion, that the Soveren of the first Kings was absolute and arbitrary; nor will it do Cause I pretend to maintain any harm, by granting the Concess because it appears peremptorily in all his Writings, that he is to understood to speak of the absolute Power of doing Good, whi ever to be suppos'd the Design of good and vertuous Princes, not the arbitrary Power of doing Evil, which is ever the Effet Tyrants. Of the Nature of the former, were all those Empires Kingdoms termed by the Greeks beroum regna, which duringth tegrity and Simplicity of the first Ages, preserv'd the Prince for Wisdom, Valour and Justice, in the Reverence and Esteem of his ple, and the People happy and contented under the Shelter and h & on of his Vertues: This, then, was the original State of Things, w the Vertue of the Prince was in the Place of Laws. But w Pride, Ambition, and Luxury, by Time, encreas'd in the Ea Countries, all Things chang'd in a great Manner with their and Condition; and the Prince, who in the more innocent preced Ages, had made it his Glory to govern his People with the in gent Care and Tenderness of a Father, as whose Interest was same with his own, began by Degrees to harrass and oppress with a high Hand, as his Slaves, and from a just Monarch, deg rated into an imperious Tyrant: This was the first Ground and casion of Disgust and Animosities of the People against the Print The Prince began to think that the Power which at first he had ly been intrusted with, was inherent to his Office and Chard and peculiarly his own; hence the Original of Despotick and bitrary Power in him, who, as he esteemed himself no longer w the Restrictions and Obligations of his first Institution, assum'd a gree of it, of doing all Things according to the Impulse of an int lar Ambition, and made his fole Will the Rule and Measure of all Actions. 'Tis under this Form of Monarchical Government, wh was originally and in it self good, that the miserable Agaticks

tinu'd thro' all Ages to this Day, and are likely to remain so to Ends of the World, since they have neither any Taste left of ir Liberty, nor Vertue and Valour enough to attempt to free mselves from a Slavery that is the Reproach of human Nature; retaining only the Form, and nothing of the Bleffings and ppinels of the indulgent Reigns of their first wise, vertuous and ant Princes, groan under all the Miseries of an insupportable ranny; by what fort of Fatality or Curle of Heaven upon a wickand degenerate People I don't pretend to enquire or determine. miserable Condition of these great, but wretched Nations, put ancient Greeks, their Neighbours, who grew wife at their Exce, upon the Attempt of forming other Models of Government, which their Safety and Happiness might be better establish'd and erv'd than they saw they had been under the Empire of single ons. This, natural Reason, as well as Experience, instructed could no way be so effectually perform'd, as by constituting such ns as should consist of different Parts and Proportions of Power, ch, tho' in certain Degrees, lodg'd in different Hands, and in ordination to each other, should equally contribute to the e, Unity, and Preservation of the Liberties of the whole So-, by so tempering and balancing the Powers, as they might reocally be a Cheque upon each other. Nothing, as I have alreainted, more fully evidences the Reasonableness and Truth of Affertion, that Providence has left it solely to the Use of Rean all free People, willing to unite into Societies for their Pub-Good and Security, than the great Variety in the Forms of ernment which have been constituted by that wife and valiant le, and fince them, by all other civiliz'd Nations in other , especially of our Western World; where, tho' they almost f'em differ in the Manner of lodging, according to the Variety udgments and Opinions, the supream Power, yet they all tend center in one common Point, directly opposite to the End of inny, the Publick Good of the Community in the Preservation heir Lives and Properties; which I think is an Evidence to Detration, that all free People have naturally a Right to make their Reason and Prudence in the Choice of all such Means ey think will most readily contribute to the End they pro-

hus in Athens, the first Species of Government we read of, under the Administration of Kings till the memorable Death of ast of 'em, Codrus, who devoted and sacrific'd his Life to the dof his Country; immediately upon which, the People having d their Inconveniencies under 'em, they were wholly laid aside, the People alter'd the whole Frame of the Government, and red the principal Share of Power in their own Hands, leaving to Archontes, of which Meden, the Son of Codrus, was the first, such a Proportion of it as they judg'd necessary to enable 'em Credit to discharge the Duties of their Office, in relation to nsels in time of Peace, and Execution of 'em in time of War, reserving the Judgment of all things of any Importance and

Con-

Consequence to the Commonwealth, solely in themselves to determin'd by the Plurality of Voices : By this Means, they he only kept their Archontes, or first Magistrates, who were in the B ginning design'd perpetual, afterwards, as the People saw Occasion decennial, and in the End annual; but the rest of the Citizens Distinction within the Limits of their respective Duties; and when either the one or the other, thro' Ambition, or defire of Reven attempted any thing to the Prejudice of the Publick, the Pen foon and easily reclaim'd 'em by the vigorous Exercise of that Por they kept in their own Hands, and often by Banishment, Imprin ment, or Death, made 'em pay the Penalty of their Folly In Sparta too they were under the Government Rashness. Kings, yet were they confin'd within fuch narrow Bounds, and limited and controll'd by the Power of their Epheri, as is known every Body who has the least Knowledge of the Grecian Hillon yet it is wonderful to observe what memorable Advantages and ceffes very small and inconsiderable Handfuls of these free and hant Greeks, under the Conduct of their Renown'd, tho' shad Commanders, obtain'd almost constantly over the infinite M rudes of the effeminate and flavish Afiaticks, under the Comm of their absolute and arbitrary Tyrants: So certain it is that Courage and a Contempt of Death are the inseparable, I may Inheritance of Men naturally free and Lovers of their Country Fear and Cowardice are the eternal Partage of servile Minds, under and inur'd to Slavery; and it is observable, that while noble People firmly adher'd to the punctual Observation of the Laws of their excellent Lycurgus, there were not in the Span about 800 Years, above three or four of their Kings who were imprison'd, banish'd, or put to Death, for attempting to incroad on the ancient Libeties of the People. Other lesser Cities, small Districts, form'd themselves into petty Democracies, wi as they were not of a Constitution for Duration, were in little devour'd by the greater; till in the End, they were all swall up by that formidable Leviathan of the Roman Empire, defline the Dominion of the greatest Part of the Universe, and so before fortold by the Prophet Daniel.

The like has been the universal Practice of all free and civil Nations in the rest of Europe, who, by Vertue of their native inherent Right, have established what Forms of Government pleased and thought most conducive to the Happiness and Securithe Societies they entered into; and according to the Manne dividing and lodging the supream Power, the respective Contains received both their Species and Denomination; if it were posed in a single Hand, it is Monarchy; if in Trust in the Body the Nobles, it is an Aristocracy; if with the People alone, it perfect Democracy, of which latter fort there is not now in the verse one of any Note or Distinction; nor is it possible that such of Government should long subsist and maintain that Order and bility which are absolutely necessary for the Support of all Pub Communities. These are the three simple Species of Governments.

have hitherto been known in the World; and as each of 'em e been found to have had their Defects and Inconveniencies, the ors of former Times and Manners have instructed our Ancestors frame such a one out of the Three, as by a just Mixture and Dibution of the Powers, may either avoid or prevent the Confus and Diforders always incident to the others, and more aptly readily answer the Primary Ends of all Civil Power, the Good he People, and the obtaining of Justice, in which is included all is necessary for the Peace and Prosperity, the Continuance and rity of all Publick Communities; and this we rightly call mix'd limited Monarchy, wherein the Powers are, or ought to be fo e. ly blended and constituted for the mutual Intercourse and Supof each other; that as whilst they continue in their proper and na-Situation, and due Execution of their respective Proportions, they never fail of the Blestings of Peace, Unity, Strength, Riches, merce, Stability, Order and lasting Security; so it is hardly ble, when any one Part presumes to incroach upon the Prerogaor Liberty of the other, that they should long subsist without the ent Hazard, I may fay, Certainty of the Dissolution of the whole y Politick. This is incontestably the Original and Foundation Il the great and confiderable Kingdoms at this Day in Europe, the Foot and Principles of what we commonly call the Gothick y; and it imports not at all whether we make use for the fum Magistrate of the Words, Emperour, King, Doge, Stadtholder, aveyer; or for the grand Councils, those of Dyet, General Aflies, Cortes, or Parliament; for there is neither Magick nor fequence in Words or Titles, but the Thing meant by em is hally the same, and tend directly to one common End, the Pub-Good; and to all and every one of these so constituted, the n of Respublica in Propriety of Speech, which we render Comwealth, is properly applicable, without offending any Body in tion, but such as in secret Views and Designs would disturb the ick Peace of the World, by investing Kings with an unaccoun-Divine Commission, and an absolute Arbitrary Power over the sand Liberties of their Subjects.

ut waving at present the Consideration of all other Species of ernment, I affirm, that all the great Monarchies in Europe are inally limited and mix'd, and in a more particular Manner our wherein the King has his part of Power, and the Senate and ple theirs, and it is in the Preservation of this Equalibrium, or Balance of it, that the Happiness of a Nation can long and cipally subsist. The learned Grotius makes a Distinction of ces who have imperium fummo modo, and fuch as only have it o non summo. The former is the Fantom of the over-heated ins of the Progenitors of our noble High-Church Patriots, and is ood round Englist, no better than Tyranny, founded solely uphe Arbitrary Will of the Prince, which they have labour'd hard he last Century and beginning of this, to compliment him with. other is, that just and legal Power we call Prerogative, which strufted in his Hands by the Consent of the People only for their

Good, and limited and circumscrib'd by the Laws, which are undoubted Rule and Measure of just Magistratical Power and thority, as well as of the Liberty and Property of the Subject and this we not only chearfully allow our Princes, but will fa port and maintain 'em in it to the last Drop of our Blood and Fo tunes to the Ends of the World; but I shall have occasion hereal to speak something more parricularly of our own Constitution: the mean time, I think it will sufficiently appear from what h been said, that no Title to Dominion can possibly be deriv'd to Person or Family, by Vertue of any Precept or special Law of Gu or any Divine Commission for any such Establishment; much less Fraud, Violence, Usurpation, or Conquest, which are the of ones have been trump'd up for the Foundation of absolute Mon chy, or any other fort of Government, by such, as either throll norance, do not understand, or Malice, willingly labour to ben the Honour and true Interest of their Country. Let us venue to lay down, then, as an undeniable Truth, that the unanim Consent of a free People, willing to unite themselves into Son for their mutual Support, Convenience, and Happiness, is then natural, as well as rational Foundation and Original of all ( Power and Authority, and of all Governments, of what Denos nation or Model soever, and in due Place, apply the general Not to the Particulars of our own happy Constitution. 'Tis certains there can be nothing compleatly perfect in this World; Errors, perfections and Defects, are the Conditions of Humanity, and of the most excellent Productions and Operations of it; yet I will bold to maintain, that our Constitution is compos'd of such for and vigorous Stamina, such robust Principles of Health and Streng fuch an equal Temperament and Mixture of vital Powers, such harmonious Union and Melody of Prerogative and Liberty, the it were permitted to exert its Vigour in the due Execution of its Parts and Offices, and were not perplex'd and embaras'd in Tendencies and Operations by crafty and designing Knaves, and profituted to its Ruin, it would not be only capable of most noble and generous Performances that can be expected in the Vertue and Valour of a brave, free, and gallant People; only command what Portion of the Riches of the distant Wo She pleases, by the Strength and Power of Her Navigation; only secure to her self the lasting Possession of all Things render Life not only agreeable, but delicious at home, under Temperature of a happy Climate, and Influence of a benigna auspicious Government, but become the Desire and Emulation of her Friends and Allies, and the Scourge and Terror of the potent and formidable of her Enemies Abroad.

This Principle thus laid down being the Voice of Nature, Refon, and of Nations, granted and confirm'd by the Practice of the Governments now in Being in Europe, it will be necessary to enquire into the Nature and Tendency of the Thing it is ports. 'Tis granted by the most strenuous Afferters of the All lute Power of Monarchs, that by Nature all Men are free

nal, no Man has any Right to command another but by his own nfent, but every Man in that State had a Right equally to every ing, that was not actually in the possession of another, for every n's Labour was the Foundation of Property, and was his Title what he was first possessed of by it; no Man greater or less n another, for those are Distinctions inconsistent with natural ality, and crept into the World fince the Discrimination of um and tuum; and every Man was not only the Judge of what my was offer'd him, but the Executioner of his own Revenge, e had Strength and Power enough to effect it; this Freedom, favage and subject to many and great Inconveniences, was y Man's inherent Right, and could not without Injustice be ined by another; and as there could be no lasting Security in a Freedom by Nature, but every Man was liable to be opbeing naturally suppos'd to desire and seek their own Good, s without doubt this Consideration that first laid Men under Necessity of entring into Society to avoid the Incommodities were subject to, whilst they continued fingle in the Enjoyof their natural Freedom; and as God had with a liberal d given all Men the Benefit of Reason and Understanding a Permission to employ 'em for their common Good, it will sarily follow that he left 'em the Liberty of their Choice to r into what Societies, and to give 'em what fort of Form or el they pleas'd, and thought most conducive to the Security eir Lives and Properties; nor can they be understood when enter'd into such Engagements to part with their whole Stock iberty, but only to refign such a Proportion of it into the is of the Community as might be necessary to secure and prethe Remainder under certain Conditions from the Violence nticular Persons amongst themselves, or the Insults and In-ns of turbulent Neighbours abroad; for it never can be sup-, that a great number of rational Creatures should conspire nder their own Condition more miserable under a social Enment and Combination, than it was before when they red single and independent of each other; which must unably have happen'd, if they had without certain Conditions Restrictions subjected themselves either to the sole Will and ination of a fingle Person, or to any determin'd Number of but it was the fole Confideration of the Miseries which they law People expos'd to by the Violence of arbitrary and unred Power, whether it were first intrusted in the Heads and ers of Families, or in other fingle Persons, who were preser'd heir Vertue and Merit, that first put Men upon trying and ining other Models of Government, in which they might find selves better secur'd in their Lives and Properties; and it is Pispute, that they, who had in themselves the Power to instiany new Form, had likewise the Power to change, to alter, the All even to abrogate it at their Pleasure, when those Persons, whom fet up and intrusted only for the Good of the Publick, destecte free a

ed from the Ends of their Institution and employ'd it to the De vantage and Detriment of it; I think that it is hardly possible conceive that the first Men who united themselves into Societ cou'd do it for any other End than their common Welfare and H piness, and to avoid the Miseries and Inconveniences integer from a State of favage and barbarous Solitude; and it is as diffe to frame a Notion that any Number of Men cou'd prevail themselves to intrust the supream Power over their Lives and perties in the Hands either of a fingle Perfon, or any Set of without the Security of certain Conditions and Limitations of Power; nay I maintain it to be impossible (if there cou'd be pos'd any Men in the Beginning to brutally toolish as to relign entire Liberties and especially their Lives to be at the absolute posal and Pleasure of another) that they cou'd do it; for eve that State of Nature where all Men were equal, no Man Power over his own Life so far as to destroy it without a Ca neither cou'd he subject it in such a Manner when he enter Society as to put it absolutely in the Power of another to defin for no Man can give, what he has not in his Power to give.

But as the sole End that the first Contrivers of any Form of Go ment is allow'd even by our Adversaries to be only the publick of every Society; it is most evident that this publick Good on ver be obtain'd but by a due and impartial Execution of Justia which every Individual may be both preserv'd secure in his Life Property, and have Satisfaction made him for any Violence or la may be done him by another; neither is this possible to be if there be not some stated and known Rules, which may be eternal Measures of Right and Wrong; for Men shall in vaint plain of any what we call Wrong and Injustice done 'em, if are not some certain Means to determine and distinguish what neither is it sufficient that there are such stated Rules, if the not a Power, some were lodg'd both to judge of the Control by 'em that may arise between Men, and punish the Transgre which must be Supream, and from which there can lye no ap otherwise there is an End of all Governments let the form of be what they will, one of the principal Ends of all, being the taining speedy and impartial Justice, which includes every I that is necessary for the Good and Preservation of the Commonwa I think there can be nothing more manifest, than that the first who enter'd into Society parted with what Proportion of them tural Liberty they thought fit, and refign'd it as it were into common Stock of the Community for their mutual Support and nefit; and as there can be no Order or Stability, where there is just and regular Subordination of the Powers, 'tis necessary to shou'd be such Degrees and Ascents till we arrive at that which all Governments whatfoever we call supream; to this all other to continue in a just Subjection and Subserviency as long as t within the Sphere of its own Activity and does not exceed or en it self beyond the Bounds prescrib'd by the first Institution; and to be understood of mixt and limited Monarchies, in which we call King in some Sense Supream, or rather Sovereign; for it is cern that the Power absolutely Supream is only that in all Governnts of the whole Legislature; where by Supream we do not meanrnal or Infinite, but what is so only with Respect to the other eriour and subordinate Powers of the Society, and are a mutual eck upon each other, the Power of the Legislature alone being ontroulable; and when ever the Sovereign or any other Power iates from the Rule and End of the Institution, and imploys its ce and Authority to the Damage or Ruin of the Commonwealth, ich was originally intended only for its Good and Welfare, it stually dissolv'd and destroys it self, nor is more to be respected onfider'd then if it never had a Being. This is what I affirm be the Voice of Nature, and can demonstrate to have been and continues to be the Practice of all wife, free, and civiliz'd Natiitis as a common Notion implanted in the Heart of Mankind, an of all such as have any Tast or Relish of Freedom; for such ave neither Vertue or Courage enough to free themselves from r Chains, are Slaves as it were by Nature, and are out of the ftion, as feeming to have degenerated into a lower Species than for whom Governments were intended; and as besides its inick Probity and Rectitude, it has the Testimony and Approbation of all wife and vertuous Legislatours and Founders of Goments, and all Historians Ancient and Modern of any Reputation never be shaken or renvers'd by Assertions of particular Persons, may be either ignorant or corrupted, or both, tho' advanc'd the last Impudence that always attends the Performances of who are hir'd to propagate for a Faction the most absurd and ional Falshoods for Truth.

gain, Men thus affociating themselves for their common Good ot rationally be supposed to part with any Share of their natuiberty, but upon the Score of living peaceably together, free Violence and Oppression, and the Security of the Remainder: this End, Men must necessarily be supposed to consult on the ture and proper Methods to obtain such an End, and when ob-, so to establish it, as may render it least liable to Confusions Disorders. This was done by the unanimous Consent of the e Body, so proportioning the Powers, as by an harmonious ement might best contribute to the Publick Safety and Tranty; and because these Powers could not well be preserv'd, if were left indeterminately to the fole Will of the respective ons with whom they were intrusted. This put Men upon the estity of agreeing upon certain Stipulations and Conditions, h should have the Force mutually to bind and engage 'em to a Execution of their respective Proportions, which, when apd of, establish'd, and promulgated, were known by the Name aws, to which all Parties, without Exception of Distinctions, reciprocally and indispensably oblig'd to pay a just Obedience Subjection; and these are ever supposed to be founded upon on and Equity, and were therefore binding upon all Men, both from their intrinsick moral Rectitude, and from the university Confent of the whole People; for nothing can properly be faid be and carry the Force of a Law, and therefore obligatory up every individual, but what in its Beginning has the unanimo and general Confent of the whole People, or fuch as they though fit to invest with a Power in their Names, sufficient to frame a constitute 'em; and whilst all the Parts of any Government who ever continue to exert their Power in the Profecution only of Publick Good, it is hardly possible any Laws should be established that will not tend directly to that End. Now in this confiles Freedom we contend for, that Men cannot be oblig'd to fub their Lives and Properties to any Regulations or Laws to which ther the whole collective Body, of which they are Members, or Reprefentatives they have delegated, have not unanimoully by a Majority, confented to; for Freedom in a Civil and Polin Sense is by no means to be understood of an uncontroul'd Licentia ness of doing what every Man may think fit to do, that seems Go in his Eyes, but an Exemption and Independency from any Por in the Society, or any Laws invented by 'em, to which he have given his Consent; nor has any Law (if any fuch can be supported to the can be to be fram'd) the Force of binding any Members of a & ty, that has either any moral Turpitude in it, that tends any wh than to the Publick Good; or is wanting in this univerfal Content which is as the Soul, and gives Life and Energy to all Confline to which they owe any Subjection or Obedience.

Nor is this Freedom at all inconfiftent with a Subjection tow a free People have confented and agreed to constitute, and all higher Powers; for even those, of what Form or Denominate foever the Government may be, are as determinately circums and limited by those Laws, as the Liberties of the People, and never exceed their Limits but to the Detriment of the Commun for Laws are, beyond all Dispute, as much the Rule and Met of all just Magistratical Power and Dominion, as of the Obeds of the Subject; and which ever of 'em shall go about to intring incroach upon the Rights and Liberties of the other, against fundamental End of the Society, is accountable and punishable the other, fince each Part is equally concern'd both by Interest and Duty to pursue the Good of the whole; otherwise it were possible for any Government to subsit long, if there were m Power in Reserve lodg'd somewhere to call to an account and rect such as manifestly act against the Trust repos'd in 'em, and trary to the Publick Good; and this cannot rationally be support be any where originally, but in the whole Body of the Per who, as they had at first the sole Power in themselves of fram by their unanimous Confent, fuch or fuch a Community, under tain Conditions and Stipulations, cannot be deny'd the Powe restraining such within the Limits of their Duty, who shall pres to transgress'em to the Prejudice of the Commonwealth, or pu 'em, if they grow incorrigible, by fairer Means; nay, eve change the whole Frame and Model of it, if they think fit, fort

Laws then so fram'd upon the Basis of Reason d Equity, are the very Life, Blood and Cement of all well regued Governments; and whilst they continue in their Nature, hat Cicero excellently describes to be Law, Sanctio recta jubens esta, & probibens contraria, carry with 'em an indispensable Force obligation upon every Individual of the Society to live in Obence and Conformity to 'em, as their own proper Act and Deed; when they are once promulgated, which gives them their ultite Force and Vigour, as Men are thereby taught to know their ty, and what each Man ought to contribute to the Publick; so very Man left without Excuse, if he fails in it, and receives the nishment his Transgression of em may deserve; for no Man can onably complain, if he incurs and undergoes the Penalty of a which he himself has given his Consent to establish, as just and essay: And for this Reason it is, that the the Execution of ice may sometimes seem too severe, 'tis always excusable; for istrates, by the Impulse of Passion or Prejudice, may pervert r own Power and the Authority of the Laws to do Justice, but Law it self, which Plato calls, Mens sine affettu, is inflexible inexorable.

his, then, I maintain to have been the Original and Foundation Il Civil Power and Governments that have ever been, or are at ent in Europe, and every where elfe, tho' the Ambition and kedness of the Asiatick and African Princes on the one hand, the Effeminacy and Cowardice of their Subjects on the other, chang'd and reduc'd 'em thro' a long Prescription of Time to a able Servitude under absolute Tyranny, that leaves 'em not the Notion or Tast of their original Liberty; and it is so far from grepugnant, that it is the only Scheme that has ever been add which is exactly conformable to the reveal'd Will of God, that has besides, the Practice of all wise Nations, and the Teny of all learned Men of Antiquity, who have treated of this at; namely, that it has been originally in the Choice of all free le to frame what forts of Governments they pleas'd and thought convenient for themselves, under certain Dispositions of Power, as were inviolably engag'd to observe for each others mutual Supand Prefervation; and as in this Choice in Freemen, both of nd and Means confifts what we call Civil or Political Freedom, is reciprocal Agreement and Confent is what we understand mean by original Contract, without which it is impossible to asmy other rational Principle of Civil Power and Authority, or hat Variety of Governments that have a Being in the World; s it is not my Business at present to enquire into the Nature and on all the various and different Models of 'em, I proceed at h to confider that of our own, under which we may live happily than any other Nation of the Universe, as founded upon the Foot and Principle of universal Consent.

at of the three simple Species, then, before mention'd, our Ancestors, to avoid the Inconveniencies of each of 'em, erect-strong and beautiful Structure of Empire, with such Regulations of the respective Powers that compos'd it, as gave it justly the No ture and Denomination of a mix'd and limited Monarchy; but a ours is not the only one of that kind, I must premise, that in form Places they have been originally conflituted elective upon the Death of every Predecessor, after the first Establishment; which Power of Election the People ever preserv'd entire in their own collective Body, or confign'd it into the Hands of Delegates, wh should employ it in the Choice of the Successor in their Names the general Good of the Kingdom, and who was, for the me part, except in case of Male-administration, continu'd for Lie Others, by the same Authority of Consent either of the whole, of their Representatives, duly and legally appointed, were made her ditary in Families, under certain Covenants and Conditions, of white nature is our own; and I challenge any Partifan of absolute Monn chy to point out one fingle Instance of any free People in the Un verse, or that have now a Being in it, that ever confign'd on their whole Stock of natural Liberties into the Hands of a ling Person, so as to subject themselves in all Things to be govern'd for ly by the Dictates of his own Will; and tho' 'tis allow'd that the are such Governments now in the World, and great Pains taken make more so, they are all of 'em founded upon Fraud, Violence or Usurpation, none of which, by their own Confession, can cont any Right or just Title, and consequently, are beside the Purpe and not to be brought into Example; for I think it impossible frame a Notion of Freemen confenting and conspiring to make the selves and their Posterity Slaves; the Distinction between a Substantial and a Slave being principally this, that the former enjoys his and Property under the Protection of those Laws he has confent to, and has a Hand in making; the other has no Right to enter because they are under the absolute Power of a Master, with Referve or Controll; for, as has been faid, the Choice of the ciety, and the Liberty of framing it, so as best to secure the mains of their natural Rights and Privileges, is the Freedom that Subject claims; this being also certain, that Men, whilst they in Governments, referve to themselves a Power of judging how they may with Safety recede, and for what Reasons, and upon wh Occasions they may re-assume their Natural Liberties. In Kingdo which by their original Conftitutions are hereditary in Families, first of which for his Vertue and Merit, had that Pre-eminence ven him by the People, it has rarely been feen that that Rule! been observ'd without Exception in any one Nation we know, is, that the eldest Son of the Family in Possession has constant fucceeded to the Throne of his Father, and particularly in our on where, if I mistake not, it has not been known fince the Time the Norman, that any Family has succeeded from Father to above thrice, till the coming in of the present reigning One; this is a Thing that the Defenders of absolute Monarchy mainly in on, founded upon their chimerical Jure Divino Pretention, the'th know that it has been ever contradicted by the Practices of ever Nation this Day in Europe, which would be to the last Degree !

ious, if there were any positive Law of God for the Sanction of such Title, which no human Power can presume to an Authority to ispense with, there being not one of em which cannot evidently edemonstrated, both to owe their Title originally solely to the hoice and Election of the People, and that the People have served and exerted their Power of changing and determining of Succession upon certain extraordinary Occasions, as has seemed of for their Good.

As for our own, this is a Truth which cannot be deny'd but by ch as are either ignorant of the History of our Country, or malibully bent, out of finister Ends and Defigns, to betray it. History can afford us any Light into the Darkness of Antiquity, know our Ancestors the Britons were a free, valiant, and indendent People, living under the Influence of their own Laws, thout troubling our felves with Brute and his Trojans, or other ulous Relations of earlier Times. The first authentick Mention find of 'em is above Seventeen hundred Years ago by Cefar, to, to their Honour, describes 'em a People of a fierce, but rage Courage, so tenacious of their ancient Freedom, that ofe Parts of our Country, which he conquer'd by the polish'd Vair and Experience of those Legions which had subdu'd the best rt of the Universe, he or his Successors could never wholly esfect, t by the Slaughter of all the Inhabitants who were capable of aring Arms; and it is as evident that those noble Britons who de head against the Romans in the Defence of their Country, as fibelaun, Carcutat, Arviragus, Galgacus, and others, were no re than Men, who for their extraordinary Valour and Vertue, re judg'd most capable to perform so great a Trust against the it formidable Power upon Earth, and chosen and appointed by People upon those important Occasions of the War. We hear, leed, of Kings in those early Times, and read of one Lucius, but y were only such as the Romans impos'd upon'em after their Conest, as was their Manner to all other strange Nations they subd, and were no more than what Tacitas calls their Infrumenta witutis, such as were design'd only to continue the conquer'd People Subjection to their Tyranny. There happen'd little memorable our Country from this Period to the Time of Vortigern, the vilest I most profligate of the British Race that had any Command in s Island, and who call'd in the Saxons to support him in the Viohees he exercis'd over the People: These (as had frequently been Practice of Auxiliaries in all Ages) had for the Reward of their tvice the County of Kent allotted 'em, and afterwards another lony in Northumberland, till in time, invited by the happy Climate d Situation of the Country, the Weakness of the Inhabitants, rec'd to Extremity by the conquering Romans, and the Divisions d Disorders of the poor Remains of 'em, by the leud Government Vortigern, calling in greater Numbers of their Countrymen, in e End made a Conquest of the whole Island. 'Tis from these nquering Saxons we principally derive both the Original and Moof our present Constitution. At first, when they had made themselves Masters of the whole, they were divided into pen Kingdoms or Districts, containing three or four Counties each, an were commonly known by the Name of the Heptarchy; and it a pears evidently, that their chief Magistrate was solely elective without any Title or Pretence but the Choice and Confent of People; nor is it any way probable, that a People of German born and bred up in Freedom, and whose Nation had perform'd great and wonderful Actions for the Defence of it in their on Country against the Romans, under the Conduct of Ariovistus, minius, and other renown'd Leaders, should so far forget their mer Vertue, as to facrifice that precious Liberty, by refigning it entire ly into the fole Power and Will of a fingle Person, when they came Masters of another. Whoever has a Mind to be information the ancient Liberty of the German Nation, and the noble This they have done to preserve it, I refer him to the excellent Trem of the most judicious of the Roman Historians, Tacitus de Mon Germanorum, where he particularly mentions the Saxons and h inhabiting the Borders of the Elb, from whom we are descended He will there be inform'd by him, that their manner of choos their chief Magistrate was by a general Meeting of the whole h ple arm'd, where the Person chosen and appointed to the Honour Command by the general Confent was elevated and carry'd an upon their Targets in Token of their Choice and Approbation; when they express'd their Dillike, or refus'd the Person proposit was always done with a confus'd Murmuring and Clattering of Arms; and those who had the good Fortune and Honour to k elected, we are told by the fame Author, had only the Power offering his Opinions and Reasons in any Affair of Importance, if they were found good and reasonable; only that of perswan but none of commanding against the Judgment of the whole, People always referving to themselves the Determination of all ters of the greatest Consequence to the Commonwealth; for, he, de minoribus consultant Principes, de majoribus omnes.

Nor at this Day has an Emperor of Germany, with all his li and august Titles, any other Power than that of perswading, none of commanding, but with the Confent and Approbation of Princes and Electors that compose the Empire. A People for custom'd to Liberty, cannot be suppos'd, when they had mad Conquest of a noble Country, where they were establishing the Empire, should employ that Courage and Valour which they had generously exerted against the Power of the Romans in Defence their native Freedom at home, only to make their Condition m abject and flavish under the Domination of tyrannical Masters abro who could no otherways come to be fo, but by their own Conte and Election, In these petty Kingdons of the Heptarchy, we certainly know, that upon the Death of any of their chief Ma firates, the whole Body of the People (which might eafily be do if we consider the small Extent of each Kingdom) always of ven'd for the Election of a Successor, which Convention of People in their Language was call'd by the Name of Gemote, " o pett h, an d when their Numbers increas'd, of Mickle-Gemote. When I ak of the People, I would be always understood of the whole dy of Freemen only; for no Man, while he is a Servant, can properly said to be a Member of the Commonwealth; because who by his Condition is not in his own Power, cannot be fup-'d to have a Part in the Government of others, who are: ese Gemotes then, and Mickle Gemotes, which were the gene-Assemblies of the whole Nobility, Clergy and People, were the ream Power of each Kingdom, whilft they continu'd thus divided. determin'd of all Things of the greatest Importance relato 'em both in Peace and War, in the Election of their ef Governor, and making Laws to circumscribe his Power, and re their own Lives and Properties, and were the grand Council the Nation, and the Original of our Parliaments of this Day; if they then gave 'em their Names from their own Language, as because they had no Communication with the French, and as hese petty Kings ow'd their Exaltation only to the Consent and tion of the People, so were they by the same Authority abdid and depos'd as often as they were found to act against the Pub-Good, and the End and Laws of their Institution. As I am writing a History, if any Man doubts of the Truths I advance, fer him to the Testimony of Matthew Paris, Will. of Malms-, Matthew West, Hoveden, and others, who will tell him that (as did all the other petry Saxon Kings) acknowledg'd that he chosen for the Defence of their Liberties, not for his own Merit, their Favour, ad libertatis vestra tuitionem, non meis meritis, fola liberalitate vestra; and at the conventus pananglicus, at ch all the chief Men, as well Secular as Ecclefiastical, were ent, it was decreed by the King, Archbishops, Bishops, Ab-Dukes and Senators, that the Kings should be chosen by the its and Elders of the People; and pursuant to this Decree, en these petty Kingdoms were united into one about the Year . Egbert, the first Saxon Monarch of the whole King-, was elected without any Right at all to the Succes-, folely by the Consent of the People. After him, by the Means, came to the Crown Ethelwal, Ethelwolf, Alfred, in his Will declar'd, that he acknowledg'd, that as he had red the Crown from the Bounty of the Princes, Elders, and Peoso he left 'em as he found 'em, free as the internal Thoughts of an: To avoid Prolixity, they, who came after him, fucceeded irtue of no other Right, than the general Consent of the People. en in time that Line was superceded by Canutus the Dane, the e Authors will tell us, that he made a Contract with the Princes the whole People, and thereupon was by general Confent wn'd King of all England; in the like manner were chosen the rsucceeding Princes of the Danish Race, Harold, Hardycanute, bard the Confessor, and the last Harold, to whose Line and gn William the Norman put an End in the Year 1667. Whatever some Men may say in favour of the absolute Power of Kings, as founded and deriv'd from the Conquest, as they are pleased to term it, of the Norman, it is evident from History, the they advance a Thing notoriously false in Fact. He found, indeed the Kingdom in great Weakness and Disorder; great Numbers the Nobility and People destroy'd by the Wars, and particularly the last great Battle fought with Harold; but he was received London with great Joy, as is usual when a People expect an End the Miseries they have long groan'd under, by the Clergy and Po ple, and faluted King by all, having first sworn to observe and to fy the ancient good and approv'd Laws of England; and the did not adhere to and perform the Conditions of that Oath, yet ter the Impossibility he found of ever possessing the Kingdom in que but by governing a brave and warlike People according to the nour of their ancient Laws and Constitution, he took the Oathat cond time, and not only faithfully observ'd it, but seem'd to rep of the violent Courses he had taken to exasperate the Nobility a People by the Violation of his former, and only wishing (which think is not very much the Language of a Conqueror) that his might be chosen King of England after him; for he acknowled in his last Will made at Caen in Normandy, that he neither recent or left the Kingdom as an Inheritance, neminem Anglici regnin situo beredem, non enim tantum decus bereditario jure possedi; if he pretended no Right himself, but what was confer'd upon by the People, he had no other but what was formerly enjoy'd their ancient Kings of the former Lines, according to their and establish'd Laws, to the just Observation of which he had enge himself by the Obligations of solemn Oaths, which Laws conti no Power to any till they were elected, and that which the then did confign, was under such Conditions, that the Nobility People referv'd to themselves such a Degree of it, as to depole expel such as should attempt to act against the Trust repos'd in for the Publick Good; and the Practice of the Nation upon Decease, exercising this natural and inherent Power reserv'd in to themselves, sufficiently evince the Truth of what I affirm, be in relation to any Right pretended in virtue of Succession by any his Children, and the Authority of the People to dispose of Crown; for by their fole Will and Donation, they confer'd it is cessively upon his younger Sons William and Henry, in Exclusion their elder Brother Robert, which could not have juftly been, if had had an undeniable Title (according to the Stile of our nied High-Church Politicians) in right of Succession to his Father, as dest Son; and when upon his Return from the Holy Land, he tempted to establish himself by Force of Arms, against the W and Consent of the People, the Loss first of his Eyes and Libert and afterwards of his Life, were the Reward of his Folly.

Tis evident then that it is upon this Foundation-Principle of Confent of a free and willing People our Ancestors have creeked at compleated the noble Structure of the happiest and best establish Government in the Universe; and if this be not so, let any Ma who pretends to maintain the contrary Opinion of Kings by diving Right, make it out as demonstratively as we have ours, and she

what other Title any King now in Europe holds his Crown, and will give up the Cause, and wear the Chains he wou'd prepare us, with the most Ease and Contentment we can; but in the an while, he will excuse us if we prefer the Voice of Nature, ason and the known Practice of all free People, since the Word God is wholly filent in the Case, before the jure divino Chimera his Brain, which never enter'd into the Head or Heart of any e or honest English Man, or was ever heard of amongst us, till I suffer'd it to be broach'd to compleat the Wickedness of the Age, and reviv'd to finish the Infamy of the Beginning of this. any Man who has but a moderate Tincture of History, but cast iew upon the Commencements of all the Governments this Day Europe, and if he does not find 'em all originally founded upon fundamental Principle of Consent and Election, we will be coned to be Slaves. All the Kingdoms of the Gothick Polity, which Sort are all the confiderable ones now in being in our ern World are indisputably erected upon it: The Empire and the ective Principalities that compose it have no other Beginning, even the Roman long before, of which this is but the imperfect mblance, and all their Emperors in the Beginning, whilft there ained any Regularity or Discipline, were chosen and confirm'd he Senate and People, and in the Times of most Disorder and ruption, by the Soldiery. The Kingdoms of Hungary and Bohetill they fell under the Domination of the House of Austria: of Poland continues elective to this Day: Sweden till the e of the renown'd Gustavus Erickson, to whom for his Vertue Valour in delivering 'em from the Tyranny of the Danes, the te and People confer'd the Crown, and made it hereditary untertain Conditions to his Family; and Denmark, till the Year , when they exchang'd their ancient Freedom for the Servitude now are under. We do not read of one King of all the noble gdoms of the Goths in Spain, who was not made by the Conof the Nobility and People; and the their Crowns were estad and made hereditary in Families, they feldom had Regard to next Heir in the right Line, but for the most Part prefer'd the le or Brother of a deceas'd King before the Son, if a Child, or pacitated, having ever more Regard to Vertue and Merit, than next Heir in Blood, without 'em. In France, the noblest and formidable in Europe, the Disposition of the Crown was always he People or general Assemblies of the States; it continu'd no er in the Race of Pharamond the Founder of their Monarchy to his Grandson by Clodion, who by the Consent of the People disposses'd in Favour of his Kinsman Merovee, in whose Family ntinued till they degenerated into those wretched worthless s they call'd their Roys faineans, at what Time they depos'd alt degenerate Chilperick of that Race, and confer'd their Crown epin the Son of that famous Charles Martel, whose Conduct Valour freed 'em from the Inundations of the Saracens, by the ghter of two Hundred Thousand of 'em, under the Command he renown'd Abderame who had already over-run the greatest and noblest Parts of Spain: His Posterity, in process of Time, ing into the same Vices as render'd 'em unworthy to command on the Head of Hugh Capet, in whose Family it continues to Day, and who are in a very fair Way of giving an injur'd and press'd People a notable Opportunity of recovering their and Liberties in another Revolution. I can but barely hint at the Things as known and manifest Matters of Fact, but as incontest Proofs of the Power of the People of all free Nations to dispose their Crown to whom and what Family they please when they just Occasion to do so; and whoever has the Curiosity to inform'd more at large, may find it amply fatisfy'd in du H lon, Ican de ferres, and Mezeray. Thus it continu'd in In in the Power of the general Assemblies of the States, which fifted of the prime Nobility, the Clergy, and the Noblesse or hemen, with their respective Parliaments, by reason of the value tent of their Dominions, which had the Power of judging fovered of all Matters by Law cognizable, within their proper Juridia rill Lewis the Eleventh by the Help of a depray'd and indigent bility incroach'd upon the ancient Freedom of the People, an their Means broke in upon the fundamental Laws of the King this was what his Sicophant Slaves call'd bringing their Kings du page, that is emancipating 'em from the Reach and Power of Laws, by which they were formerly circumscrib'd and result his worthy Successors fince were too well pleas'd with this In ment of Power, not to endeavour to extend it yet further, till left their miserable People only the Shadow of that Liberty formerly enjoy'd, and at length in the last Age compleated Slavery by the execrable Villany of two dignify'd High-Ch Priests, Richlieu and Mazarine, and continue at this Day und faithless and pittiless Tyrant, in a Condition equally deplorate not greater than that of the Eastern Turk.

It is not to be question'd but that our Ancestors in framing excellent Constitution had their Eye upon a Balance of Power ceffary to preserve Stability, Order, good Agreement and Ham of the Parts with the whole, for the general good of the who and 'tis in this Sense is to be understood that fundamental Maxi Nature as well as Government, Salus populi suprema Lex; a wife People can ever be suppos'd to erect a Power that in the Ex tion of it may be employ'd to their own Damage or Prejudice; 'tis therefore that Laws establish'd by mutual Consent equally and circumscribe the Power of the King as supream, and the ject in a just Subordination to him; and in this equitable Dim tion of Powers, to the King chosen by the People and limited the Authority of Laws agreed to by the mutual Confent of all Par (to the Nobility by an inherent Right in 'em from the Begin of the Government, as Mediators between the King and the Per and to the Commons chosen out of the Body of the People by Suffrage and Election of the Freemen of our Nation) confilts Balance, that is both the Life and Force of the Government, general Safety of the People. can make a Law without the Concurrence of the Third; for no with us can be bound to the Observation of a Law to which as not consented, but they must all necessarily be made by the al Confent of the whole, or else they carry not with 'em the e and Obligation of Obedience in the Subject. Before Numincreas'd, it is manifest from our Histories that the whole Body reemen met in Concurrence with the supream Magistrate and ility to frame such Laws as they found necessary for the Safety Preservation of the Society; but when their Numbers vastly ented, and were dispers'd to the utmost Limits of the Country, niverfal Assembling of every individual Freeman for that End utterly impracticable; to remedy this Inconvenience and yet e the End for which they were united, no beter Way cou'd be dout then to institute Councils confisting of certain Numbers ated from and by themselves, which, according to the Power received, should act in the Name of the whole Body, and to do or em which they had been accustomed formerly to perform by elves; for when a People by mutual Compact is united togeinto a civil Society, there is no Difference between that which e by 'em all in their own Persons, or by certain Numbers deleby all, and acting according to the Degree of Power they refrom their Principles; for no Man can be oblig'd to enter into or fuch a Society but with his own Confent; but when he has enter'd into it, he lays himself under an Obligation of Obediand Conformity to all the just Laws of it; and it one of those mental Laws be, that all Things shall be determin'd by a Pluof Voices, his Affent is suppos'd to be comprehended afters in all the Resolutions of that Majority; nor can he by his finissent invalidate any act of the whole. This delegated Assemom the Beginning of the Union of the Kingdom in the Saxon t they call'd in their Language Wittenagemote, and confifted of ling as Supream, of their Nobility, and such Numbers of their cons or Freemen as they judg'd sufficient by Vertue of a dele-Power to act and determine all Things in the Name of their e Body; this is the undoubted Original and Model of our ments of this Day, and our whole Conflitution; and this Prize wer was equally beneficial to the King and People; for by it uthority and Dignity of the one, and the Safety and Liberties e other were so balanc'd, that such of the latter as assum'd to elves more than the Law did permit were frequently and severeh'd; and fuch of the former as by Force or Fraud invaded the ne, or manifestly abus'd the regal Power to the Damage of the e when they were on it, were by the other Powers imploying me Means of Force as often tumbled headlong from it. ere is no Time wherein it cannot be demonstratively prov'd. our Ancestors enjoy'd this Liberty of choosing their Kings, and g such Limitations of the Regal Power, as might hinder 'em exerting it contrary to the Trust repos'd in 'em; but I am very lent that there is not a High-Churchman alive can assign the or prove that ever there was a King in England, who by the

Pretence of I know not what ridiculous Divine Right, or even Claim of Succession to his Father, which we allow, that ever on cis'd any arbitrary and despotical Power over his Subjects but w was a down-right Usurpation against the whole Tenure of the damental Laws of the Kingdom. The frequent Examples we had in our History of the Peoples exerting that original Power they ferv'd to themselves of calling such of their Kings to an Account who presum'd to exercise the Power he was intrusted with ben the Limits of the Laws, and imploy'd that to the Ruin of the monwealth which was lodg'd in their Hands folely for the & and Prefervation of it, are so many undeniable Instances that never by any Agreement or Compact with their Kings parted or confign'd over their whole Stock of natural Liberty into Hands, but retain'd as much in their own as was necessary for Preservation of themselves and the Publick, and torestrain themm in the Limits of their Duty, if Ambition, or Flattery, or anyo wicked Motive hurry'd 'em to act contrary to their Institution; as in the Beginning they, who being Freemen and equal at first fented to unite themselves into Society under any fort of Go ment, might without doubt give it what Form or Model they pla so they must necessarily be suppos'd to be the only proper Judges far the chief Magistrate they erect acts conformably to their la tions, and still to retain so much in their own Hands as may a fall into em to the Ruin of the People; this as it has been the frant Practice of all wife, free and civilis'd Nations that have known in the World, so has it apparently been that of our ow all Ages; neither in any other Respect if we were so happy an united now as we have been in our Affections, as well as com Interest, shou'd we stand in need of any Thing in this Wor make us the happiest People in it. Fortunate Britons! If wer understood our own Blessings, and not suffer our selves to be a and deluded by the wicked Artifices of mercenary Traitors, labour to reduce us for their private Interest into a Desolato Slavery, equal to that of our once great and happy Neighbours

Under this excellent Constitution then were we originally for and by the Vertue and Courage of our generous Ancestors comin it to this Day. Our Kings, our Lords, and the Represents of our Freemen legalty elected, are the constituent Parts of Commonwealth; which whilst they act in Concert together for Publick Good, can never fail of producing Essects that will also be both honourable and advantageous to that End, and render a rich, stourishing, and formidable People: Their reciprocal loss is eternally one and the same, and whichever of the Parts set for an Interest distinct and separate from that of the whole, is so of Treason to their Country, and liable to the Punishment the instilled in such Cases. In these Three Estates acting unanimously ther consists the Legislature, which is the only absolute supreament of the Nation, who have the sole Authority of making and frantsuch Laws as they think necessary, and of altering, changing

Our Kings, as it has been made appear, inally ow'd their Exaltation to the Crown folely to the free ice and Donation of the People, under certain Conditions th they were oblig'd by the Conscience of a solemn Oath to obe, according to the Tenour of the fundamental Laws, by which were not only confirm'd and establish'd in the Regal Dignity, the Power with which they were at brit to act for the Publick d fo limited and circumscrib'd by 'em, that they might be as a in Rule how far they might employ and exert it for that End. no further; and this is what is meant by original Contract, and th as it undeniably appears to have been the Origine of all Civil er and Governments in the World, and particularly of God's People (which is the only one we know of he ever immely interven'd to constitute) 'tis to be hop'd it shall be esteem'd continu'd so at least by us, for our Peace and Happiness, to the of it, till we have some better Authority to depart from it than has in the last Age been as unhappily, as impiously advanc'd, raytors to their Country, founded either on their frivolous Jure no Title to absolute Power, or the more ridiculous one of Faood, Heir in the right Line from Adam, Conquest, or Usurpation; h Pretentions, as they unhinge and overturn all the just and lelitles of all the Crowns in Europs now in Being, to by their very re and Tendency do they involve 'em in such inextricable Difand Difficulties, as expose 'em to the last Confusions and Dis-

e Consent then of a free People and the Laws constituted limited our first Kings; which Laws, as has been faid, were folemnly by their Coronation Oath inviolably to oband to rule conformably to the whole Tenour of 'em; and as it is the Foundation of regal Authority, so is it solely of our lience and Subjection, whilst they continue to do so, and no er; and as our Ancestors thought fit to render the Crown heary in Families, there can no Dispute be made, but that every effor should receive and enjoy it no otherways than in the same per, and under the same Condition with the first. This is eviby the same Coronation-Oath, which is respectively tender'd ery one of 'em as he fucceeds to the Crown, and by the Virtue hich he is inviolably oblig'd to preserve the Church of God, liberties of the People, and to govern in all things according to ncient fundamental Laws of the Kingdom; infomuch that the , who wilfully acts contrary to so solemn an Obligation of Conce, to the rest of his Wickedness adds the heavy Weight of oulest that Men can be guilty of, Ingratitude and Perjury. This nn Coronation Oath is no other than a Recognition, and reed occasional Declaration of the original Contract; and the Act he Archbishop, or the Prelate officiating at the Inauguration, four times during the Solemnity, demands of the People, whe they will have this Man to reign over them, is an evident Demonitration monstration both of such an original Contract, and that the Cro was from the Beginning the free and fole Donation of the Peop A Prince so chosen, inaugurated, and under the Obligation of Oath to govern according to the Laws of our own making, and other, we freely and chearfully receive and acknowledge, and obey all things warranted by our Laws, as our rightful and lawful King who, as for just Reasons, he is entrusted with the executive Pow of the Laws, which is but one Part of the Legislature, is there esteemed or reputed the Head or principal of the Commonwell under the August Title and Character of King or Monarch, and whole Constitution or Commonwealth a regular and limited Mon chy, exclusive of all arbitrary or absolute Power, free and indep dent of any other upon Earth, but their own entire Legisland which we acknowledge to be the only supream and absolute, which alone has the fole uncontroulable Power of altering, cha ing, or even abrogating the old, and creating any other new h or Model of Government they may think more conducing to Publick Good, and obtaining of Justice, and from whence there lye no Appeal. This, as it has been the universal Sense and Pradic our Ancestors, who founded our Government, will appear in the San to continue to be so now, by the Exertion of that Power upon the morable Occasion which has made so great a Noise in the World will in our Memory, which Papists, Jacobites, Nonjurors, and so many Ho Church-Priests, Traytors both to the just and legal Titles of the Kings, and Peace and Happiness of their Country, dishonours as much Injustice as Impudence, with the odious and reproach Title of Rebellion; and all honest Britons, who have any true gard for either, rejoyce in, by the Name of a legal, righten justifiable, and most Glorious Revolution that ever happen'd in the Nations, and which we hope, and firmly believe, shall stand noblest Monument of the Vertue and Honour of the forms Contrivers and Finishers of it, as an illustrious Example for thele tation of our Posterity to the last Ages of the World.

From what has been faid in general, may be rationally dedute the following Principles, as the Origine and Foundation of all wil Power and Governments which ever have been, or are all Day in the World, and in a very special and particular Manner, our own.

1. That tho' it has been advanc'd in the last Age, and revivil this, with sinister Designs of a High-Church Faction, hir'd to tray their Country, yet it never has, or can be prov'd, that the is any positive Law of God in his reveal'd Will, determining it tions only to one fort of Government, to wit, That of about and despotical Power in the Hands of a single Person or Family wherein all things, without Exception, are left to the sole wand Arbitrament of the Prince, without Regard to any hum Laws, by which they are not supposed to be bound, as enjoying a inheriting the Crown by virtue of a Divine Right, or of that of the mext in Blood of Necessity to succeed; but that God, in his God ness, left Men to the Direction of their Reason, and the Did.

Motives of their own Will to choose and erect such Forms of it hey pleas'd, and judg'd most conducive to the Ends for which which enter'd into Society, which was the Security and Preserva-

of their Lives and Properties.

That all Men, who were originally free and equal by Nature, a Power of uniting into such Societies as they pleas'd, which not be suppos'd to be done any other way than by resigning reain Portion of their natural Liberty into the common Stock of Community, for the Sasety and Protection of the rest, of which whole Body of the People were the only proper Judges, how and in what Proportion they might recede from 'em, and how I the Magistrate whom they thought sit to appoint over 'em, uardian of the Remainder, discharg'd the great and honourable strepos'd in him for that End.

That all just Civil Power and Authority in the World had Rise and Foundation originally and solely in the Consent of a People, willing and agreeing to dwell together in Societies heir mutual Support and Defence.

That a People so agreeing amongst themselves, had the Liy to form and erect what fort of Government they pleas'd in Hands of such Magistrates as they thought for their Vertue and acity most likely to pursue and obtain their Ends, reserving to selves a Power to correct, restrain, and change 'em, as often hey were found to act contrary to the first and great End and

gn of their Institution.

That in an hereditary, but mix'd and limited Monarchy, e must necessarily be suppos'd at first some Agreement or Conbetween the Person exalted by Consent to the Throne, and the ple consenting to his Exaltation, to the inviolable Observation of the was oblig'd by the solemn Sanction of an Oath; besit cannot possibly be conceiv'd that any Number of Freemen ld consent to resign their whole Fund of natural Liberty to bsolutely dispos'd of at the Will of a single Person, or any mber of Men, that being a persect Condition and State of Sla-

That as no fort of Government whatsoever can possibly long is without Order, 'tis necessary that certain known and stated is should be established to be the Measure of Right and Wrong, chare known by the Name of Laws; and that none but what sounded upon Reason and Equity, and those made by the unacus Consent of the whole Society, can have the Force of ling every individual to the Observation of 'em; this being the rent Birthright of Freemen consenting to put themselves under legal Subjection of another, that they cannot be bound to subto any Laws that are not made by their own Consent.

That fuch Laws thus constituted and founded upon Equity and sent, are the certain and determin'd Rule and Measure both of Power of the chief Magistrate, of what Denomination so, as well as of the Submission and Obedience of the Subject, he punctual Observation of which all Parties, without Distinction, are indiffentably oblig'd, and by 'em to be regulated in a Dispensation of the respective Trusts and Exercises of their party; there being nothing more absurd and irrational in any reconstituted Government, than that any one essential Part of should lye under the Obligation of certain Rules and Condition liable to Penalties, and the other be left at Liberty to act only a cording to the Dictates of their single Will and Pleasure.

$. That the chief Magistrate, of what Denomination some when he acts directly contrary to the Ends of his Institution, a employs those Powers to the Damage or Ruin of the Commun with which he was honour'd and entrusted solely for their West and Preservation, by that very Act ceases to be a Magistrate, a may be justly call'd to account and depos'd for his Male-admi stration.

9. That as no Magistrate, so elected and appointed by the Penhas that Honour confer'd on him solely for his own Good, Proof Pleasure, it remains that the Publick Good of the People is a nally the sole End of all Civil Governments whatsoever.

These are what all honest, judicious, and learned English have ever, and I hope, ever will esteem the only rational and ral Principles of all Civil Power and Government, and particular of our own: nor will any but Papifts, Jacobites, Nonjurors, the rest of the Rabble of High-Church Priests and French Poli ans, who demonstrably preach and propagate others that tend rectly to the Slavery of their Country, and Ruin of the pri eftablish'd Religion and Government, dare to load 'em with the probrious Title of Republican and Antimonarchical. By so unjula ridiculous a Reproach they either betray their Ignorance or in Malice; for if by Republican they mean democratical Principles Defigns, as they manifestly do, only to abuse and impose on the Por we with much Plainness and Honesty tell'em, they advance and dent and notorious Lye; we scorn 'em both as much and more they do, nor can they point out ten Men, nay possibly one in Kingdom, of any Confideration, that entertain fo much as a W that the present happy Constitution should be chang'd into other Sort or Form of Government than what it is already, much into fuch a one where the fole Power should be supreamly lodge the Hands of the People, which is of the Nature and Essence perfect Democracy; nor can any of 'em, with all his Reading's Wisdom, show us where there is one of that kind under the of Consideration enough to be drawn into Example for our la tion, if we were dispos'd to it. We know, as well as they, and hope something better, that all the fundamental Laws of the are calculated purely to support and maintain the Honour, the nity, and the Prerogative of the Prince, as well as the Liberties Properties of the Subject, as they are the constituent Parts of Constitution of the whole Community under the Model of K Lords and Commons, exclusive of all manner of Regards to De cracy; and maintain that our own, and all the regular Government

Europe, tho' under the Administration of Monarchs, are in Proof Speech Commonwealths; nor have we any Word in our guage besides, that answers to the Civitas of the Romans in its Extent, by which they imported their whole Community and hinion; for when that noble People, in the Time of their Verand Liberty (for as they were born, they expir'd together) by A of Naturalization, admitted any People they conquer'd into Privileges and Honours of their Commonwealth, they were faid e civitate donati, that is, made Roman, and as it were, natural bers, free Denisons, and Partakers of all the Immunities, Adages and Dignities of their Respublica, or Commonwealth; but honest Word now is profan'd, and forc'd to have a gross Sound Signification of perfect Democracy in the Ears of the Vulgar, h these Men have a wonderful Talent of abusing, upon all Ocns of the villainous Designs of enslaving their Country; and as support their Cause by the most absurd and notorious Falshoods. r the Varnish of plausible Truths, 'tis therefore that with as Injustice as Infincerity, they brand all those truly great and no. Englishmen who will not run into all their hair-brain'd Meawith the reproachful Character of Republicans, and Men of blican Principles, who labour to change the ancient Form of Sovernment into an impracticable and fantastical Democracy. by the same sophisticated Spirit of modern High-Church Divithat all our most pious, learn'd, and most reverend Prelates, have the Honesty and Courage to oppose the Violences of their try, are dishonour'd by 'em with the undeserv'd Titles of byterians, or, to speak in the Style of their more modern, front-loquence, Fanaticks. The only rational Concern an honest ought to have for so unfair and ungenerous a Licentiousness, is he unhappy Influence fuch Notions have upon the Minds of ar undiscerning Persons, not aware of the Snares are laid for for the Infamy of it, when discover'd, will unavoidably red upon themselves and Faction, to their Confusion. like manner, if by antimonarchical, which they impudently in reproach to us and our Principles, they mean that we are pies to Monarchy as such, they are such worthless Triflers, that are sensible that so poor an Injustice ought as little to affect us, delerves a ferious Answer, unless they mean such to their darabsolute Power, which in our Language and Sense, is but ano-Name for Tyranny; and in that Notion we tell 'em with much winels, that that Englishman who espouses and pretends to estait amongst us, is in good old Saxon, a Traytor to his Country, et him tremble at the Punishment that he knows is justly due by aws to fuch, We leave Slaves to adore their Idol of arbitrary er after their own manner, with an Affurance, as Englishmen Freemen, that we will employ our Hearts and Hands in the nce of our ancient, legal and limited Monarchy, against them their hereditary, unalienable Chevalier, to the last Drop of our d. Let these worthy Persons but be at the Pains, by Means become Men who pretend to Learning, or to good Manners, as

Gentle-

Gentlemen, to convince us that by their abfurd and flavish Doctrin of a Jure Divino Right, and unconditional Passive-Obedieno which we shall consider a little more at large in the proper Plan that they do not folely by 'em intend to pave the Way, in order bring in upon us their darling Pretender; and we will give's much better Security, than any they are capable of offering us, the not not a Man amongst us shall ever frame a Thought in his He or lay his Hand to the infamous Defign of changing our prefent ham Establishment into any other Form of Government, much less the lowest of all of 'em, their visionary Democracy; for Id venture to affirm, that there is not an honest Briton in the Natur who defires or would contribute to make it more a Commo wealth than it is already; and which is an innocent and pro Term and Thing, which cannot reasonably give Offence to who is not for making it an absolute and arbitrary Monarchy, inevitable Consequence of which is Slavery to us and our Pollen In the Condition it is yet in at present, we have received it in our generous Ancestors, whom we shall make it our Glory to tate, in transmitting it safe and entire to succeeding Generalia We maintain that it is folely upon the Force and Equity of our h ciples, that our People derive their Right of defending their and and immemorial Liberties from the Violences and Incroachment ambitious and tyrannical Princes, when-ever they shall so far for their own best Interest, which is inseparable from that of their ple, as to attempt the Subversion of 'em; and it was the bare in Delign of the Violation of the establish'd Government and Relign together with all the fundamental Laws by which they were few to us, which gave the Occasion to the People of these Nation exert their natural Rights and Birth to the most happy and Glim Revolution, that has reflected more folid Honour upon a brave, and valiant People than all the noble Actions of former Ages, of more supendious Ones of this.

An Administration so full of Violence and Oppression as the King James, pointing directly to the Ruin of the Government, Subversion of all the fundamental Laws made to support it, put the tion upon the Necessity of having Recourse to the only Meansw left to fave themselves from the imminent Destruction was read overwhelm'em. Petitions and Remonstrances, the indubitable of the Subject when under heavy Grievances and Oppressions not only no longer of any use, but the Persons thus exerting legal Rights treated with Rigour and Contempt, and against all imprison'd, or otherwise punish'd for doing what was but prof their Duty to do. An unhappy Prince, violent and imperious ! Nature, was no longer to be restrain'd within the narrow Limb the Laws, bigotted to the most polluted and violent of all Supa tions, and hurry'd by the impetuous Influence of the Count France and Rome (which inflead of cultivating the Peace Tranquility of Europe, has been, thro' all Ages, the principal thor and Fomenter of all the Confusions and Disorders have moil'd the Nations that compose it) precipitated him into

uin he was preparing for others, by the hasty Steps he made to artrary Power, the Popish Religion, and Slavery inseparable from m; add to this the Treachery of his High-Church Sycophants who ad prevail'd upon him to believe, that by their pernicious Doctrines Divine Right, and absolute Passive Obedience, they had lull'd e Body of the People into Dispositions quietly and tamely to subit to all his Defigns how fatal foever to the Nation; nor can it be puted to any Thing but an Infatuation of Mind in those fawning nemies of their Country, to perswade him to believe that a free d valiant People born and bred up in Liberty, cou'd be prevail'd th like Slaves to facrifice so precious a Blesling, to the Infinuons of a treacherous and corrupted Priesthood; the Event happily hify'd the contrary; perdere quos Jupiter vult, prius dementat, as punctually verify'd on this important Occasion; the People of ese Nations are generally good natur'd, without the Reproach of Term in a malicious Sense, and patient of Sufferings to an emiht Degree; they have a fincere Respect and even Veneration for th of their Kings, who by their Care and Tenderness manifest eir Intentions of ruling 'em only according to Law; but they ther want good Sense to know when they are ill us'd and opes'd, nor Courage to make use of the Means which God, and Nae, and the Laws have left in their Hands, either to prevent or e themselves from Ruin; they have always made their Kings lible, that all free as they are, they will bear heavy Burthens, they must not be press'd too far; in each Cases, Resentment alys gets the better of Obedience; they cannot be perswaded that y are Alles fit only to carry such Burthens as are insupportable, be beaten into the Bargain if they don't. With many of their igs who had the ignoble Designs of treating 'em at so vile a rate, Struggle was often no more than to redress the Abuse; but in ers (whom they found attempting to change the very Nature of Government, and the Foundations of it in Danger to be underl'd by such as affecting an absolute and arbitrary Power over ir Lives and Properties contrary to their facred Oaths and Intent their Institution,) that dangerous and unleasonable Modelty has n laid alide; and in the Defence of 'em, they have had recourse Force, where there was no longer any Expectation of Remedy Law, and if sometimes they have not been able to prevent, or eal the Injustice, were never ignorant, or wanting in the Means revenge it.

This was the Case of the late King James and his People; Matwere reduc'd to that Extremity that there remain'd nothing to sebut Popery and Slavery, or Freedom and the Protestant Relin; the Choice was soon determin'd, and God who in all Times manifestly shown himself a Favourer and Protector of the Assertors
he Liberty of Mankind, crown'd it with a happy Success suitable his Goodness and the Justice of the Cause; the Tyrant was ded, banish'd, abdicated, and thereby the People at this Day, and

berty, as the Reward of their Vertue and Courage. I need not here multiply Words to give the Detail of the Measures taken to bring about this notable Revolution; there are many Thousands yet alive, of which great Numbers had a Share in the Execution, and may such of 'em as still adhere to and maintain it, long live to enjoy the happy Essects of their glorious Labour. It is sufficient to intended in this Place that it was the universal Sentiment and beliefed the whole Nation, (Papists, Facobites, Nonjurors and Highelmin Priests only excepted,) that the Body of the People have always a inherent reserve of Power in their Hands, which upon such extraordinary Occasions they have a Right to exert to preserve themselve from the Violences and Incroachments of their perjur'd tyrannical Kings; there being nothing more certain than that the most ement and considerable of all Ranks and Professions of Men in the Kingdom cheerfully and readily contributed every Thing in the Power for the Recovery and future Security of their ancient Freedom

'Tis absurd and frivolous to the last Degree, what the Enemies their Country and this famous Revolution, have and still de urge against the Validity of the Acts and Authority of the Conve tion to dispose of the Crown after the Flight and Abdication of Kin James ; for tho' it be true, whilft there is a King in being, no la can be made without the joynt Confent and Concurrence of the three Estates; yet it has been told and prov'd to these Men, if em Reason were of any Weight with 'em, that the Person wearingth Crown originally by the Confent of a free People, who indeavon to overturn an establish'd Government, Religion, and the fund mental Laws, by affuming an absolute arbitrary Power of disposit all Things according to the Lust of his sole Will in Breach of Coronation Oath, does that Moment cease to be a King, and M himself upon a Level with the rest who exalted him to that Honor by the very Laws of this Institution; and when by any overthe of an illegal and usurp'd Authority he has so forfeited that Right the regal Dignity, the collective Body of a free Nation, or there presentatives, have a full Power and Liberty inherent in 'em to or vene themselves when they please to remedy the Disorders of Male administration, and to provide for the future; and in a a of a King's withdrawing and putting himself under the Protect of a foreign Prince their mortal Enemy, to recover what he calls Right by force of Arms, he makes himself a declared Enemy of Pe ple, and they are hereby left in full Power and Authority to throne and exclude him for ever, and to dispose of the Crown which he render'd himself unworthy, on whom they please, may think better to deferve the Hononr; and I think it may reasonably concluded, that the Babble and Clamours of such " are still in the Interests of King Fames in his pretended Son, of no Manner of Weight and Confideration put in the Scale aga the unanimous Sentiments and Act of a whole Nation; nor capt Thing be more reasonably infer'd, than that such as incessantly bour the Establishment of the Pretender are more the Friends Popery and Slavery, than the Protestant Religion, and the Free

That King James the Second by endeavouring to subvert the Proant Religion, and the Laws and Liberties of his Kingdom, did licate and forfeit the Government, by which the Throne became vait; and that being so, and no legal Proof appearing that the tended Prince of Wales had any Right thereto, but strong Presumpis to the contrary, it was lawfully fill'd by and settled upon King lliam of glorious Memory and his royal Consort, or the Survivor, the Succession as has been already mention'd. lost for Redress of all Greivances, and for the amending, strengthing, and preserving of the Laws, Parliaments ought to be held fremtly; with many other Particulars for which I refer the Reader, to has the Curiosity to be further informed, to the Acts themselves. Now we think this is as full and ample a Recognition and Declaration of the Rights and Power of the Nation to maintain and defend in ancient and undoubted Liberties from the Usurpations of tyranal Princes as human Wisdom can devise, founded upon the naturiciples of Government I have laid down; and the Exertion of

this Right and Power is by the aforefaid Acts in the most authen tick Manner can be invented, declar'd to be the ancient and indu bitable Right and Priviledge of the People of England and Ireland 'Tis with as much Impudence as Ignorance or Malice, that the Pan tifans and Friends now amongst us of the pretended Son, maintain that it was not in the Power of the People, by any Act of Parlin ment to dethrone and exclude the Father for ever from what the call his Inheritance by a Divine Right; as well as what they was and publickly profess in respect to the most illustrious Protestant House of Hanover; Viz. That an Act of an infuing Parliament may to scin'd and annul the Entail and Settlement as establish'd upon the Family: To the former I have spoke already, and to the latter stall only fay, that I think no Body questions that the whole Body the Nation legally conven'd together in Parliament as the inter Legislator, may not by their Act repeal what has been done by former; but it is as well known, that a fundamental Law upon which the whole Happiness, Interest, and Honour of the Nation entirely depend, neither has or will be repeal'd, till such an E tream Necessity, if ever such a one can happen, as may make su an Act both just and necessary; for it is impossible to conceive the the Nation should ever be in such an universal Frenzy as to co spire its own Ruin; and I am consident that there is not an home Briton alive that does not hope that he shall never see a Parliana fo little Friends to their Country and Enemies to the Pretender, shall ever entertain a Thought, much less attempt it, because it mi necessarily involve the Kingdom in more Blood and Confusion the has been shed in it in all their Civil Wars since they were a Nation yet this as wicked and monstrous as it is, is an Opinion and hope to which our worthy High-Church Friends to the Pretender, do man of 'em to my Knowledge publickly maintain and justify, which we by the Bleffing of God they shall never see effected, since it is n possible, but by the Destruction and Effusion of the last Drop Blood of the Honest and Brave in the Nation.

'Tis a constant and undeniable Maxim of Policy, that no Goven ment of what Form soever, can possibly subsist and be long possibly but in and by the Virtue of the same Principles on which is originally founded, as that there eternally remains a Power the Body of every Nation and People, by a Joynt and unanimo Confent of the whole or Majority, to change the whole Face a System of it as they please; for as there is nothing that can be vis'd by human Wisdom so perfect as not to carry many and gre Defects along with it io as to stand in need of Amendment; and therefore Men uniting together for their mutual Benefit and Sea rity, must either be under the Necessity of enduring the Income niences of a defectuous and ill conflictuted Government, or the must necessarily be supposed to have a Power to redress 'em who they become apparently insupportable solely from the Weakness its first Establishment; for it is one Sort of Frenzy to imagine to a Community of free and rational Creatures should voluntar continue under any grievous Pressures and Incommodities of an in itick Conflitution of their own framing when it is in their Power reethemselves from 'em; and another to believe that they will not it that Power upon any necessary Occasions to redress'em; and it pon this Foot I maintain, that it is not only lawful, but necessary to nge the whole Frame of a Government, or any Part of it that ms most defectuous and detrimental to the Peace and Tranquility he Commonwealth, from worse to better by the legal Powers I e already mention'd, when the first Institution of 'em appears to e been deficient for the Pursuit of the publick Good which is not y the original but primary End of all civil Power and Governts in the Universe.

s these are demonstrably the Principles upon which our own are nded, whilst they are firmly adher'd to and maintain'd, they will nally be the Support of the Peace, Welfare and Prosperity of happy Nation; they are directly calculated for the Good of the ole, and without Artifice or Detour, tend boldly and strait to End; and whoever endeavours by any Means whatever to itute others contrary to 'em in their Place, are not only the linfamous Betrayers of God and their Country; but if ever they eed, which good Heaven forbid, we may bid a lasting Adieu to hat goodly Fabrick of Liberty and Property, which the Wildom Valour of our Forefathers have erected upon 'em; there is an of all that glorious English Freedom we have been blest with the Course of so many Ages, which has hitherto been both the y and Admiration of all our neighbouring Nations; for there is one under the Sun can boast of the Happiness of a noble gene-Freedom equal to ours, who have enjoy'd it so long, or maindit with so much Bravery and Courage, when they were posless'd ; and when we cease to do so whilst we have a Drop of English od in our Veins, or Courage in our Hearts, or Fortunes, or rds, or Hands to draw 'em in the Defence of so glorious a le, may we dye Slaves, or what is worse, live long to bear the ue and Punishment of our Treachery and Cowardice, under the ries of a wretched Bondage we shall bring upon our selves, but too well deserve, in as deplorable a Manner as some of the of our Neighbours once have done by theirs: 'Tis the fole Verand Influence of these generous Principles that have animated all great and good Men, Lovers of their Country in all Ages ppose the Wicked and execrable Ambition of their Tyrannical ces at the Hazard and Expence of their Lives, Fortunes, and all gs dear to em, whose glorious Examples I hope we shall alsimitate, and if possible, surpass in the Defence and Preservation he Liberties and Honour of our Country. 'Tis as wholly from inviolable Attachment to our ancient Constitution, that our fathers have merited the glorious Title of true Patriots and Loof their Country, than which there cannot be found one of more ellence and Merit amongst Men; as on the contrary, they who er deviate from these original Principles, or substitute others of a erent Nature and Tendency in their Place, have and shall ever steem'd the most dangerous and detestible Enemies of it.

upon the Strength and Vertue of the former that the moderate Lo Churchmen, or since I am compell'd to use a Term of Distinction the Devil and High-Church have brought in amongst us, then dern Whigs contriv'd to form and accomplish the late happy and me morable Revolution, when the Nation by the fatal Doctrines a Principles of the High were brought to the very Brink of the Pro pice, and with an equal Courage and Constancy endeavour full gainst all the foreign and more dangerous Machinations of domes Enemies, to support and defend it; 'tis not their ridiculous a and Jargon of republican, antimonarchical, or fanatical Principle with which as injustly as insolently they labour to reproach us, fool us out of the Sense of that Duty and Love we owe our Country, or fright us from a generous Defence of our precious berties and Religion; the nonfenfical Ribaldry of the Return 41 shall never Influence us into such an infamous Degree of Ca ardice or Perhdy as basely to lose, much less betray a Blessing invaluable as our native Freedom.

I shall only repeat what I have already faid upon this Arm that the Principles of 41 we honour, but those of 48 a detest more than they do: But I shall pretend ever to main that all the Miseries of that disastrous Time, and the lament Catastrophe of that unhappy Prince, were principally owing to pernicious Doctrines and Principles employ'd by the fawning H Church Priests and others, to invest him with a Power that to belong'd to any of our Kings of England; for whilst the Kings People contain themselves within the Bounds of Royalty and in ledge prescrib'd to each by the Tenor of the Laws, 'tis next wi possible there shou'd be any other than one joynt Joint Interest tween 'em, which must always terminate in such an Union and mony as will ever tend to preserve the publick Good preserably all private Considerations and Designs; upon these inherent the mited Conditions of our Birthright, we are contented to be, always shall value our selves upon being most true, loyal, and to ful Subjects; but our dear High-Church Friends shall excuse a they please, or let it alone, if we with much Ingenuity and It ness repeat to 'em that we shall never prevail with our selvest contented to be their Slaves; and that we know our felvesto in possession of an unquestionable native Right and Power of dela ing our Lives, our Fortunes, our Laws, our Liberties, and our ligion against all the Encroachments of ambitious and tyram Princes, without incurring or in the least deserving the odios putation of seditious or rebellious, except with them whose Pro ples and Persons we heartily despise. there has been of great and heroick in the renowned Common-Iths of Greece or Rome, that struggled so hard for theirs; and ind every thing else that has been esteem'd commendable, or fe-worthy amongst all brave and civiliz'd Nations. But let the nions of our High-Church Friends or Enemies, be what they , we desire 'em to believe, that we by no Means place the rit of our Actions in their poor flavish Notions and Sentiments. in the native probity and rectitude of our Intentions. And as make it our glory, to have equall'd the bravest of Antiquity in allant, and generous Preservation of our Liberties, for more s than any of 'em have been able to do theirs; we hope and bt not by the Bleffing of God, in transmitting ours to our la-Posterity, to surpass the most renown'd of the ancient Greeks Romans, whose noble Struggle in the End, by the Ambition of t Men, Corruption of Priests, and Treachery of others, (for cannot impute it to want of Courage,) terminated in the worlt greatest of all Evils in this World Slavery. And as we have hitherto inued in a happy Condition of Freedom, that has so eminently inguish'd us from the rest of the Neighbouring Nations, who e once as free as we are, but at present groan under the weight Chains of their own making, in this we hope to exceed 'em by tinuing so till there is an end of Time.

Ve are not insensible what Impressions the Notion of Republican imonarchical and Fanatical Principles, have made on the Minds such Men, who judge only by Sounds and Appearances, and not penetrate into the Fund and Nature of things, not so much rirue of any Weight in the reason of 'em, as from a certain Air and bearance of the Popularity. The Principles we advance, are the ce of God and Nature, supported by the universal Consent of akind, to whose Judgment we freely submit 'em upon the Truth' Reasonableness of 'em, without forcing of 'em any other way n their Belief, or begging their Affent but for the intrinsick dence they carry along with 'em; which if I am not in an Eris a Practice quite contrary to that of our Adversaries, who sisterially inforce their's, as Oracles not to be disputed. The roaches of Republican, and Fanatical, so injuriously thrown upon by the Artifices of High-Church, are as ridiculous as they are and malicious; they have neither the Sanction of divine Aurity, nor the Voice of Nature or of Reason, or the Consent of nkind to support 'em: They are no more than the lewd Visions Chimeras of a small number of Men, who either thro' Ignoce and Want of Application, understand not the nature of Gonment in general, or the particular Interest of their own; or ich is worse of such as thro Malice, or the Corruption of a slaand mercenary temper of Mind, endeavour to pervert and dech their fellow Subjects, in order to promote the scandalous Des and private Interest of a shameless Faction. The violent and orous Attempts that were made within the Memory of our Fars, to change the Government establish'd upon Monarchy and erty, and reduce it to the Form of a perfect Democracy, which,

I must repeat is what our reverend High-Church Politicians mean by a Commonwealth, are undeniable Evidences of the na ral Strength and Vigour of our Constitution, which has only Error, if I may speak so, of too much Health, which may ren it liable like the natural Body, to be shock't by external Inciden and violent Conclusions of Faction, which is the Fever of a Sm but make it impracticable wholly to subvert and overturn it; nav ven absolutely impossible to change the whole face and and System of it, otherwise than has been said by the joint and una mous Confent of the whole Legislature. This then is what we ftly call meer Vision and the Chimeras of a Faction, the Languagen of Fools who know no better, or of Knaves who in private Via are hir'd to betray the true Interest and Liberty of their Count For there is nothing more certain, than that it is as impossible in perfect Democracy, to inlarge their Dominion and Power by glory of their Arms, as to preserve themselves long in a flam Freedom, from the Invalions and Infults of ambitious Print more potent and formidable than themselves. For where there continually difference of Opinions and Sentiments, and class in Councils, which are utterly unavoidable, where the Voit every individual is necessary for the Forming and Execution of important Delign, there nothing of Security, Stability, or On can be reasonably expected; and where they are wanting, a Commity of that fort can neither pretend to extend their Conquelle broad, defend their own Freedom long, nor enjoy that Peacen Happiness and Security at Home, which are the natural End and terest of their Association. This then is the airy Fantom of a Hi Church Commonwealth, which they would make the World lieve by the most false and infamous Insinuations, we are labour by our Principles to introduce, in the room of the ancient subtre tial one of our Fore-Fathers; a Form of Government long fines ploded out of the World, (if ever there was any such in it of Consideration,) in the Place of the most beautiful, vigorous, belt constituted Government under the Sun; a mishapen Bitch, Spawn of a bigored High-Church Zeal, resembling the intemper Heat of some parts of Africk, which is observed to ingender m Monsters than regular Productions, with which they have labour hard to fright the People into a Belief of the horror of our Del to banish the genuine Offspring of our Ancestors, to make room their aukward illegitimate Monster of an imaginary Democracy.

The good God be prais'd, their frontless Practices have not all the Success with which they flatter'd themselves; tho'the have had but too much both by this and others, which I take notice of in the Sequel, for the Repose and Happiness of Country. The Eyes of People are pretty well open'd to discent wretched Shifts and Artifices they have not been asham'd to ploy to carry on the glorious Caufe of High-Church; our hom Country Men and Fellow Subjects are well enough appriz'd at t time of Day, which of the two contending Parties are truly continuing our ancient Constitution, upon the noble and gener iples of legal Liberty, and legal Prerogative; and which are troducing new Schemes and Principles absolutely destructive of former, and stretching the Latter beyond all the Bounds and ations prescrib'd it by our Laws. The World is at length senwho it is that is for bringing in, and establishing spurious or ofitious Births of any kind, to the Ruin and Slavery of the on. We cannot prevail with our felves to embrace, much ropagate such dangerous and pernicious Absurdities as were own to all the honest, wise, and civiliz'd People of former Tho' we maintain that all civil Power and Dominion origiderive from and center in the People, yet we maintain that xecution of it is ever lodg'd in Magistrates legally elected and tuted by their unanimous Consent, and confirm'd by the Sanof the Laws. Without troubling our felves with the Titles of pream Magistrate in other Communities, we more particularly ur that of our own, as it has been deliver'd down to us by our I Forefathers, and as re-settled upon its first Principles by the lorious Revolution, under the Administration of our rightful as Supream, and the Lords and Commons in Conjunction We abhor all Thoughts of a Government folely popund democratical, tho' I shall boldly affirm, that even such a f one under all its Disadvantages, is infinitely preserable to that makes all things fervilely depend folely upon the WillandPleafure ngle Person; for I may enjoy my Life, my Fortune, or my y, tho' but insecurely under one; but there is nothing that call my own an Hour longer, than an absolute despotical t shall think fit to permit me. Let'em reproach us as much as they , with Principles Anti-tyrannical, Anti-absolute, and Anti-arbiin our Prince's acting against the Tenour of our Laws, we own and make it our glory to profess 'em; but as for their ples Antimonarchical, in respect of our rightful and legally tuted Kings, who have the fear of God, and the Laws before Eyes, as the Rule of all their Actions, their democratical ples in the Sense they would basely infinuate 'em, we let 'em that we dislown, that we detest and reject 'em, with the Scorn and Contempt, that we do their impotent Malice, and anners, as more befitting the Designs and Practices of Men, as they have not yet convinced the World, that they are rs of more good Sense, than is to be found amongst us, yet sufficiently discover'd that they are of a stock of Knavery, and oft infamous Prevarications; which as we are fure we shall be guilty of with Respect to our Kings, our Country, or any Occasions of mortal Life, we neither envy nor grudge em. are the Principles of the modern Whigs, consider'd as ery Basis and Essence of a Constitution, which so eminently guishes us from all other Nations, and by which alone the , the Honour, the Interest, the Religion, the Liberties and nes of the Subject, can be entirely preferv'd in the Vigour and ction of their first Establishment; by these we hold our selves ensably oblig'd to honour our Kings, and without Scruple em all the just Deference to their legal Authority, which the Laws of the Land limit and circumscribe, by the same Ven and Power that they fence in and secure the Liberty of the ject; we with all Cheerfulness pay 'em that Submission and s giance the Law requires, whilst they imploy the Powers, the Law invests em with for the good of the People committee their Charge; but we do not hold our selves oblig'd by our gion or .Conscience to pay 'em more; we do not set up for W of Supererogation either in Religion or Politicks. We leave to Flights to those Worthy Persons, who are something more as related to a certain Church, that makes a Profession of 'em, pretend to more Grace than the rest of their Neighbours. In we are humbly contented to discharge the Duties and Office both, with that Refignation and Modesty of Men, who as we fensible, that we are subject to the Frailties and Imperseding Humanity, have Grace enough to acknowledge it, and fquare Duty to God and our King, by the Rule and Measure of our tural and imperfect Capacity; yet with a fincerer Devotion my and more ingenuous Fidelity to the other: For the Words In and Allegiance, about which our more refin'd High-Church ticians, keep such a terrible Pother, import, or demand non as the very Etimology of 'em, ad legem, manifestly determines, as he of our Princes, who does, or shall at any time exert a lo which the Laws do not allow him, has, and ever shall be ela a Tyrant, which is a Monster, not properly of the Product Growth of our Soil. We cannot by any Means think our oblig'd to pay, either in Reason or Conscience, the same Submi and Obedience to such a one, as we hold our selves indispension render to all just, wife, vertuous and valiant Princes, who the good of their People, the fole end and rule of their Administra by the Obligation of our Interest as well as Oaths. And as in tue of our Principles, we freely acknowlege the Superiority and gal Authority of our limited Monarchs, so are we in return mitted to expect and demand from 'em, all the reciprocal Office his Power, for the Defence and Maintenance of our Religion Liberties and Properties. And as these are the Principles of Modern Whigs, to which they have firmly and constantly add I am bold to affirm, that by the very Nature and Vertue of a Man cannot be otherwise than a true Patriot, and a faithful Subject. And with the same Confidence I hardly maintain, upon any other whatfoever, especially those known and noted of High-Church, it is impossible for any Society of Men, to ther the one or the other, in a free and limited Monarchy con ted as ours is.

In such a noble and generous Nation, where we enjoy and dom as ancient as our Original, when for our Sins the Despermitted by any Instruments Foreign and Domestick, to sow Seeds of Division amongst us, that grow up into a Distinction two formidable Parties; as it is the greatest Missortune that befal us, and the greatest Occasion of Rejoycing to all our England a Man without the Spirit of Prophecy, may venture boldly to tel, that the Ruin of that Country is not far off; unless by a

Providence, and the extraordinary Care and Vigour of the ture, it be timely prevented by the Suppression of one of Fatal Instances of this kind in ancient Story, are the Factions Blew and Green, in the Bizantine Empire, and of the and Gibelins in the Roman, and that of Whig and Tory in vn. Whoever is but little acquainted with the Circumstances Ce, which it is not of this Place to be particular in, will eafily vinc'd how fatally those unhappy Factions contributed to pree those great Empires into their Destruction: The one expoe Greek to the insupportable Slavery of the Turks, which to ay they groan under, to the utter Subversion, both of Empire he Christian Religion. The other to the aggrandizing the of the Popes, and their corrupted Clergy the High-Church. f those Times, upon the Ruin of the German in Italy, and of the whole Empire, to the infinite Scandal, as well as preof all the crown'd Heads of Europe, even of the same Comn. And we have but too melancholly an Instance, of the ous Situation our own Affairs are in from the unhappy Dion of Whig and Tory; to prevent the terrible Consequences, ich it ought to be the constant Prayer and Application of ehonest Englishman, who loves his Religion or Country, fince un of the one can never be effected, but upon the Extirpaf the other. Yet where there are two great contending ers, who upon different and even opposite Principles, equaltend to pursue the good, and honour, and true Interest of Country; it is impossible for 'em both to be in the Right. will always be found this remarkable and effential Diffe-That that Society or Confederacy of Men, who act conforto the known and fundamental Principles of the Government ed upon Nature, Equity and Reason, may properly be called y, and that the honest one too: Whereas, they who upon e Schemes, act against those known and fundamental Princiagainst the Dictates of Nature, Equity and Reason, who by hing and propagating novel Doctrines in their Nature and n, destructive of all civil Power and Government, who by and illegal Artifices, surprize the Prince, disturb the pubreace, either to subvert the ancient Establishment, or upon luins of it, to lay the Foundation of their private Fortunes, propriety of Speech but Faction, and that the most pernicious angerous one that can arise in a State. So that the only cer-Rule, whereby to judge of the Sincerity of the Intentions of are the establish'd fundamental Laws, and the common Prinon which the Covernment is originally founded, where fuch happy Distinction is in Force. I have already fairly shown the iples and Doctrines of the Whigs or moderate Low-Church ; and proceed now more amply to enquire into the Nature Import of those of the Tories or High-Church-Men, and the whole to the Reflections of my honest Country Men, fellow-Subjects to make what Judgment they please; nor shall rance any thing but what is publickly known to be both their iple and Practice.

Far be it from me from believing or afferting, that there are amongst the Tories great Numbers who are entirely in the truel rest of their Country, upon the original Foundation as it is blish'd by the Laws, and who will chearfully spend their Liver Fortunes in the Defence and Preservation of it. I think it im ble to conceive that Gentlemen of that Distinction, of noble ancient Families, many of 'em possessed of great and consider Estates; bred up with a Taste of the noblest Liberty, can so far get those generous Ancestors, who by their Wisdom and Wi purchas'd and transmitted 'em, or indeed themselves, so as to the Hazard of endangering their Loss, and by that Means, de both themselves and their Posterity of those Estates that may en em to make so considerable a Figure in their Country; crreno to that inestimable Treasure of their native Freedom, which Compliment of all the other Bleslings and Advantages of Life; yet as every Man is not capable of making a Right Judge and Estimate of Things, either thro' want of Capacity, or the common Defect of an ingenuous Education, or a natural Slot ness and Inapplication to inform himself of the true Nature of Government he lives under, we see, by a too forrowful Expense which in this Case is superior to all reasoning, that there at too many of 'em who blindly espouse those Principles of Faction, which are destructive of the very Essence of our Con tion; and with a blameable implicit Faith and Assent, give all the Frenzies of such who devise and propagate 'em onlym cret Designs, without giving themselves the time or trouble quire into the true Nature, or to weigh the terrible Conseque of such Principles and Doctrines; but if there be any among who are really sensible of the dangerous Poison and Design of and yet continue to defend and maintain 'em, they must be so to be in the Secret, and are so far from being true Englishmen English Tories, that they are manifestly English Traytors, and worst and basest Enemies of their Country; for if the ancient fritution of a free and generous Nation be to be overturn'd, or low'd up in Slavery, it imports not much by what Means lucht lamity is to befall it, whether by the Ignorance and Cowardin some, or the Malice and Treachery of others; tho' with this ble Difference between the Fool or the Knave, that the igno and timorous have at least some Appearance of Excuse from the fects of Nature or Education, and by a common Sentiment of manity, may deserve Compassion; whilst the other shall eve held in Execration by all that there is of wife, of honest, or tuous in the Universe; the former may be an honest Man in the tom, and an Enemy as it were by Accident, the other is alway Traytor in Form, and of Profession.

But there is a Third Species lately sprung up amongst us, where and cover themselves under the Distinction and Character the Tories; a sort of new Refiners in Divinity and Politicks, where found the Wonder-Secret of securing a Protestant Government, under the Domination of a Popish Prince, and the Parant Religion, by the tender Care and Affection of the Pope,

Courts of Rome and France; who glory in the Honour of the e of High-Church-Men and High-Flyers, who not only infinuate, with a bare-fac'd Impudence, inforce these Doctrines, to intro-Popery and a French Government, the Confequence of which honest Englishmen, in their Senses and Integrity, are apt to Slavery: These are a fort of a monstrous Motley Offspring, beby the Jesuit upon the spiritual Whore, who, under the Cover he most pure and holy Religion, are manifestly the most impla-Enemies both of the State and National Church. Ask one of e Reverend High-Church Bigots, whether he has any Intention is the Peace and Settlement of the ancient Constitution, he with a very grave Face and compos'd Countenance tell you, or if there be any Emotion appears in him from the Question. ill arise from his seeming Resentment, that you should suspect capable of being guilty of such a Wickedness; if you ask him, ther he has not a certain strange fort of a Hankering after his o'd Pretender and Popery? He'll start as if he had seen his Fas Ghost, and with the same sanctify'd Hypocrify, tell you, No: bu demand, whether in his Heart he is not a profes'd Enemy he Succession of the Crown, as establish'd on the Illustrious estant House of Hanover? The Answer is ready, with lift up ds and Eyes, No; he has taken an Oath of Abjuration against Pretender, and others of Allegiance to her Majesty, and Fidelihis Country, and those are the Security for his good Behar, and in lieu of all Justification. 'Tis certain that one cannot, out a notorious Breach of Christian Charity, suppose Men of Function, making Profession of Religion, to act wilfully athe Obligation of a solemn Oath, which is the strictest Tye inforcement that human Wisdom can, or the Divine has hithermmunicated to restrain Men's Consciences, and oblige 'em to thful Discharge of their Duty and Engagements; but when by an impious Presumption, shall pretend to discover and asto the Divinity they pretend to adore, the notable Diffiration fecret and reveal'd Will, whereby they make the God of hacting Contradictions, whilst they make Him, by the Authoof his reveal'd Will, enjoyning Men the Observance of Statutes Ordinances, under the Pain of the most dreadful and eternal hments, and by the Decrees of his fecret Will, allowing him a contrary, and in Opposition to 'em, and yet reconcile his inels and Justice, when they think fit to descend from the sun Power in the Heavens, and place the same secret and reveal'd in Princes, who in a just and legal Sense, are esteemed sup, and his Vicegerents here on Earth, and make them by Verof the one, ordain all the honest and commendable Means imaple, for the Good and Conservation of the People committed to Charge; and by vertue of the other, put in Practice all the cious ones, that may tend to the Destruction of the State in Characte ry. It may with great Reason be imagin'd, that such blaspheiticks, " Cafuifts, those Reverend Privy-Counsellors of the Holy Triniint Gove nd Kings, under the Influence and Spirit of their Darling the Pr ol-Divinity, have reserv'd a notable Share of this same secret e Pope, and reveal'd Will to themselves, as particularly, what may be singular Use and Succour to 'em in the frivolous Article of an Oat which under this excerable Distinction, they may swallow in the own Sense and Meaning, and disgorge it in that of the Legislature discharge in Appearance the Obligation of their Oath, and at same time elude the Force and Intent of it; and thus for Instancy your High-Church Casuist may by his reveal'd Will, make all the Professions imaginable of an inviolable Attachment to the Homa and Interest of his Country, the establish'd Religion, and the section in the House of Hanover; and at the same Moment, by secret Will, wish some of 'em subverted and chang'd, and other the Devil.

God preserve me from ever entertaining so uncharitable Thought, as to believe that all Men of this boafted Denomina of High-Church are of this Opinion; but I am but too forrown convinc'd that there are but too many of 'em who are : There without doubt, amongst'em, many who are eminently distingui by their Piety, Learning, and the Probity of their Manner; there are far greater Numbers, who blindly follow the Ordens Commands of their Superiours, either for the Reasons I have alm mention'd, or in view of Preferments and a private Interest; ferable Purchase, God knows that such Men make at the Profit tion of their Judgment and Conscience! Let'em no longer pres to amuse and deceive us with the Professions of their Lips, w we know their Hearts are far from us; we are not to be bank out of our Religion and Liberties by ignorant, prefuming Fook malicious and defigning Knaves. Mens Actions and Defigns at known by the Nature of their Principles, and their Actions and more lively Images of their Thoughts and Intentions, than t Words and Expressions; nor does the Severity of these Resemble concern or affect any, but such who are obstinately and malicin bent with a fludy'd Application to the Ruin of our common ther, our dear Country, and amongst such I freely bestow'em, were intended for 'em. If fuch Men would in good-earnest delin re-establish in the World the Opinion and Reputation of that nefty they have taken so much Pains to forfeit, let 'em renounce! disown those shameless Principles and Doctrines, which to com the Scandal of our Time, they have so industriously propagated, which, if continu'd and maintain'd, will in all Probability of nate in the Ruin for which they are design'd; yet, tho' their id has been but too general, and like Vermin and ill Weeds in at Soil, has spread fast and far, God be thanked, there are good tidotes to prevent a further Contagion, and good Specificks at h to divert the last and fatal Confequences of 'em. We are again in our Senses, and we know how to employ 'em; we' Swords by our Sides, and have not forgot the Use of 'em; we great Numbers of honest Englishmen at home, and gallant in Friends abroad; we have an adorable Providence, that has ever watchful for the Deliverance of these happy Nations; and have the Confolation to know, that whilst the adversary Fad shall continue to promote the Designs of their Doctrines and Pro

the Authors of 'em, in the Opinions of all honest Englishmen, ever be accounted as the most despicable of all Traytors both id and their Country. Those of most Note, which have been dustriously spread amongst the good People of these Nations, I modern High-Church Politicians, the genuine Offspring and les of Jesuitism, are

that our Kings are in the Possession of the Crown by Vertue of Divine Right and Commission, which place 'em above the Reach all Laws and Power upon Earth, and make em accountable for r Actions, how impious and detestable foever, to God alone. his seems at first View to be a Notion so wild and extravagare, barely to advance it, is sufficient to confute and destroy the dit of it; it may indeed found well enough in the Mouth of an tick, or an African amongst whom when there is a Man Child there is born a Slave; but it is hardly possible to conceive how ould find room in the Head of an English Man born and bred up legal establish'd Liberty; yet to the Scandal of our Mation. have, and are still to be found amongst us, but it has already so roughly handled by several learned and honest Lovers of lawful Kings and Country, and confuted with fuch a malcu-Spirit and force of reasoning as has never been answer'd, and is inger in any Esteem but with such who with an Heroick (if I profane so good a Word to so vile a Quality) Impudence, earry fill the same Designs for which it was first calculated, I mean of enflaving their Country. There are no Arguments of to Weight as those deduc'd from the Authority of the Holy tures, with such as are convinc'd of the Truth of 'em; which they are natural and rationally inforc'd, carry an Evidence 'em which we are not permitted to dispute; yet those brought thence to prove it by Filmer, Heylin and their modern Dikiave been proved to have been to shamefully wrested and milepto manifeffly abour'd and inconclutive of what they presend to out, that it is but loss of Time to endeavour further to refute pose 'em; fince there are but one fore of Men amonest us, I those of High Church who are not sufficiently convince, both e Falseness of the Arguments and the Wickedness of the De-I shall therefore the more briefly touch on this Point here. le in the foregoing Part of this Discourse I have already oxthe Absurdity of it from the nature and original of Civil Power; hall only take leave to add to what, I have formerly faid, that there were any Inflances of the Inflication of Kings by a e Right, which must of Nesesshry make con facted and inviothey were certainly to be look'd for amongst God's own Peohe Jews; yet we not only find God himself raising up parti-Men to execute his Vengaricoupon unjust, wicked, and tymin-Kings, as in the Cafe of John and the House of Mah, with l others; but the High Brieft, the Sanhedring, and the Peohereby Virgio of their natural Right, the Information, or Pern of Heaven frequently doing the fame Thing, fomerings pug their divine Kings with Death, and often thanstering their to other Families exclusive of the former forever; and yes

In that formal Description of a King in the foremention'd h of Deuteronomy we plainly see his Power, his Duty, and his Of regulated by God himself, and limited into a narrower Compain those of a present Doge of Venice, and infinitely in a less than a King of England; we find there no Manner of Authority to on and use a great People like the vilest Slaves; nor of his being countable only to God, when he was wicked enough tod no frantick Dreams of High-Church Monarchs exempt from h ments due to the Transgressions of the Laws by which Gal pleas'd to circumscribe 'em: These are the Fumes of them School Divinity Prophets, which have more of the Ravings Delusion of the Pagan, than of the Lights of Jewish or Chi Priests. I wou'd against their Opinion, from the very same h rity, and I hope better apply'd, desire these Men to consider, the Prophet Samuel in the 17th Chapter of the first Book of I in that elegant and pathetick Description of the Manner with the King they fo much defir'd shou'd reign over 'em, describes the feries they should be reduc'd to, like the rest of the neighbourne tions, by his Tyranny over em; which shou'd be so grievous, and insupportable as shou'd compel 'em in the Bitterness of their his to cry out in that Day because of the King they had chosen, an Lord should not hear 'em in that Day. This was the easy, the py, the flourishing Condition of a People under the Tyranay divine commission'd King of the High-Church Stamp, unlimited unaccountable for all the Wickedness of a Male Administration and tho' the Propher animated with a Holy Zeal, was angry blam'd 'em for rejecting the Government of their God and de a King; yet if they wou'd have been contented with fuch and was describ'd according to the Tenor of the Law of Moses, M 'em in the 13th Chapter.

King. this admirable Description of the Prophet, the Character of a ed King bears a wonderful Resemblance and Analogy to an exor-, unaccountable, absolute and arbitrary King of France, with all luable Bleffings of a tyrannical Government; that of a good one, to lawful and limited one of England, with all the real Happiness dvantages of a beneficent and moderate Administration of a Prince, has both the fear of God, that of the Laws, and the good of his Peoternally before his eyes: The one is the Divine, Glorious and Iful Monarch of the High Church; the other, the Elected, Belov'd onour'd Majesty of the Low. I shall conclude this Head with this leflection, that if our Learned and Judicious Bratton is bold to afthat he of our Kings, who deviates from the end of his Institutithich is ever the good of the People and Common-wealth, ceases he Vicegerent of God, and becomes the Vicegerent of the Devil. take leave to add, that the High-Church Priest, by what Name or loever dignify'd or diftinguish'd, who by his impious Flattery and ines, shill influence his King against the known Commands of and Laws of the Land which circumscribe him, to exert an uand arbitrary Power which no way belongs to him, to the prejund ruin of his People, will make a very fit and excellent Chaplain Satanical Unholiness.

en this Monster for its grossness and deformity was exploded out World, the same restless and impatient Spirit that was the Father as Wickedness is ever fruitful, soon begat another as like the for-

When Men have abandon'd the Ways of e and Honour, to follow the Instituations of a false Policy, and singthe sweet and venerable Insluences of the most pure and excelctigion, are animated only with a turious, stery Zeal for what ally the Appearances of it, what Wickedness are they not capable of deligning; what Mischies of introducing and executing in a N on? A boundless and irregular Ambition of a few great Men, support by the Bigottry of a false, intemperate Zeal for the Church, has been the Fountain of all the Commotions and Calamities have affin in all Times the most flourishing Kingdoms of Europe; and to and choly Demonstration of those of our own, which have at this brought both the State and Church to the very brink of their Subm Before these cursed Doctrines were propagated amongstus, we not the most happy People upon the face of the Earth, in then Injoyment of our Religion and Liberties, under the Protection Laws? And what n the Consequence? Why even one of the most beautiful es under the Heavens depopulated; immense Treasures, either Profusions of Lewdness, Corruption of Foreign States, or nance of Armies, (to usurp with as much Injustice as Violence e Rights and Dominions of his Neighbours) exhausted; the na more miserable Slavery, as having been once free, under remment, I cannot but fay, Tyranny of the most Christian Turk, than those under that of his fingular dear Friend and in the East; himself in Execration with all Men, hated at lespised abroad, beaten, reproached, contemned, (till--Church! ld the bleffed Estate and Condition of a People, under the tion of a Prince, invested with an absolute arbitrary Power, either God, or Nature, or Reason, or the Laws of any free ever allow'd or approv'd off! Behold the happy Situation to refereverend High-Church Doctors wou'd reduce their Counand Fellow-Subjects! Misery of every Fashion and Nature nieparable Appendage of Slavery, and Slavery is the insepappendage of absolute and arbitrary Power. Show me a Prince he Sun invested with it, and I will shew you a miserable herd es; for they don't deserve the Name of Societies of Men, veneither Sense enough to know their Misery, nor Vertue and e enough to free themselves from it, or Generosity enough, to hazard all Things in attempting it, and burying all the unes of inglorious Life in the Grave, if they miscarry; for it tely preferable not to be, than to be Slaves. If these Highmen would let us know for what other end they propagate avish Doctrines amongst a free People, we shall gladly hear essons, and endeavour to answer and confute 'em; but if it offible to affign any but that of breeding Divisions and Dins amongst us, to betray us to the common Enemy, whatreutto esteem and treat'em as the most infamous and profligate Traitors? We are already as happy and contented with the Power and Authority of our Kings, as we defire to be; but nowledge our felves under no Obligation to allow em more necessary for the Support of the Honour and Majesty of their ter, nor under any not to oppose and resist em when they ofusurp it; we are very well contented to be True, Loyal and

Faithful Subjects, but we despise and abhor the condition of She if we can prevail with our selves tamely to put on the Yeak deserve it; hitherto our generous Ancestors, and we our selves desended our Country's Freedom from the Usurpations and Incoments of our ambitious Kings; and I hope both we and our so ty shall ever keep up and maintain the same noble Sentiments, may everlasting Slavery, I mean in this World, be the Lot of a cowardly or treacherous Englishman who departs from 'em; and my Opinion that there will be but very little Incouragement for ards and Traitors to hope for much better in the next.

But this Doctrine of an absolute and arbitrary Power in out does necessarily support and include another laudable High-Chund that when the Crown is once fettied upon a Family, it must of a ty ever remain in it by an hereditary, unalienable and indefeated tle, exclusive of all Parliamentary Right, which is the confend People, by which it is pretended to be impossible to transfe in the next in Blood of the Family in Possessi n, upon any Pres by any Power under Heaven what soever. But I shall premise these notable Modellers of Government, that this was neverth nion of the wifest, the most honest and far greatest part of the ple of this Nation, though we are fure it is theirs, which is and we don't grudge 'em; besides the whole Current and Praction former times and History in frequent Instances are directly 'em. But this Doctrine of hereditary Right, with the other Words attending it, is so absolutely necessary to support this of their Pretender, which appears to be the fole end and and their Designe, that I think it properly falls to be considered this Article of absolute arbitrary Power, they are so mutual triv'd to support and maintain each other; for it is nonsent gine fuch an absolute Power in any Prince or Family, whi wicked People of a Nation shall pretend to the Power of m ring the Crown from any one Prince or Family, who may to by Maladministration, to another; and it is as great to image a Prince established upon the Throne by a Title that cannot to 'ted or touch'd by the People, will not assume the Exercise of absolute Power over a Nation of Slaves and Sots who will him; fo that according to these worthy Mens System of Politic the Crown once belong to a Prince by their Cant of an here unalicable and indefeafible Right, and it is with them, by a high Church Legerdemain, the most easy and plausible thing World to tack to him their beloved, absolute and arbitrary that is, in plain English, their hereditary, unalienable and inde King is neither better or worfe than an hereditary, unalient arbitrary Tyrant; and yet I think I have already provide the nature and origine of all Civil Power and Governments World, the People either by themselves or Representatives unquestionable Right, upon some certain occasions, to trans dispose of their Crowns as they see and think most for the tage of the publick good; of which I must remind these it Gentlemen, that in a very particular manner the good People have, in our memories, given the World and them a right no Instance of their Power of that kind, when they sent packing ain Jure Divino King of their establishing, together with their Trifles of hereditary, unalienable, indefeasible Right, with their precious Jargon of absolute arbitrary Power; and I take leave r to affure 'em, that we will take great care that their Darling. pured Son, shall never return to disturb the Peace and Tranquithese Nations, notwithstanding all the cunning and endeaof them and their new French Friends to accomplish it. There a Man of Sense amongst them that is not in his Heart conhow absolutely incompatible these unnatural Doctrines are our original Establishment; that we are a mix'd and limited chy, wherein the Liberties, Properties, and Security of the are provided for, by Laws as strong and obligatory as humane m can devise; and that the Royalties, the Prerogative, the Digad Majesty of the Prince have the Sanction of the same Laws end and support 'em; that whilft we preserve this happy Tement of Prerogative and Liberty, and there continues a perfect ny and right understanding betwixt the King and his People, m a Body to strong and vigorous, which the Attempts from , or more dangerous Diseases arising from Faction at home, metimes shock, and put into some disorder, yet will it be impeffible to be intirely chang'd, much less subverted by the or Treachery of any number or fort of Conspirators; for is the very Life and Soul of a State, which whilst maintained not only fits and enables it to attempt and perform great and ous Enterprizes abroad, but provides equally for the fecurity ppiness of the People at home; Peace and Plenty, and Riches ommerce are the natural Refults of fuch harmonious Unity and ment; and as the Glory of a free Nation can never be better shed than upon the Power and Reputation of their Arms, a and a People fo united can never fail of rendring themselves table to their Neighbours in what degree they please. Our nareedom is the Principle, if not the only Fountain of our natupurage, and that Freedom can never be long liv'd in the Peothen they become the Slaves of absolute Power in a tyranniince; nor indeed is it possible to preserve it but by a right unnding betwixt him and his People, under the happy Influence egal Power, and legal Subjection. This is a Truth that our n Enemies are but too well appriz'd off, and therefore they are norant, that the only infallible Way to hurt us, is by Divisions aken us, that under the Distractions that attend em, they may a greater Hope of Success make Impressions upon a People, lever durst attempt to attack whilst united; and to our great ir (where it is due) be it spoken, they have never wanted mer-Knaves amongst us at home, whom they have always found to join with them, to carry on the laudable Design of inslaving Country. is is the Case directly before us; the French wanted a favoura-

acture to introduce and establish the tyrannical Maxims of Policy,

licy, and abominable Superstitions of their Religion, in the Elis ment of the Pretender; and our dear High Church Brethren plain'd the Way for him, by their detestable Doctrines, settingu gether by the Ears to facilitate fo commendable a Defign. the natural Effect of a Principle diametrically opposite to the onr ancient Constitution; for whilst the Prince shall graspatal er unlimited, which the Laws do not allow him; nay even and in contempt of all Laws, but that of his own Will, a People as obstinately contend for the Liberties they were borning can nothing infue from so disastrous a Contention, but Disorder and fusions, which for the most part terminate either in Civil home, or Conquest with Slavery from abroad; a very bleffed & yet to this deplorable Necessity are we reduc'd, by the very Nata whole Defign of these Doctrines of absolute Power and held Right: We must either of necessity become as miserable sla some of our Neighbours, or of drawing our Swords to define Lives, our Honour, our Religion and Liberties; and of the tim honest Forefathers, Bleffings on 'em for it, have taught us by nerous Example which to choose. Whatever Frenzies these will ders of new Politicks may feed their foolish Fancies with, the not but know, that humanly speaking all their Attempts of are utterly impracticable; though the Poison of their Doctrius infect confiderable Numbers of the Weak and Credulous, it me disperse it felf through the whole Body, or a Majority of the Let a Conjuncture be never so favourable or propitious; will may be some Knaves in great Places they don't deserve, and Fools with great Estates which wifer and honester Men may we yet, by the bleffing of God, there shall never be wanting Number the Brave, the Wise, the Vertuous and the Powerful, as will than fufficient to baffle and confound all their wicked and chim Defigns. These Men knew, as well as we, that a King of by whom they could flatter with an unlimited Power, even with of the Estates cannot make a Law, or dispence with the Execut it, without the Consent and Concurrence of the other; north two without him; but it is much more reasonable to conclude the two Estates comprehending the whole Body of the Nation Nobility by their inherent Birthright, and the People by Dely shou'd have the Right of prescribing Rules, and limiting the who fits upon the Throne, than that he shou'd have the Power ver-rule and limit them by the fole Dictates of his fingle Willi may without Controversie be depended on, that the Concern of a Nation, as their Religion, Liberties, Properties and Civil are more to be intrusted on the Votes, Wisdom and Integrity of ny eminent Persons as compose the two most August Senates in niverfe, and amongst 'em many prudent and good (I wish Ico ways fay a great Majority) will be found, who in all Respects necessarily have the same Interest with the Nation they represent on the fingle Will of one who may want all the rare and great lities that should render him worthy to go in and out tefore to a People; nay, who possibly may either be Weak, or Ignoral ked, and who either may think he has, or be perfuaded by fycoit Flatterers and Slaves that he ought to have an Interest of his distinct and separate from that of the other two; for such a ce, with an unlimited High-Church Power, will ever be apt to nce the Establishment of his own and Family's Fortune and Auty upon the Debasement and Suppression of the People. Kings hielves are but very little oblig'd to these liberal Bestowers of this bitant and lawless Power, however agreeably it seems to flatter Vanity or Ambition; for there is certainly an infatiable Licentiousin Ambition, which all human Vertue is too feeble to restrain, so of a fort of necessity a Prince with such an unlimited and unrolable Power, degenerates into a Tyrant; fuch a one is always d, but never belov'd, for as Men can never love, whatever Proas they may make, that which hurts or oppresses 'em; they are rally inclin'd to hate what they fear; and this every Tyrant is but well convinc'd off; his Condition in this Respect, with all his er, being of all others the most unhappy, in that his continual from the Abuse of that Power which he knows are but just, igh possibly otherwise not prone to Evil) puts him upon such Vires to preserve himself, as rightly consider'd is a thousand Times e than the Punishment, or even the Death he is afraid of. he hereditary Right of our Princes, according to the Tenor of Laws, we always shall defend and maintain with all the Affecti-Fidelity and Allegiance that we know we are oblig'd to, as the ine and legitimate Offspring of our original Constitution; but purious Spawn of hereditary, unalienable and indefeasible Right lifown, and leave to the Care of its High-Church Fathers to profor as they think fit; and must acquaint em, that when in the nning, as has already been made appear, our Ancestors thought establish their Crown on the Head of the first Prince, who for Valour, Wisdom and Justice they thought best deserv'd it, and I'd it in Succession upon his Family, they did it under such Conns and Limitations as they thought sufficient to restrain both him all his Successors, and keep'em within the Exercise and Duties limited Power, so as to hinder all and every of them from devifrom the end of their Institution, which was to support and ntain the Lives and Privileges of their Subjects, the Peace, Hapis and Security of the Nation, and in one Word the publick Good he Common wealth. If these High-Church Politicians can afany other natural or more rational end of Civil Power and Go. ment, one wou'd think that they were oblig'd, for the honour heir Opinions, to communicate it to the World, and we shall care to confider and answer'em; but we desire them, above all gs, to offer scmething new, and not banter us any longer with nonsensical Fanaticisms of Heylin, Filmer, and such like Mercees, with their Title to absolute Monarchy by Descent in a right e from Adam, or the later Patriarchs, who honest Men never am't off or ever exercised any such Power; with their Divine umission for Tyranny deduced from the Holy Scriptures, though e is not in them one fingle Word for their Purpose from one

As God without all Controversy left to all Nations, when they can to multiply, divide and separate, the liberty of choosing white and model of Government they thought most proper for their my al Happiness and Security; I think it impossible for a Man in his fes to suppose a Community of reasonable Creatures, to make a crifice of their intire natural Liberties to any fingle Person or his mily in Succession with fuch an unlimited and uncontrolable Por as might enable them, whenever they pleas'd, to use them like Sin that is, to have the absolute Disposition of their Lives and Form at the fole Arbitrement of their fingle Will: History is abundan fruitful of Instances of many great and formidable Nations, or nally free, that have in process of time been reduced into the de rable Condition of Slavery; and we have a very dreadful one in Neighbourhood, of one of the nobleft Kingdoms in the University but this is, by no means, to be attributed to the nature of real monarchical Power as such, but to extrinsical and foreign Caule, either a fecret Disposition or Decree of Providence, as a punishment for their Sins, the Ambition of wicked and aspiring Princes, Degeneracy of an ancient Nobility, the Villany of flattering more nary Sycophants, or the general Corruption of a People by a hou fatality defign'd and predispos'd to Ruin; for there are other m Nations of the same Model of Government, who by their Will and Valour, upon the Vertue of their first Principles, have had good Fortune to preserve and defend their precious Liberties in the Usurpations of wicked and tyrannical Princes; which, ast deserve all the just and great Praises that can be due to the mol minent Vertue and Merit, shall be of glorious Example for thein tion of all succeeding Generations. God be thanked that we me this Day, however dangerously beset and undermin'd by these in ving Doctrines, not only one of, but the happiest of all free Po under the Sun; and we shall make it our Gory to preserve ourself so against all the fraudulent Designs of our French, and all others pish Enemies abroad, and all our treacherous High-Church Out home; ours, Heaven and our Wise Ancestors be prais'd, is a mixt limited Monarchy under the Administration of our Kings at the of it, but with such Restrictions as is known to all the World; Laws are the facred Term and Barrier, equally of the Power of Prince, and the Liberty of the Subject; we acknowledge our Cro hereditary, by the next of Blood in Succession, upon the same ditions with the first, who for his Vertue and Merit was thought to deserve it; the Principal of which obliges the King in being govern his People conformably to the Intention of the Laws. every Successor is indispensably oblig'd to bind himself to observe the best of his Power, by an Oath as solemn and obligatory as a be thought of amongst Men; by which, as has been said, he inge tio

aintain the Church of God, and the ancient Freedom, Laws and rties of a great People committed to his Charge. This then is the pensable Duty that all and every of our Kings puts himself unefore his Coronation; and notwithstanding his hereditary Title e Crown which our Laws allow, a King of England who should nd to exercise the regal Authority, by Vertue only of his herey Title, forfeits his Right; for he is not nor can be accounted a King with a Capacity to act, till he be inaugurated, and has the Coronation Oath. This was the Case of the late King es in Scotland, when he prefumed to exercise, not only the regal an absolute and tyrannical Power, without having ever taken foronation Oath, and was one of the principal Articles and Reaof his Abdication and Expulsion from that ancient Kingdom; his is the only Foundation of that Fealty and Allegiance we afards swear to him; he by Vertue of his Oath swears first invioto maintain and defend the Rights and Liberties of his Feople, hey afterwards, by the same Sanction and Solemnity of an Oath, r to bear true and faithful Allegiance to him, and chearfully conte by all the means the Laws allow to support the Dignity and fly of his Character. This is of the Essence of our Constitution; the religiously adheres to the Observance of his Oath for the al good of the Nation, the People owe him by Vertue of theirs dispensable Fidelity and Allegiance; but if he wilfully violates the manifest Detriment and Ruin of it, I speak with the Voice bense of the Nation to all High-Church-Men, that the Peoare then absolved from that Allegiance which was only connal.

ne nature of a reciprocal Oath in Matters of Contract, is with eforce to bind the respective Parties to a sincere and religious Perance of the Conditions mutually stipulated between 'em; but it th nonsence and madness in the highest Degree, to suppose that one, and that the greatest of the Parties shall only be obliged to ve and perform those Conditions, and the other a fingle Person ftat his liberty, not only not to observe, but despise and break 'em by any Right pretended to be inherent to the regal Power; ne of these two things must necessary follow from these Highch Doctrines of Hereditary Right and absolute Power, either a King of England by such a Title is under no obligation to take oronation Oath, (for in their Account, he is a King without it by erior divine Commission) which is directly contrary to the funntal Laws; or for the same good reason when he does take it, he is not indispensably obliged on his part to observe the Conditiof it, which engage him to act and rule conformably to em. If ormer, I leave it to every Englishman to consider what will beof his antient Liberty, when it is folely at the Will of the Prince, out regard to the Laws that are made to preserve it; if the latone would be glad to know a reason why the People should be still ed to continue their Allegiance, which on their Part they have n to a Prince, who by the breach of his Oath no longer contihis Protection to them, nay, who may visibly labour to destroy

This impudent a piece of licentiousness, which as it leaves themselve loop-hole to creep out at when they please, whilst they would gage the rest of their Fellow-Subjects, who differ from them in nion, to a nice and strict Observation of theirs; so it invests the Ph with an immoderate Degree of an illegal Power, that enables is to do evil and oppress his People with the greater Impunity, wife and glorious Ancestors have always paid the utmost Onein and Allegiance to fuch of their Kings, as continued to govern according to the Laws and Constitutions of their Government, so have we, and I hope ever shall do, and think our selves oblight it, by the very Nature and Spirit of our Principles, tho' we're not under the Obligations of an Oath; but as they have in all h bravely made use of their natural Rights and Means in their H to oppose the Violence and Usurpations of tyrannical Princes, abused the Power intrusted with them solely for the Good, w Ruin and Oppression of their Subjects, so have we, and by then of God shall ever continue to do to. There has not been one Kings who has gone about to abuse this deposited Power, orth tray the important and honourable Trust reposed in him, whi not paid the Penalty of his Wickedness; some with their Liver by Deposition, and others by translation of the Crown from Families to that of others. the inseparable Concomitants of Violence and Usurpation in a narchy constituted as ours. What Punishments those Wretches erve, who are the Authors and Instruments of promoting 'em by propagation of such Principles and Doctrines in a free State as are voidably productive of 'em, I leave to their own Conscience in Blood to reflect, and to the Legislature in proper Season to conr in this World, and the great and just God to bestow in the next, thus I think it evidently enough appears, that the noble and beauti-Fabrick of our Government stands firmly creeted upon the folid ndation of the Peoples Confent and certain Stipulations and Conons between them and the Prince, whereby it is mutually provided the Grandeur and Legal Majesty and Authority of the one, and Tranquility and Happiness of the other, in the peaceable Injoynt of their immemorial Rights and Privileges. 'Tis very furprito see these wife Bigots ridiculing the notion of what we call ginal Contract, without in any manner affigning a more rational uncontrovertible Principle and Foundation of Civil Powers, if had not taken too much pains to convince the World, that as eare no Truths ever fo rational, self-evident, or demonstrable, they will not renounce, when they stand in the way of their Des; so there is no absurdity or nonsence so gross, so monstrous or culous, which they will not espouse and extol to the Skies, when feem proper to promote their Interest, and the wicked Chimeras heir Faction. Will Men believe nothing, but what they actually and read with their Eyes? Is it impossible for them to give their ent to a thing, that from Reason and Nature, and the universal ce of Mankind carries all the Evidence that the nature of such a g is capable of, unless they read the first Deed of Settlement, that framed betwixt our first Kings and their People? Or is it at all lutely necessary, that such an Agreement should have, when first be, been registred in form? Or if it was, which I do not in the question, may it not by length of time, carelessness, treachery, en thousand other Accidents, through the Succession of so many es, be supposed to have been lost or destroyed? What are become Il the antient Monuments and Records of the first Assyrian, Chaln, the Persian, the Median and Egyptian Monarchies? And yet there ttle or no authentick Evidence in any History, more than a bare ation of their once having had a Being in the World. Shall we telore deny, that there were fuch Men as Nimrod, Belochus, Cyrus, aban, Arfaces and Sefostris, with the wonderful Revolutions they re Authors of, because we have not before us the detail of their pendious Enterprizes? But to come nearer both to Home and the nt; Can the most noble and antient Family in England, in all their ords and Archives produce any Patent or Deed by which their Progenitor, and they after him hold their Estates, or derive their pours but of tweive or thirteen hundred years slanding? And yet no y doubts, but that there was originally fuch Deeds or Patents for m. And when I mention only that space of time, I don't intend by by any means to restrain our native Freedom to it, for I have de it appear, and will ever maintain, that the Birth of our Liberty is as early and antient as the very Beginnings of our People, as in leaft as any Light of Hiftory can inform us; yet, supposing that the never was such an original Contract as we intift on, reduced into and recorded, it will at least be necessary for these Men to all some other Principle of Civil Power, than what they have hither offered, and that may, not like the rest, deserve to be exploded of the World, with the same contempt and derision with their oils but till that be done, they will permit us still to maintain, that as plain to us as Light at Noon Day, that there was fuch a thing, ther recorded or not imports not much; because it is absolute inconceivable, how upon any other Principle any Government in have commenced or continue; it being the most incomprehen Frenzy imaginable to suppose, as I have already hinted, any num of Men as rational Creatures, to refign their whole Stock of na Liberties into the fole Arbitrement and Disposition of the about Will of any fingle Person, without the necessary Precautions for Security and Happiness, which was the only End of their entering to fuch Societies. The Inauguration and Coronation of our k after our solemn manner, is as antient amongst us, as their Being Character. We defire to know, if there be any time wherein Solemnity has not been performed, with very little differenceh the manner that is at this Day in Practice? What then is this foil it only a piece of Pageantry for a King of Brentford to amusean ing Crowd? Or is it an Effential of the Constitution of one greatest and most potent Princes of Europe? Either let our very divine Right and absolute Monarchy Mongers show us what august and formal Solemnity of Crowning our Kings was not let them confess, that it is no more than a repetition and confirm of a Cultom immemorial, and of absolute and indispensable need to the very Effence of legal Power and Authority amongst us; which every King from the beginning, and each of them in Succe on have been, if I may speak so, consecrated to the Office and ercife of the Royal Power; and if these Men would but senon confider the manner and nature of this Solemnity, the placing Crown upon his head, the Scepter and Globe in his hands, the Sm of Justice by his side, the anointing him with the Oil, all which their important Meanings and Significations, and confer a my Vertue and Power which he had not before; the demand of the M bishop officiating, which demonstratively implies originally the fent of the People; and the administring after all this a facred of in the most solemn and venerable manner, to ingage him to a faith Discharge and Execution of the great Trust that God and the Pop have called him to.

Whoever, I say, will seriously restlect on all this, will find him obliged to acknowledge, that the whole Ceremony is no more that certain plenary Recognition and Confirmation of an original of tract, and a repeated Declaration of a Usage beyond Prescriptor otherwise the whole is but a dead and senseless Letter, a fort of Strace, and ridiculous Mummery. It cannot, I think be reasonable supposed, but the first Donation of the Crown by the People of

We leave m to fall down and worship their Idol of Hereditary Right of ir own setting up, and pay him their hasty Obedience in what mer they please; but we are contented before we offer ours, till Laws give our King a Legal Title to demand it; and then we I honour and defend him to the last drop of our Blood and Fores; and in this, whatever the Opinions of those others may be, we very fure that we have the Suffrage and Concurrence of the Wi-, the Greatest, and far most Honest Part of our own Nation, bes the Practice of all the other few civilized Kingdoms in Europe to end our own; and I must take leave to tell those worthy Persons, ta Parliamentary Legal Right, that is, the Consent of a free and ling People, is of infinitely more Force and Strength, than all the reditary Titles in the Universe, from Adam down to this Day. thout it; for the One will never make but Tyrants, and the Other vays just and limited Monarchs, or lead them into the way of their ty again if they forget it.

Our Gracious and Religious Queen, though these dangerous Doines have been revived and trumped up under Her Reign, by it Friends in Appearance, but in Effect Her most dangerous Ences, holds the Crown She wears by an unquestionable Hereditary ght; but I humbly conceive, it would be both a Violence and front, offered to Her Judgment and Goodness, to think that She I not believe Herself more secure and firmly established on the

Throne, by the Consent and Affections of Her People, than the Title barely of Descent and Succession from Her Ancestors; for s has had but too fatal Instances in Her own Royal Family, believe the many of Her more distant Progenitors, that nearness of Bion is not always the best and securest Title to the Crown. The ftrious House of Hancver has undoubtedly a Right after Her In jesty, to the Inheritance of these Kingdoms; yet we firmly believe that no Prince of that Family could promife to himself the Honor of Swaying the Imperial Scepter of these Nations, meerly in Right of his Title by Confanguinity, if it had not been confirmed a established on them by the Authority of the Legislature; nor w any Wife and Understanding Prince ballance a Moment which the two Titles is stronger and preferable to the other. Neither a present Gracious Queen, or that Illustrious Family, are much of ged to these wretched Broachers of a Divine, Hereditary, Unalica ble and Indefeafible Right; for by the very Nature and Necessity fuch a Principle, upon Supposition that the Pretender is the Leg mate Son of King James, the Queen can have no manner of The to the Crown She wears, I mean, in right of Succession while lives, or any Legitimate Children he may leave behind him; that in Effect, these false and pernicious Friends of Hers makes Her Majesty, no more than what we call in plain English, a dom right Usurper; and yet there is no Man in England besides, thating not esteem Her his Rightful and Lawful Queen, by vertue of & Parliamentary Right, added to strengthen Her Hereditary One. very same Obligation has the Illustrious Protestant House of How wer to these Slaves, who are drudging for their Pretender; whow all their seeming Affection for the Reformed Religion, if they il of him, (so full are they of their Divine Hereditary Right) would rather bring in a Popish Branch of the Houses of Orleans, Savent Bavaria, in exclusion of them; and yet when it shall please si to call the rest of that Illustrious Protestant Family to the Crown England, we will spend the best Blood we have, with our Fortuit to defend and support their Legal Pretensions to it, which the gislature by a Parliamentary Right have thought fit for the Son rity of the Protestant Religion, both at home and abroad, with much Wildom, as well as Justice, to bestow it. A King of Engla with this Title, who is a Wife and Valiant Man, by the Extent Exercise only of a legal and limited Power, is capable of making greater and more formidable Figure, than any Crowned Head Europe: And if he is obliged by the Duties of his Office, and by Obligations of Gratitude and Honour, to watch over, and promot the general Good of his People; if there are eternal Cares and he xieties, and almost insupportable Fatigues that surround and aging him in the Discharge of a Duty ever troublesome and tumultuon a loving, generous, and grateful People have endeavoured with Pm fusion, to recompence his glorious Toils: First, by the return their Hearts and Affections, which are a Prince's most valuable Treasure, as well as greatest Strength; and next with an Estate and Revenues, more than sufficient to maintain in the utmost Splents He She lagnificence the Grandeur and Majesty of the Royal Character; 1 lay, that Her present Majesty, and our late Kings of England, a greater clear Income and Revenue than any other Prince in lendom, considering the vast disproportion of their Dominions umber of Provinces and Kingdoms, I think I shall advance a Ponot far distant from the Truth. Far be it from me upon this le, to consure the Wisdom or Generosity of our Predecessors; ow far it may be consistent with the publick Good of a Nationake a Prince who may happen to be bold and enterprisor for ich and powerful, as to be able of his own Fund to make apts to break in upon the Liberties of his People, (this is no thing for such a one to offer at) I leave to abler Politicians, hose whom it may more nearly concern, to consider and dene.

hall conclude this Head with some few Reflections upon what Il Prerogative, and the dispensing Power of the Prince, which h there is nothing more frequent in all Mens Mouths, yet few em rightly understand. There are questionless several Royal eges and Powers, as Marks of Authority and Distinction, anand inherent to the imperial Dignity, all of which that are nd Legitimate, are specified and confirmed to it by the Laws; s they are peculiar Characteristicks of the Grandeur and Majesty Prince, invested in him by the Consent of the People, so the ways supposed to be of such a Nature, as shall lead him directly nly to their Preservation and common Happiness; for to suphem to grant an excess of Power to him, whereby he may be ed to hurt and oppress them, is what we vulgarly call Nonand in High-Church Men, who by their Principles, permit him xercise of such an exorbitant and destructive Power, in more e and violent Terms, Knavery and Madness; and even those hare not distinctly mentioned and specified by our Laws, and rinces have pretended to assume as inherent to their Royal icter, if they are not such, as in the Exercise and Execution of , promote the publick Good of the Commonwealth, as they ways the infallible Occasion of Disgusts, Complaints and Murpgs which often terminate in Seditions, Civil War and Rebelthey have feldom failed to end to the Prejudice, and not unently to the Destruction of the Prince and his Family; for I the Royal Prerogative is rightly and excellently designed to ly the Power of doing Good without a Rule; fo that whatfoact of Power of the Prince does not directly and folely tend at End, is not so properly Prerogative as Usurpation; yet how ven this Power of doing Good without the Authority of the may be advantageous and confident with the Liberty of a free mited State, has not that I know been determined by any Man; his we have been affored of by Experience, and that in these Nathat the Exercise of such a Power in Wise and Vertuous Prineven of doing Good without or beyond the Law, has been drawn Examples by violent and wicked Ones, to do Evil contrary to aw, under the Vertue and Pretext of Prerogative, inherent to the Royal Dignity; fo dangerous a thing it may prove to graft the Exercise of any Power whatsoever that is not authorized by Sanction of the Laws; for as there are infinite Hazards and Dans in Ambition, which few Men foresee, and most Men sink under there are doubtless to the bold and aspiring bewitching Charms that most human Vertues are too feeble to resist; the Natured which is infatiable, is eternally imploy'd for the inlargement of Po er, which in Princes, though possibly their Intentions may at it upright and tending to the publick Good, when it grows exorting is always pernicious; and to preserve themselves in an Autim though unjustly usurped, they are frequently put upon Praction maintain and continue it, as often in the end envelope them in tain Destruction; so much both safer and more honourable has its always for the Kings of England to be contented with the lim Power and Authority that the Laws allow them, than to strive in illegal and exorbitant One, which they have never attempted, h the Ruin of themselves, and frequently that of their Families.

The whole Legislature is the only supream and absolute Power, pendent and uncontrolable by any other under Heaven; our li a high Mark of Honour and Dittinction, are plac'd at the Ha it; and because in a Constitution, like ours, it is neither politic necessary that the whole Legislature shall always be, and actually ift; yet on the other Hand, as it is absolutely necessary that should not be a Moment wherein Justice may not be demanded and ministred, they have therefore intrusted in the Hands of outline who are always supposed to be, what we call the Executive lo of the Law, which is but one Part of it, with the illustrious M ction of Supream or Head of the Common-wealth; and as it rives this Royal Mark of Power folely from the Authority of Laws, which imply the consent of a free People, so can be with Injustice manage any of the most important Concerns Nation, without the concurrence of the other two Parts, which him compose the intire Legislature. This we know is a Dott that will doubtless displease our strenuous High-Church Assenta an uncontrolable Power in our Kings, though it be never the most certainly true; and I challenge any of them to disprove it Reasons and Authorities, either from Scripture, the common con of Mankind, or the nature of Civil Power, all which we unden have in the Defence and Justification of our Opinion; and I for affirm, that as our Kings have no manner of Power to make all which is only the Work of the whole Legislature, so neither he, without the utmost Ingratitude and Perjury, attempt to " 'em; for what is the Work of three distinct Powers necessarily common consent united to constitute em, can never, with by any separate one of them be destroyed; yet these High-Chi Sycophants are not ashamed to place their Hereditary Absolutes above all Laws, which they know they are not of Power along make; and knowing that a barefac'd Violation of them is too? to put upon the Nation, they have therefore found out the in ous Way of complementing him with the Power of dispensing ecution of them; though they are not insensible that this prea Ductrine of theirs was one of the principal Occasions of bringeir Martyr King, in the last Age, to an untimely and violent after a manner that all honeit Men and truly loyal Subjects and detest; for it is the same thing in effect to have no Laws, in all wife Common-wealths ought to be rigorous and inflexthe impartial and speedy Administration of Justice, as to have rce and Vigour of them eluded by the Virtue of a dispensing in one part, which could be only framed by the joint Connd Concurrence of the three. A King of England may fo far ce with the Execution of some Laws, as to commute or wholly the Penalty they inflict upon Criminals, for Faults they comsinft his own Person, his Crown or Dignity; though even that ence has often proved of fatal Consequence and Example; but not remit the Penalties they inflict for Reparation of damage the meanest of his Subjects; nor command their Lives, Foror Properties in any Instance without the highest Injustice; and ly affirm, that whoever place our Kings above the Power of ws, or invest them with any Authority of eluding the Force fign of them by any fort of dispensing Power, do it only to of establishing such an absolute and arbitrary one, as is not onetrically oppointe to the nature of our original Constitution, and e Laws which equally support the just and legitimate Authothe Prince, and the Liberty and Property of the Subject, but ch the immediate and inseparable Consequence is the inesti-High-Church Bleffing of perpetual Slavery.

I proceed to examine the Third of their Doctrines, which is an absolute, unconditional, passive Obedience in all Cases, texception, to all the Commands of the Prince, under the

flance or manner inconsistent with their civil Liberties as good jects; yet by the fatal Experience of these Nations and to our row we find, that there have not been wanting such, as to cam the Designs of Faction, have not been ashamed to preach and pagate a Doctrine, that unavoidably tends to the Ruin and Subve of all Freedom and all Religion; and it shall be allowed them, greater Plausibility and Appearance, at least, of the facred Auth of the Holy Scriptures, than either of the former. The Applica of formal Texts that feem to countenance and authorize the Arine, has had but too great Effects upon the Minds of great bers of honest and well-meaning People, who have not Capan inquire into the true nature of things. There is nothing more mon than for the Authors of all fuch Doctrines, when they with a Text of Scripture for their purpole, to profitute the venerable Authority of those Divine Oracles, to the most leud vagancies of a corrupt and overheated Imagination. God i that I should believe, that all who have espoused this Doctrine greatest Latitude, should deserve and fall under the Severity of Reflection; there are, and have been, without doubt many to ous and religious Men, who have themselves believed it, and much honesty and simplicity of Heart have recommended its Belief and Practice of others, deceived by the speciousness Arguments deduced from the Authority of the Word of God; as Failings and Errors are inseparable from Human Nature, it a breach of Charity to advance, that through a want of Abia fome to examine and comprehend the whole Tenor and Nature of the Doctrine and Authorities produced to inforce it, and w Application in others who are too apt to take things upon Trut by an obsequious and servile Resignation of their Judgment in of their Teachers as they may have conceiv'd a good Opinion tay it is not a Breach of Christian Charity to advance, that they been and may be deceiv'd; but for fuch of them as against thell of Nature and Reason, and even the Convictions of Confcience, and force those sacred Authorities to support and countenant most impious of all Purposes, debauching the Minds of thes and credulous, by the influence and impressions of such Doctris are defigned by them only for inflaving their Country, as the without all manner of Excuse, we leave them to reflect will count they shall furely give for the impious Abuse and Violati those divine Truths, which they know shall be the Rule by they shall be judged in that great Day of Retribution, when it be done to all Men according to their Works.

The Errors, the Absurdities and gross Illusions of this Dod have been so evidently demonstrated to the World, by so many ed and ingenious Discourses of true Lovers of their County, the most pure of all Religions established in it, and particular the excellent Efforts of the learned and judicious Managers of famous Tryal of an infamous Incendiary who revived it, that is indeed but little now of Moment remains, to add by any shall attempt it after them; yet with much Submission, I shall

to throw my Mite into the common Stock of their Treasury, ronly as is necessary for my present Design, which is to show both this Doctrine and the former (the genuine Product of the ern High Church Divinity) are calculated for no other end at time of Day, but to undermine and subvert the ancient Princiof our original Constitution, and to introduce another both Goment and Religion in the Person of the Pretender, absolutely inpatible with the Honour, the Liberty and Happinses of the Natheric principal Strength and Arguments for the Desence and recement of this Doctrine, are from the samous Words of St. I in the 13th Chapter to the Romans.

cr. 1. Let every Soul be subject to the higher Powers, for there is ower but of God, the Powers that be are ordained of God.

er. 2. Whoever therefore resisteth the Power, resisteth the Ordice of God: and they that resist shall receive to themselves Damna-

the Words are formal and decifive of what Duty we owe to the eam Magistrate, and we acknowlege them in the fullest Extent Force to be obligatory on the Minds and Consciences of Men g under any Form of Civil Government, folely in Vertue of r Divine Authority, which it is Impiety for any Min making effion of the Christian Religion to call in question or deny; and retake leave to fay, that we understand the Sense and Meaning his Command with fuch Limitations as it will naturally admit without Presumption or the least Offence to the Divine Spirit and, hority of its Author, and with regard to natural Reason and E. y, which are never repugnant to the revealed Will of God; we do it upon no other Authority than that of the same inspir'd Apowho at the same time, and in the same Breath that he teaches he indispensable Duty we owe to the Higher Powers in the Ferand Character of the Supream Magistrate, manifests and exas to us in as formal and decifive Terms, the Nature, the End the Office of the Magistrate to whom this Obedience is so justly due m us. Let every Soul be subject to the higher Powers, for there o Power but of God, the Powers that be are ordained of God; acknowledge it, and most cheerfully pay all that Obedience which are commanded for that very Reason, because the Powers that are ordained of God, and therefore of necessity just, reasonable, the good of Mankind, and fit to be obey'd. It no where apis to have been the Bufiness or Design of this or the rest of the offles in the Propagation of the meck and peaceable Doctrine of riffianity, (happy had it been for the World if all those who call mselves their Successors had been of their Opinion too) to interddle with, or change, or alter the civil Governments they found blished in the World; but to make it appear that the novel, but ine Moral they introduc'd, was so far from being opposite to, ch less destruictive of the civil Powers, that by the very Spirit Nature of it, it was of all others the most efficacious and fruitof the means to preserve that Peace and Unity that are so absoely necessary for the Conservation of the publick Tranquility and

So that if there be a Duty of Obedience inforced from the Wi of the Apostle to the higher Powers or supream Magistrate, ash they are the Ordinince and Ministers of God, on the part of Subject; there is, I think, in the Opinion of the same Apostle, if ty on the part of those higher Powers or supream Magistrat, shew that he does deserve that glorious Title, by Offices and Wi conformable to the divine Will and Commands of that God wh Ordinance he or they are, and to which they are as indispension submitted as the meanest Subject. If then the higher Powers and Ordinance of God who never can order any thing but what is reasonable, and for the good of his Creatures, and as such they conformably to this end of their Institution, we hold ourselves w out Restriction oblig'd to pay 'em that Obedience commanded the Apostle; because they can never be supposed to act or comm any thing in which they may not expect to be readily and chears obey'd; whereas if these higher Powers are unjust, if they are w ed, if they study the Hurt and Ruin of Mankind, Men will be and have good Reson too to believe, that they are not the 0 nance of God, but of a certain Being, whose Business it is to stroy whatever there is of Just, of Reasonable, and Vertuous arou Men, and confequently can have no manner of Claim or Pretent to our Obedience. The higher Powers then of the holy Apostle as Ordinance of God we obey, we honour, we reverence; the ther Idol of High-Church Divinity we freely leave to the full Flattery, the Respect, and if they please Veneration of her of Reverend Clergy; we for Conscience sake, and they for Wrath it is impossible in any well regulated Community to preserve publick Peace and Happiness but by a certain Subordination of Po ers, there noult of necessity be some that must be esteem'd Supre to which all the rest must be subservient, from which there can no Appeal to any other upon Earth; and which naturally imploys challenges that universal Obedience, without which no Government , bar

St. Peter therefore says, Subour selves to every Ordinance of Man for the Lord's Sake; the Expression sufficiently justifies what I have already offered, that left to the Determination of Men, to erect what Sorts and s of Government they pleas'd, for the end of obtaining Justice he universal Good of the People; whereas St. Paul describes wer to be the Ordinance of God: This I fay is eafily re oncilevithout the reproach of Contradiction, which for the Reason y mentioned, it is impossible they could be guilty of; they exactly agreeing in describing the Essentials of the higher Powwhether they call them the Ordinance of God or Man, as well Duty of Obedience annexed to them upon the same Conditiwhich on the Part of the higher Powers or supream Magistrate Nature and End of his Office, to wit, the publick Good, as behe Ministers of God for Good; and on the Part of the Subthe Duty of Obedience to him as such; so that as the same r Powers are properly said to be the Ordinance of Man, as the of the Prudence and Deliberation which God has left them iberty to exert in the Choice of what Government they think proper for their Safety and Protection, may with the same riety be said to be the Ordinance of God, insimuch as being no repugnant to any Precept of his Divine reveal'd Will, he by his robation establishes and confirms them; for I think it is equally offible to conceive, that the Great and Just God should appoint lters of Power over his People (except in Case of Punishment heir Sins, which has nothing to do with the Question before us) vil, as for Men to be under any Obligation of Obedience to as such; the Relation between them being solely founded upon ection from the Power of the Magistrate, which is only the m of Obedience from the People. his we take to be the genuine Sense and Meaning of this im-

Liberty of framing what forts of Government they should think convenient for their Commodity and Advantage; we confess selves under the strictest Obligations of Conscience, to pay the of Obedience to all the supream Powers we live under, who conformably to the Will of God, and the Precept of his life Apostles, whilst they maintain the Character of his Ministers for Go whether they be the Ordinance of Men in St. Peter's Sense, the stitutors; or in St. Paul's, the Ordinance of God, the Confirment Establisher of them. We know better than our Adversaries teach us, that our Interest, as well as Duty, indispensably ingign to a just Submission to all legally constituted Powers, even with the Sanction of a Divine Command: We know the Ties and gations we lye under, from Reason and natural Equity, in the before us; and we are not to learn from them, what more profe and particular Respect and Deserence we are to pay, when them mon Sentiments of Nature, and humane Reason, are enforced by Authority of a divine and politive Law, which no good Chil can impugn or dispute; but if these designing Bigots shall presi to erect themselves into Legislators, if they would have us rea their Opinions magisterically as Decisions in the most important terests of Mankind, if they expect that we should blindly and vilely complement them with our Affent and Belief, without quiring and examining into the true Meaning and Nature of We and Things, they will do well to vouchfafe to convince us at Authority of their Mission, and that by such Reasons as we can ther deny or answer; or if not, at least give us leave to continu our Opinions, which we conceive to have a much better four tion, both in Reason, Nature, and the Word of God, than the if they will force Meanings upon an Apostle divinely Inspired, wi could never enter into the Head of any rational Creature in his nary Senses, and rack their Brains to give convulsions to Words and intelligible in themselves, solely to carry on the wicked Da of a Faction, they must produce an Authority that we dare not filon, that is, something better than their own; their ipse dixita no manner of Weight or Importance with Men of as good Capa and Understanding, and I hope of much more Probity and Hom than themselves; if they will pretend to decide dogmatically them do it by an Evidence and Force of Reasoning, that may of vate our Judgments past a possibility of Disputing; we swear to Words but those of the Master; nor can we complement our Equ or Inferiors at the Expence of our Senses, our Liberties and out ligion; but if they are not able to produce any Authority of Kind, let them give us leave to confront their Impudence and fumption, with the Divine Authority of the same Holy Apoll who as he must be allowed to be the most certain and infallible terpreter of his own Meaning, will as plainly tell them at the time he describes the Office and Character of the Magistrate to w Obedience is due, after what Manner, for what End and Real the same is to be paid; not for any Chimerical Inherent Right nexed to his Person and Dignity as such, but only as he adi

ance of the Ends of his Institution, and approves himself the ter of God for Good to those whom he has by the Consent and on of a free People placed under his Care and Administration. shall only premise, that in all Texts of Holy Scripture which pable of more Meanings and Constructions than One, that is o be chosen and followed that is most conformable to common and found Reason; which whilst they are pure and untainted. , without Prejudice or Preposition, are never repugnant to the ed Will of God; and I leave it to the Reflections of those it may concern, whether a Sense easy, plain, and natural, infinitely preferable to that which is forced and constrained, us, figurative, or problematical; for I think nothing can be r, than that such Violences upon the facred Truths are of no er of Necessity, but to carry on the private Designs of Men, hintheir own Drefs and Nature are not warrantable, and thereand in need of a greater, though far fetched and disguised Auty of the Word of God.

is premised, I shall only desire these Reverend High-Church s, who are the Fathers of this Unlimited, Absolute, Uncondilizative Obedience in all Cases without Exception whatsoever, as I have described it, and such as they assign as indispensably o all Kings and Monarchs as such, from the Divine Authority oly Scripture, only to cast their Eye upon the Verses immeditollowing this Command of the Apostle, from which they detheir whole Authority for their Opinion; his Words are these, lice and Wickedness of those Impostors, whose Business it rather to watch over and instruct them in the Ways of Peace, of In and Righteousness, than lead them into Destruction by the Errors Illusions of an ungodly Sophistry. Here we are plainly told the fice and Duty of the Magistrate, with Respect to those who are Subjection to him; For Rulers are not a Terror to good Work! to the Evil. To speak in the Language of these Times, there can more be meant by these Words, than that he who in effect is the nister of God for Good, will always approve himself to be ful acting aggreeably to the Laws and End of his Institution, which the Ordinance of God, who defigns all Things for the Goods Advantage of his Creatures, and can never be supposed to exert unjust and illegal Power, to the Hurt and Prejudice of the Fo committed to his Charge, by any Acts of Fraud, Violence of pression, which are directly contrary to the Nature and Goodne the only Supream and Infinite Being; and that these of the Per who shall live in Conformity to the known Established Laws, in the necessary Duties of Obedience and Submission, can never to nably be apprehensive of any ill Usage or Oppression from in whereas Evil Works on the part of the Subject, such as area m test Breach and Violation of the Laws, as Fraud, Deceit, Rapine, justice, Violence and Disobedience, are justly liable to the less Penalties the Magistrate in the Execution of his Office, as a Term Evil Works, can inflict; and therefore the Apostle's Advice is, If wilt not be afraid of the Power, do that which is Good, and shalt have praise of the same; that is, do thy Duty in all the last ces of it required by the Laws, and thou shalt be so far from few the Severity of the Magistrate, that thou shalt be commended rewarded by him; For he is the Minister of God to thee for Go but if thou do that which is Evil, be afraid, for he beareth mi Sword in vain; that is, God and by his Permission the People's given him a Power to employ for the Preservation and Happin of the Common-wealth, by his Severity of Pun shing such whole be found the open Disturbers and Violaters of them; for he is the Minister of God, not only in his Capacity to reward and courage the Vertuous and Obedient, but in that of a Revenge execute Wrath, that is, Punishments on the Vicious and Refractor Wherefore, says he, We must needs be subject, not only for Will fear of Punishment, but for Concience sake, which is a nobler more generous, as a more Christian Obligation and Incitement just and regular Performance of our Duty. For, for this Cault you Pribute; by which no more can be rationally meant, thank a Proportion of each Man's Substance who enjoys the Protection the Magistrate, as is sufficient to answer the Exigencies and Necessit of the Government; for they are God's Ministers, attending com ally upon this very Thing, namely, the Peace, Prosperity and curity of the Common-wealth. Render therefore to all their dut, bute to whom Tribute is due; which Expression imports no me than what is due by Obligation of the Laws, and not by any Ri of commanding it otherways by the Magistrate; Gustom to om, Fear to whom Pear, Honour to whom Honour; that is, chearcontribute what the Laws allow every legal Magistrate acting e Minister of God for Good, both for the Support of his Dignity Character, and what shall appear necessary for the Defence and tenance of the Government of which you are Members; fear Power you ought to fear if you do Evil, as capable of puniyou; and honour those who have the same Power to praise recompence you if you do Well, by living consonantly to those s to which you are in Subjection. And I do not in the least t, that the Defign of the Apostle, by so often mentioning the er Powers or Supream Magistrates to be the Ministers of God. Good, was to let the Magistrate know the Extent, Nature, and of his Power; and to restrain him as well within the Compass Exercise of it for the publick Good for which he was solely ined, as much as to enforce the Necessity of the Subjects Obedito him so Governing, which can only be supposed to be the Inion, or to speak in the Language of the Apostle, The Ordinance od; fince all Laws, Divine and Humane, are equally binding obligatory in their respective Stations, both on the Magistrate Subject, or else there is an End of all Government: But there is one Word in all this from which it can be rationally, or indeed out the utmost Violence infer'd, that the same perfect Obedience be paid to a wicked Magistrate as to the good; for if the er, acting for the general Good of a People, is certainly the Orace of God, the Former, who acts only for their Ruin and ruction, is as certainly the Ordinance of the Devil, and has no ner of Claim to the Obedience but of such, who as out of their es carry on his Works; for his Servants, and I will add, his ects ye are whose Works you do; which may be matter of so-Reflection to the Authors of this Doctrine, so destructive of the ral Good of Mankind. This short Comment, design'd for the uction of my honest Countrymen, who may possibly have been d, is a plain and natural Explication of the genuine Senle and ning of this great and important Precept, which has been by h-Church Priests so shamefully abused to countenance the Doe of Absolute and Unlimited Passive Obedience, in all Cases out Exception, to all the Commands, how wicked or unjust foof their Arbitrary and Tyrannical Princes; with how much on and Equity, with what Regard to the Veneration due to the Apostle; with what Reverence to the beneficent and pacifick it and Genius of the most pure and divine Christian Religion, with what Advantage to the general good of Mankind or their cular Fellow-Subjects, I leave to every impartial and unpreju-I tree-born Englishman to determine.

hat is there that can naturally be deduced from these Words more a Duty of Obedience to the Supream Magistrate, legally exercia Power for the good of the People, and which every honest Man liged to acknowledge and pay? What rational Authority from the for a wicked and tyrannical Prince, by the sole Motives of his will, to usurp upon the Lives and Fortunes of his People without redress or control? What Obligation upon a People tames fubmit themselves to such unjust and violent Usurpations? Apostle commands me to submit to the higher Powers or Supre Magistrate, as the Ordinance of God for my good, does it follows I must pay the same Deference and Obedience to them, if they an unjust and illegal Authority only to my ruin and oppression must I be damned if I don't? Can it enter into the Heart of but a corrupt High-Churchman, that we are equally obliged in the same dreadful Penalty, to pay the same Respect and Obedin to a leud, vicious, fanguinary, rapacious, or libidinous Tyran, to a wife, just, vertuous, peaceable, moderate and valiant Prin If this be lo, the Authors of fuch Enthusialms must found their mions upon some other Authority, than that of the Holy Appl they have so impiously profaned, for they command us not thing. The Business of Christianity was to make Men both by and happier, and to teach them a purer and more excellent li lity than that under the Levitical Dispensation, to conquer their July Lusts and Passions, to inspire them with the divine Senting of Meekness, Humility, brotherly Love, and universal Charity, by these heavenly Graces to refine the grosser Vertues of comme Humanity; and this, under the Promise and Assurance of em Rewards to fuch as fincerely indeavoured to observe and pen the Precepts and Conditions of it, and of eternal Punishment fuch as obstinately contemned and neglected them. Nor does it where appear, that the Holy Apoilles thought, or made it their finels to concern themselves with the Powers they found establish in the World, farther than to convince it, that the Doctrines of mility and Obedience which they preached were of all others conducive to the Preservation of the publick Peace and Tranqui of Nations: For there is nothing more certain, than that the Chris an Religion in its natural Purity and Influence can never be the cation of any Commotions or Disorders in the World, tho' all have ever happened in it are owing to the Abuse of it in the H of wicked and ambitious Men; yet this is by no means to be buted to the Genius and Spirit of Religion, but to the Maliet Perverseness of such Wretches as dare profitute the Excellence Majesty of it, to the most shameful and execrable Purposes: 10 it could be reasonably affirmed, that the Christian Religion laid under any indispensable Obligation of a blind Obedience, with restriction to all the lawless Commands of wicked and tyrand Princes, we might with much reason affirm, that Mankind are little indebted to it. We have no reason to believe, that God, created all Men free, loves either Slavery or Slaves; and it is " from all History, and from none more than the Sacred, that it always manifesty favoured and incouraged all the Attempts of generous People in all Ages, who had Vertue and Courage en to free themselves from a miserable Servitude; and it may, w out presumption be said, that he has still permitted as a Punished of their Cowardice and Baseness, great Nations of the Asiatich Africans to continue in the Darkness and Superstitions of Page nel worthy the inestimable Bleffing of the glorious Liberty of the of God, who did not know how to hazard all Things to recoe natural Liberty of the Sons of Men. It was one of Machie-Errors, that the Christian Religion, by the softness and sweetfits Spirit, and peaceableness of its Doctrine, contributed to and abate that natural Fierceness of Mankind we call Courage, apprehension of the terrible Punishments it denounces after ife, which make Men fear to dye: But with respect to the At Genius of his Age, I maintain, that a Man cannot be truly and Valiant, who is not truly a good Christian; and that from infideration and certainty of those Glorious and Eternal Rethat shall infallibly be the Partage of all such as religiously rge the Duties they owe to God and their Country; and if in t of Civil Government, it teaches nothing but foft, gentle and ble Doctrines; in respect of our Country's Service, and the ce of the Liberties of Mankind, it inspires nothing but noble, ous and elevated Sentiments: We know, a notion of Honour s sufficient to hurry Men to hazard their Lives in Performance at and generous Actions; but the Glory that redounds from is but of short Duration, as being founded mostly upon the foundation of popular Applause; but it is a sense of doing what now is pleasing to God, and of true Religion, that inspires Men that Nobleness of Soul and Magnanimity, that as justy chalas they deserve Immortality for their Reward; and the Deof the Honour and Liberty of a Man's Country is with me fo and meritorious a Cause, that God, who is a Lover of Liberty, oubtless make Allowances to those gallant Men, who untimetheir Lives in their Pursuit; and I firmly believe, that so nod generous a Sacrifice, like Charity, shall cover a multitude of Religion naturally makes good, faithful and loyal Subjects, it is not maliciously profaned to the impious Designs of Factiut when it acts purely upon its own Principles and Vertue, it no Slaves or Cowards, who deserve not to be so; it refines Morality, and stamps the Lustre and Perfection of Divinity the feeble and imperfect Excellence of human Vertues. A Relithus confidered in its native Purity, as the chief Defign of it make Men happy in the other World with the glorious Liand Title of Sons of the Most High, can never contribute, forcing a flavish Obedience to Tyrannical Princes, to make them able Slaves in this; and if there be any Condition of Life more hed and deplorable than that of Slavery, we defire to be ind what it is by those Reverend High-Church Doctors, who such pains to propagate Doctrines to introduce and establish it lation, which from the beginning of time has injoyed and ded a Freedom that is not to be paralleled in the Universe. e Arguments drawn from the Practice of the Primitive Chriand the idle Fable of the Thebian Legion to Support and inthis Doctrine of unlimited, passive Obedience, are as frivilous mpertinent, as they are manifesty false and groundless. hinking Man reflect upon the Scituation and Circumstances of the Christian Religion in its Infancy, and we shall freely action ledge, that the first Christians were under an invincible necessity Obedience, and of tamely suffering the Reproaches, and all the Usage of their merciless Oppressors and Persecutors, without any fource but that of Prayers, and Tears, and Supplications to the they adored, either for Patience to suffer, or Courage and Refign on to dye under them. This Divine Religion was made known to World the latter end of the Reign of Augustus, when there had an end put by his Predecessor Julius's tyrannical Usurpation, and own, to all that glorious and generous Liberty, and withthe all the admirable Vertues which had justly rendered the Romani flers of the greatest part of Mankind; in the succeeding Regu Therius and Nero, two of the High-Church Lord's anointed, by Bleffing of God their Numbers wonderfuly increased; but it be considered, that in the beginning, the Converts and Profesion this Divine Religion were principally of the meanest of the Par as Servants and Slaves, who could not pretend fo much as tol Reemed as Members of the Common-wealth, much less to have Share or Concern in the Government: Let it further be confident that a Novel Doctrine, which tendered directly to the over-th and destruction of the Pagan Temples and Idolatry, which wa antient Superstition, not to call it Religion, established by the la was held in Execration by all Men in Authority, and Interesting Empire: It is natural from all these Reflections to conclude, the poor, mean, scattered and despicable People, could not, or darm to make an open and publick Profession of a Religion so opposite dangerous to that of the State, but at the utmost hazard and per their Lives; their Meetings therefore and Assemblies were all vate and clandestine, to prevent or avoid the Terror of Punishm unavoidable upon their Discovery. I must for the greater Illum on of this Matter further remark, that the first Professions of Christian Religion consisted principally of those of the Jewish on, who were numerous at that time in Rome, and who, upon account, were banished from thence about the twentieth year of Reign of Tiberius: These converted Jews, who by the Evanga Dispensation were sensible that they were freed as well from Bondage of the Levitical Law, as from that of Sin, had cotten ed a Notion, that by vertue of it they were exempted like from the Obligations of all human Laws: This was a dangerou ror, which made it absolutely necessary for the great Apostlein of politick Confideration, to preach to them the indispensable cessity of Obedience and Conformity to the established Laws Government, the there had been no other reason for it, from nature and utility of the Doctrine; because by a publick Resident or a contemptuous Opposition to those known Laws, they have discovered themselves to their most mortal Enemics, who waited for the occasion and opportunity to destroy and extirpate them and their Religion; thus happily undeceived of their b they were seasonably prevented from making use of any mean their Defence or Prefervation, in such a perilous and miserables in the my le G

What could be supposed more to contribute to their Security ultiplication than a quiet and peaceable Demeanor; than an independent Conformity and Obedience to the Established Laws igher Powers, who as they wanted not the Will, wanted only portunity to root 'em from off the Face of the Earth?

We know of no Religion that incourages its Proto undertake desperate, much less things impossible to huleans; and when Men ingage in such, 'tis more an Argument nzy than eitheir Religion or common Prudence. True Courage in the attempt of arduous and difficult Enterprizes by means the compass of human Reach and Capacity to accomplish; and this is rashness and desperation, which were never esteem'd ects or Indications of true Valour; and when Men miscarry unaccountable Darings, as they necessarily must do, they alapose themselves to the Reproach and Contempt due to their ity and Madness, but never merit the Regards of Pity and Com-This then was past all doubt the Condition of the first Proof Christianity, which as it absolutely oblig'd them to live in & Conformity to this famous Precept of the Apostle in the In-

of Obedience to the Higher Powers, so understood, by the g of God it was the principal Means of their Security and sation; and tho' he formally injoyns them the Practice of this ry Duty of Obedience to the Higher Powers, yet neither from Yords, nor any other of his own, or of any other Apostle, can nade appear, that they are commanded to submit themselves to the Miseries of an insupportable Slavery, which is the ne-Consequence of this laudable High-Church Doctrine in their sit, because it can never be made out that the Christian Reliu'd be design'd by a just and merciful God, for any other end e universal good of Mankind; nor can it be rationally infer'd he Principles of their Religion, or the Purport of this particecept, that because of the Circumstances of their Condition, id not pretend to defend themselves by the way of Arms, erefore it had not been lawful for them to have done so, if they had had the Power; for to agree from Mens Incapacity bility to do a thing, the Illegality of doing it, is a little out way of good Senle and found Reasoning. We acknowledge tho' the Apostle and the whole Design of the Christian Re is to make good Men, and faithful and loyal Subjects to a Higher Powers legally establish'd, and exercising that Power the general Good; we are yet to learn where we are comma to be the Slaves and Drudges of the Lust and Ambition of m and tyrannical Princes, who imploy it only for the general the former we confess to be the Ministers of God for our and as fuch we honour and reverence them, as we know woodlig'd to do, both from the Authority of the Divine Religion profess, and the Consideration of our Civil Interests which promote and maintain: but we are desirous to be inform'd venerable High-Church Apostles, whose Ministers and Instru they are to be esteem'd, who oppress a great and tree People mitted to their Charge by all the Acts of Pride, Cruelty, Re Fraud, Rapine and Violence, that either the Devil, servile! rers, or their proper Ambition may fuggest to them; such Ma feem to me to be rather the Instruments and Ministers of an Being, that sets himself up against God and all Goodness in hurt, than those of that just and adorable One, who, we are can never intend any thing but the Happiness of the Works own hands; and we must freely acknowledge, that how Plagues and common Enemies of the good of Mankind cand the glorious Character of the Lord's Anointed, and as such chi the Obedience mentioned by the Apostle, is a little out of our prehension, tho' it may be easy to those more intelligent of Church; nor can we prevail with our selves upon the Fore Credit of all their Arguments, to think that there is the fame dience due to such of our Tyrants as King John, Richard and ward the Seconds, as to Edward the First, Henry the Fifth, I the Sixth, Queen Elizabeth, our late Glorious and Immortal verer King William, or our present Religious and Gracious Anne. But be that as it will, we do not hold our felves oblight any other Obedience or Allegiance to our Princes, either from Authority of the Apostle which we venerate, or the Prince the Religion in which we were born and hope to dye, tha the known and establish'd Laws of the Land, and their Virtus dom, Justice, Valour and fatherly Love may justly challenge us, for their Care, Protection, and Promotion of the Happing their People; and without, in the least troubling my felf att nion of High-Church Priests about what I am going to offer, bold to affirm, that if it were left to the Choice and Judge Mankind, they wou'd renounce any Religion, by the Indi ble Necessity of whose Principles they must be condemnate Slaves.

erties of his Subjects, has no longer any manner of Claim to Obedience, or Allegiance; and this we maintain to have been entiments and Practice of the earliest Ages of Christianity, that then its Protesfors came by degrees to be posses'd of a Power ient to enable em to exert and justify em, as it has been efince in all succeeding Generations; for no sooner were their bers increased so vastly, that they came to be considerable through he Provinces of the Empire, but the Christian Valour became idable, not only to their Pagan Emperors and Enemies at home, o all the World abroad befides. Men who were fure of eternal ous Rewards for their Service to their Country after Death, gave obleft Examples of forwardness to sacrifice their Lives to such, as g only upon the poor and narrow Principles of Interest, or a glorious Applause, were more inclin'd to manage theirs; and they came to be imploy'd by their Emperors in their Armies, gave Marks of a Discipline, Obedience and Valour, that gloridistinguish'd them from the Hopes of all other Nations and Prons; for Superstition is ever fearful and cowardly, because Men ense can never be convine'd that it is other than the Artifice of y and defigning Priests; but there is a certain Divinity in true gion, which as it carries its Evidence and full Conviction with its Original from Heaven, always infpires Men with a Granand Elevation of Sentiments and Courage worthy of it; for eafily convinc'd the World, that the Christian Religion, though ade the best Subjects, made no Cowards, or incourag'd Slaves; hat it animated its Professors with the most generous Resolutio enterprize and accomplish whatever cou'd be expected from lourage and Valour of the bravest of Men: Death to them was e Reward of their Vertue, full as they were of the Glories that were fure of after it; whereas to receive it only as the end of Miseries here, was the highest Strain of Pagan Divinity. In ater Ages, the Wicklifites and Huffites in Bohemia, the Vaudois in Mountains of Pielmont, the Waldenses and Albingenses in Provence Languedoc, and the more Modern Calvinists in the Bowels of ce, (let not our High-Church Friends be frighted) have sufficiconvine'd the World, that they did not think they fin'd against Precept of the Apostle or Principles of the Christian Religion, n they drew their Swords in the Defence of that and their Lives Liberties, against the Violence and Injustice of their Tyrannical ecutors and Oppressors; the Succours and constant Assistance hour renowned Queen Elizabeth, King James, and King Charles fiff gave to the latter, during the course of the Civil Wars and motions in France, are sufficient Evidence of the Justice and lity of the Practice; nor won'd our Princes have given to erous an Example to their own People, of affifting Foreign Subagainst their natural Kings, if they had judg'd, like our Modern Church Politicians, that they were in Rebellion; or if they not been fully satisfy'd, both of the Lawfulness and Necessity of les taking up Arms in the Defence of their Religion and Liberagainst the Violence and Injustice of an Ambitious, Absolute, and Arbitrary Power; and that, both from the Authority of the B Scripture, and the natural Equity of fo glorious a Cause as the fence and Preservation of the Rights and Liberties of Mankind need not mention, or but barely mention, the Practice of our Nation, not inferior to any in Europe for Wildom, Valour and mous Liberty, and which in our Memory terminated in a glori Revolution, which freed us from that Inundation of Popery, Slan and Arbitrary Power that was ready, by the Influence of thefe crable Doctrines, to break in and overwhelm us; and I humbly ceive it may reasonably be presum'd, that the constant Practiced many great and valiant People, of so many wise, judicious and nown'd Princes, who cannot be suppos'd to be ignorant of the and Nature of their Religion, the Meaning of the Apostles, or true Interests of their State, will be of something more Weightin the thinking honest part of Mankind, than the ridiculous Vilian our bigoted and contemptible High-Church Divines, the mercen Tools of Faction, who are the most profess'd and dangerous mies of both.

The idle Story of the Thebean Legion were not worth the m tioning, if it had not frequently been made use of to support Doctrine of absolute passive Obedience, from the Opinion they of the Unlawfulness of Resisting the Higher Powers. There mention made of this Romance in any Historian of Credit of the Times in which it was suppos'd to happen, in the Reign of Dia an, and was the Fiction of some raskally Monk a long times for what End or Defign I leave every one to judge as he shallth fit. The Story, as I remember, is thus: Mauritius commanded dy of Troops, confisting all of Christians, who upon a thousand casions had signaliz'd themselves, and given extraordinary Prof their Conduct and Valour; it happen'd that when the Roman An was incamp'd in Savoy, their Enemies, out of Malice, or Envy their noble Reputation, and who wanted only an opportunity to stroy 'em, put it into the Emperor's Head to command 'em to la fice to their Heathen Gods, which the good Collonel cou'd not ther by Promises or Menaces be prevail'd with to do, as centrary Purity and express Commands of the Religion he profess'd; which a Decimation was order'd, and repeated till the Comma with all his Officers and Soldiers were put to Death; to whichm out Murmuring they peaceably submitted, to the great Joy and I umph of their Pagan Enemies. Now if this matter of Fact w true, as it is manifestly false, here were a notable Instance indet a blind Obedience to the higher Powers for Conscience sake; even fo, that fingle Instance wou'd not be of Force to perswal to believe that it was the general Sentiment of all Christians, necessary Consequence of that Religion they profess'd; and its Opinion, and that founded upon Reason too, that if that same a nel Maurice, at the head of above fix thousand gallant Fellows persuaded and incourag'd em by his brave Example, to have de their Swords in Defence of their Lives and true Religion, against Cruelty and Malice of those heathenish Adorers of their falle ou'd have left behind him a far nobler Character of a true ian Soldierly Courage and Zeal for his Religion, than by stander a Company of paltry Slaves, that did not deserve to live, with their Hands in their Pockets, whilst their blood-thirsty erciles Enemies in cool Blood cut their Throats. Much good to do High Church with such incomparable Christian Heroes, hey never have any better to fight their Battles; we assure em

re as little in our Esteem, as for our Imitation. ruft not here omit to take notice of another of their Arguments, eserves that Name, drawn from the Authority of the Fathers, n of the Church, not of their Country; and which concludes Matter just as demonstratively as the former; if these Men here and there with scraps of Sentences in some of their gs, that seem to countenance their Opinion, they quote and e'em as Oracles to decide the Question, without the least Alce or Reflection upon the different Circumstances of Time, or rious forts of Governments they and we live under. If they ertullian, faying, that it is not lawful for a Christian to make if he tells em that Jesus Christ in disarming St. Peter, for eohibited all Christians the power of making use of em; if nd Augustin affirming that the Emperor is subject to no Law. he alone has the Power of making the Laws; if they find le and others frequently inculcating the necessary Doctrine of ace to the higher Powers, they were not able to refift; they hey have brought a mighty Succour to reinforce their Opinion. hat is there conclusive from all this? We are willing enough all the Respect and Deference to those great and excellent s that is due to 'em, but they will excuse us if we cannot reheir Opinions as Oracles decifive of the Fate of our Country vil Liberties; in matters peculiarly relating to Religion, in they were principally vers'd, we are willing to regard their rity as far as it is supported by Scripture, and conformable to ; but we know they were no more than Men, and as fuch to Errors, and great ones too, even in matters of Religion, th they were mostly conversant; we know that they pretend any immediate Inspiration of the Holy Ghost, to render their ity infallible; but whatever their Opinions were in the point is, in relation to the fort of Government they liv'd under; of orce or Importance can they be suppos'd to be, to determine Affairs of a different State, of which they cou'd have no man-Knowledge? If the Doctrine they preach'd on this Subject, Power of the Prince, and Obedience of the Subject, were e and necessary in the Circumstances of their Time and Gont, it does not follow that it must be eternally obligatory up-People and Nations, under different Circumstances of Time dels of Government, I mean upon their bare Authority; and made out that it is expresly commanded by the Word of God, rary of which has been made appear, some Men, whole Inmay be to do fo, may put put what Weight they please upon uthority, but we know no other Foundation of Rule of our

Obedience than that of the Word of God, of Reason, and of Laws of the Land; which whilft they are not repugnant to eithe the former or natural Equity, we acknowledge to be infallible; whilft they are in Force, perpetually binding. We know very that there have been Laws amongst us, and long in force in our la which have been directly contrary to the rever I'd Will of God Reason and Equity; but we deny that they deserve properly in honoured with the name of Laws; the inherent Turpitude and quity of them destroy them; for their Tertullian himself willtelle that neither Antiquity, or the dignity of the Legislator, but the ture and genuine Equity and Rectitude of the Thing, give the Stion and Vertue to the Law; and I defire to know, whether Emperor commanded to do things expresty against all Divine Humane Laws, his Christian Subjects were indispensably of obey him, or thought themselves damn'd if they disobey'd fifted his unjust Commands, if they had it in their Power to If they fay they were obl g'd, let them prove by what Authoring then, we are plain to tell them, we grudge them not the Go fuch a Religion; if they were not oblig'd to obey in such al then the Necessity of such an absolute unconditional Passive ence as they contend for, is absolutely lost and destroy'd.

But for a further Illustration of this Point in Question to m nest Countrymen, I must defire the Admirers of this Author those Venerable Fathers, to reflect upon the different fort of Go ment they ha'd under from our own own; it was their form be born and live under the most Absolute and Arbitrary To at that time in the Universe; where it is confess'd, that the los of the Emperor was to them a Law: There was no such Th Title to the Imperial Crown by Election or Succession; but any most profligate Villain, who had either Money enough to on or Address enough to cajole the debauch'd and mercenny la was made by them in a High-Church Stile, The Lord's Am to whom all the wretched Slaves in their Dominions, and pu larly the Christians, the more peculiar Inheritance of the mol God, were indispensably, according to these Mens Notions, to pay a blind and unrestrain d Obedience to all their Comm how impure, unjust, or execrable foever they might be, under of Eternal Damn tion: Now in my Opinion, the principal, the only Peason why the Holy Apostles and their succeeding ples, were branded with the odious Characters of pestilent in ditions Fellows, was, because they could not upon the Print their Pure and Divine Religion Comply with the Abomination were commanded by their infulent and imperious Mafters very Non Compliance being an Levident Indication and India their Right of Refusing and Disobeying for Conscience Sake had had the Fower to have defended it; but that being w they out of necessity (if I may to (peak) chofe the only This left them in their miterable Scittation, which was the Glory figning themselves, and Triumphing in their Sufferings, who found themselves in an insuperable Inability of desending the o do and great Nations in Europe, together with our own, to flew the the Christians of all Ages have always made use of the Means the God and Nature leaves them to detend their Religion and Liberia from the Usurpations of wicked Princes; no Age of the World & ing persuaded that the most excellent of all Religious, the Christia was fent into it to destroy the Natural and Civil Rights of Manking but our own; which we think, if put in the Scale, will overballand both the private Opinions of the ancient Fathers, and those of our more modern High-Church ones, whose Interest it may be, for pri vate Reasons, to establish this Doctrine for the Service of a certain Pretender; nay further, he who shall advance that this Doctrined Obedience mention'd in the 13th to the Romans, in its greatest Land tude, was intended only to be purely temporary, and accommod ted to the Necessity and Circumstances of the Times of the Infances of Christianity, will advance a Truth, which I am sure the wiseto them can't disprove; since, as has been hinted, the Practice eveno the next succeeding Ages, when whole Countries came to be con verted and grew tormidable by their Numbers, sufficiently convince the World, that they were not of the Opinion, from the Principle of their Religion or Conscience, that they were debar'd from the Defence of their natural Rights and Liberties, when they weren olently and injustly invaded by their Princes. They had no Notion that because their holy Religion in oyn'd a just Subjection and Ox dience to the higher Powers, that therefore they were by the indi peniable Obligations of it to fuffer like Slaves and Cowards, or the it depriv'd them, or destroy'd any of their Civil and Natural Right they enjoy'd before; which fince they were of the Gift and Infin tion of God in their Creation, could never reasonably be supposed be repugnant to his Divine Will when it should be reveal'd, ord stroy'd by a pure and beneficent Religion which is the Act of it don't think it a Thing to be question'd, but that the Holy Apollo as Men divinely Inspir'd, were well aware of this; and foresawn impossibility of propagating a Doctrine attended with such a shocking Condition; for rational Men cannot eafily be supposed to embra any Religion, which should oblige them to quit the most valual Bleffing of civil Life, their Liberty in this World, for uncertain on in the next: The very absurdity of such a Design were sufficient make Men doubt of the Mission and Authority of the Promulgator as well as of the Truth and Divinity of the Doctrine; for it has be always the care of Inventers of new, tho' false Religions, to calcula them such as may agreeably flatter the Inclinations and Interests Men in this Life, as well as their Hopes of a more delicious Happ ness in the next. Let these High-Church Refiners upon the pure of all Religions consider, that under the Levisical Dispensation even God himself not only permitted, but rais'd up certain choll Servants, from Moses and Joshua to the renowned Marchabees the glorious Office of freeing his Feople, not only from the tyran cal Oppressions of the Kings of the neighbouring Nations, but a from the wicked Ones of their own. Let them reflect with w immortal Honour those great and renowned Men, even in the us

Paganism, amongst the ancient Greeks and Romans, who had the ertue and Courage to free their native Countries from Slavery, are nerated and distinguished by all that there have been of Wise, of aliant, and of Vertuous, in all succeeding Ages. Let them call to ind what just Praises and Honour have, since the beginning of hristianity, been given to those brave People who have nobly exted their Courage, and spent their Blood and Fortunes in desence their Religion and Liberties, as Things infinitely more dear and escrable than what they hazarded. And let them call to mind a sing, which they are but too apt to forget, or what is worse, to proach and discredit, I mean, that glorious Revolution which liver'd us from Popery, Slavery, and Arbitrary Power; and let em preach their slavish Doctrines to the Wind, or at least expect to ophane none with the Impiety of their Nonsense and Absurdities, t the Simple and Credulous, and tremble how dreadfully they

Were all these Great, Wise and Valiant Nations and People Sups'd to live in Darkness and utter Ignorance of the Nature and port of their Religion? Or is the true Knowledge of it referv'd ly to be communicated to a few corrupt and mercenary Highhurch Hypocrites, prostituted to the Ruin and Slavery of their puntry? Or if it be fincerely their Opinion, let them think it worth eir while to convince us of the truth of their Persuasion, by the mpliance and conformity of their Practice; if not, let them acowledge themselves the most Vile and Abandon'd of all Hypoites. ing control'd: The Moment he pretended to give them and the Church a Tafte of that beloved absolute Power they had compline ted him with, they gave their Lord's Anointed to understand, the the the rest of his Subjects might be us'd as much like Slaves as thought fit, yet that they, the facred Tribe of Levi, God's own n culiar Inheritance, were ever to be exempted from the illegal Exic of it; which whilst it was exerted in the Oppression of the ungol-Laity was most just and allowable; but with Respect to them, w most facrilegious and abominable. In this Manner, these excelled Subjects were the first that fool'd that unhappy King into his Ru and the first that flew in his Face and fool'd him out of the Kin dom; and thus damn'd their Opinion by the Contrariety of the Practice; shewing by a new Tour of Legerdemain of their He Church Divinity, the absolute Necessity of unlimited Passive Ober ence of the Subject to the Prince from the Authority of an Apollo in a bare-fac'd Violation and Act of Resistance of his Power so their own.

For us, we thank God, our Practice has been ever fairer; we new flatter'd him with a Power we knew did not belong to him, a charg'd our selves with any Obedience to him, but what we likewi knew we were oblig'd to by the fundamental Laws of the Land and if we contributed our Share to deprive him of the Crown a Royal Dignity, which he abus'd in the groffest Violation of the Laws, we did but what we ought, and in detestation of a Tyran we never encouraged or promoted; and we have the Authority our great Charter, and our subsequent Laws for doing to. As w are perfectly convinc'd of the Truth and Reasonableness of our In ciples, we are neither afraid to own them, or asham'd to act alw like honest Men in conformity to them. We honour and response and faithfully obey our Rightful and Lawful Kings whilft they Wife, Just, Vertuous and Valiant, which are the noble Qualities cessary for the Protection and Happiness of the Common weath at the Head of which we have plac'd them for that Find ; but we not think our felves oblig'd to have the same regards for foolish, in pious, unjust or cowardly Ones, who by perverting the Order a End of their Institution, vacate and forfeit it; or who imploy Authority given folely for the Good of the People, to their Ruin Destruction. We know our Laws originally made our Kings, they who confer and grant the Power, can questionless modify a limit it as they think shall most conduce to the publick Welfare a Happiness: The Power of our Kings is no more than the Power the Laws; a Power folely of doing Right, not of Injustice; are made by and for them, and not by and for themselves; and the who add more of it to them than the Laws allow, or oblige the le ple to other Obedience than the same Laws command and auth rize, make them Tyrants, and the People Slaves. When we la King of England can do no Wrong, it is eternally understood wh he rules only according to the Prescript of the Laws, which whi he does, it is impossible he should ever err; for otherwise, tis establish the Power of doing the highest Injustice and Iniquity, by t of publick Approbation; which as it had its rife from Flatte. can never be maintain'd but by Vio'ence and an irregular Amion; and thus whilst private Persons for Acts of Fraud, Rae and Violence, or any other Violation of the publick Peace. Il be subject to the utmost severity and punishments of the Laws, Prince shall not only be permitted but incouraged, by vertue we know not what chimerical and imaginary Authority, to run o all the Excesses of them, and that too with impunity; for re is nothing left to cover a poor oppress'd Feople from the Inis of a wicked Prince, when they are made to believe his Powis uncontrolable, and themselves oblig'd blindly to obey and mit to it under pain of Damnation. But we neither teach or acbwledge any fach Power in the Supream Magistrate, or any h flavish Obedience in the Subject. The blested Condition of r Constitution consists in this, that we have exchang'd a wild unfociable Liberty, which was every Man's Partage in the state Nature, for an easy and rational Freedom, in a legal Subjectito Kings and Laws of our own Model and framing, always be. supposed to reserve to our selves the Power and Means of oping and punishing the Excesses of the Tyrant, or the Treacheand Perfidiousness of the Magistrate legally chosen, who abuses d perverts the End of their Institution; for, as has been said, the e Ends of all Governments and of that Obedience exacted to em, is the publick Good, the obtaining of Justice, Security and otection; such as thro' Inability cannot provide for them all, or o' Malice and Wickedness retule to do it, or manifesty do the array, forfeit their Character, and leave the People to their lity of exerting their natural Right, of taking such Measures as Il feem best to themselves, of which they are the best and only ges for their common Safety and Welfare.

This then is the effential Difference between both the Principles Practice of those who are at this day distinguish'd by the Chater of Low and High-Churchmen; the latter have forg'd out their heated Brains, first, an absolute, arbitrary and despotical wer in their Princes over the Lives, Fortunes and Liberties of Subjects, by a certain divine Right and Commission, to which y have more lately tack'd the hereditary, unalienable and inde-lible Right of Kings under the fanctity'd Character of the Lord's pinted; Secondly, this absolute, unlimited Power and Right in eably inherent to Kingship or the regal Character; and lastly, as recessary Consequence of the former, an unconditional Passive elience in the Subject to all the Commands of fuch Princes, how resionable or wicked soever they may be, under pain of Damion. On the other Hand, the former neither allow more Powto the one, or injoyn more Obedience to the other, than what fundamental Laws, which are the infallible and perpetual Rule both, prescribe and command, nor acknowledge any Authority Foundation of their Dream of hereditary, unaffenable Right of ir Kings other than in a legal Sense, according to the original der of their Institution, and leave them in Cases of Maladmini-

firation accountable to those Laws by which they were first confi tuted. We leave it to the good Sense of all impartial and unon judiced Englishmen to determine, which of the two Opinions most likely to promote and preserve the publick Peace, Tranqui lity and general Prosperity of the Common-wealth where it m vails; and shall only continue to maintain, that the Opinion and Principles of those we call Whigs or Low-Churchmen are found ed upon the Authority of the Holy Scriptures, the Dictates of relationships Reason and Nature, the common Consent and Voice of Manking and the more particular Practice of our own Nation; every one which I think has been prov'd the other want: And further, the Opinion and Principles of the Whigs are directly calculated in the Preservation of the Lives, Liberties and Properties of the Sal ject, so are they infinitely more beneficial, honourable and advan tageous with respect to the Prince; inasmuch as by laying the legal, just and necessary Restraints upon the unruly Passions of the Will and Ambition, they curb the Violence of them, which left themselves are too apt to precipitate them into violent County to the Ruin often of themselves and Families; for it has alway been found by fatal Experience, that the Royal Power and A thority, however supported by flattering Sycopants and pernicion Counsellors, have never been of sufficient Force to preserve them selves from the Superior Power and Impetuosity of a free People provok'd and exasperated into Fury by a violent and delpoid Treatment, incompatible with the Tenor of their Laws, and the Genius of a mix'd and limited Monarchy; and therefore I think shall do him no manner of Injustice from what has been made a pear, if I shall define a High-Church Priest who owns these De etrines, (and if there be any amongst the Tories who profess and pro etise the same Principles, he may freely take his share of the Character) to be a publick Incendiary, a Property and Tool, either thro' Ignorance which is scandalous, or Malice which is intamou of a Faction; a Fool in the Hands of cunning and designing Knard to carry on private Defigns inconfishent with the true Interest a Honour of his Country; a Pretender to Religion but a Prophan of it; an Affecter of the Character of an honest Man, without M rals; and as the most dangerous Enemy, so the most infamous trayer both of the establish'd Religion, and the immemorial Right and Liberties of the former, in favour folely of his indefeafible, a our abjur'd Pretender.

I shall conclude this Point of absolute and unlimited Passive bedience preach'd up by the one, and detested by the other, withthe one Remark, which I know will set my dear High-Church Frien a gaping; that the the unhappy Distinction of Whig and Tory, of Low and High-Churchmen, which is purely the Work of the will and French Jesuits to divide and weaken us, be but moder and born within our Memory and that of our Fathers, yet things meant by them, are as antient as Time and the Origin Civil Power and Government: And I hardily maintain, that the first Gallant who struck his Ponyard into the Heart of the first was a strict of the first wa

er of the Establish'd Laws, or by any other way destroying the rant, either prevented the Slavery, or restor'd the Liberty of his untry from the Oppression of an unjust and violent Usurpation. s the first noble Whig; by which I am always understood to mean other than a constant Afferter and Defender of the natural Rights Mankind, and the particular Liberties of his native Country and low-Subjects; for he who had Vertue and Magnanimity enough conceive so great and generous a Design, cou'd never want a the to attempt and execute it: The Bleffings of a rational and Freedom are so invaluable, and the Miseries inseparable from very to odious and insupportable, that the very inward Rightenels of the Act is more than sufficient to authorize and justifie Performance; for by the greatest Authority that can bind and age Men, I mean that even of the Holy Scriptures, as is demonble from the Example and Practice of the Heroes of the Old Tement, when a Prince oppressing his People cannot by reason of Power be call'd to an account by the ordinary means of Justice Remonstrance, it is then lawful for the Defence of the Publick have recourse to the extraordinary and extrajudicial ones. On other Hand, the fulfom Sycophant Slave that flatter'd his Prince th the Vitions of a Divine Authority to do mischief, with an abute and arbitrary Power over the Lives, Fortunes and Liberties his Subjects, and made the latter drunk with the Fumes of an limited Passive Obedience, the first infallible Step to Slavery, was e first Tory or High-Churchman, if he is pleas'd with the Princies and Honour of the Character. 'Tis pity the Name of the former as not preserv'd from the Injury of Time, both for his own eternal brour, and for the noble Example and Imitation of all succeedg Generations; and of the latter, to be had in execuation with all od, brave and vertuous Lovers of their Country's Honour and iberties till there shall be an end of Time. I have now done ith the Nature of these pernicious Doctrines, and proceed in the extplace to confider the Tendency, End, and Defign for which at is time of Day they have been so industriously propagated amongst which I hope evidently to prove, can be in no other view than lubvert the antient Establishment of our Constitution, in order erect a new one upon its Ruins; for the Prospect of the Highhurch faction at present can terminate but in one Point, that of troducing and establishing the Pretender on the Throne, which vill visibly appear to all disinterested and impartial Persons, who all seriously restest upon the nature of their Principles and Dotines, and the Steps they have made in pursuance of them for these our Years past; and as they have all along made it appear, how buch they reget and abhor a glorious Revolution, that establish'd tele Nations in the Injoyment of their Religion and Liberties, to are they taken as much pains to convince the World, that they vill boggle at no means to reverse and deprive us of the Bleffings. ve are in possession of from it. I shall therefore indeavour, step y step, tho' briefly as possible, to discover to my honest Countrymen, rather remind them thro' all the dark and intricate Mazes of their Mystery of Iniquity, of the base and ungenerous means they have made use of from time to time to accomplish a Design, which is God for the punishment of our Sins permits to succeed, will intallibly end in the Slavery of a great, free and noble People; and he does not, in their own inevitable and deserv'd Container: If we had to deal with a fair and generous Enemy, we shou'd have like to fear or apprehend from the Power either of their Reasoning or their Arms; but as we have not, we have nothing more to do that to be upon our guard, and take all those proper Precautions in our selves and Security, that are necessary against the Designs of Men, who make use only of Artifices, which as they are founded upon Error, Malice or Falsehood, can only be carry'd on and make tain'd by their usual Artillery of Invectives, Reproaches, and by the most infamous of Lyes and Calumnies.

When Faction, which is the Spirit of Discord, animating Me to act for private Interest against the Tenor of the Laws, tile Birth in a Nation, the Consequences of it are always Dilgola Animolities, Hatred, Jealousies and Revenge, with all the mean choly Train of Mischiefs that are inseparable from Divisions and a Contrariety of Opinions and Interests in a State: The general and for the most part only Source of this is the Ambition of par ticular Men, who as they are apt to entertain an advantageous 0. pinion of their own Merit and Capacity, think an Injury done to their Birth and Quality, if they are excluded from a participation of the first Places of Honour and Emoluments of the Common wealth. There seems indeed to be no reason why Men of Pan and Abilities and approv'd Integrity, should be wholly exclude from the exercise of the important Posts and Stations of their Country; and a wife Prince will certainly have a due regard to suchin an equal and impartial Distribution of his Favour, to content and a tisfy them according to the extent of his Power and Opportunity as the furest means to ingage their Affections to his own Service and Interests and that of their common Country: This is print pally to be understood of such as pretend to the possession of such Places, as immediately are concern'd in the management of the mot important Interests of the State; for a King of England has the distribution of many Stations both of Honour and Profit, the less consequence, as may content the Dehres of most Men, especial ly of the Nobility who are willing to embarass themselves will the Perplexities inseparable from Business and Attendance; and therefore in relation to the first fort, as the Principles which Ma profess are that from whence arises the distinction, the Prince who knows how to fill and mantain the Dignity of his Character not only will, but is oblig'd for his own and the Kingdom's Ho nour and Safety to imploy those whose Principles are known to be conformable to the original Constitution of the Government, exclusion of such as are doubtful, suspected, or known to be contra ry to it. The Persons thus excluded may think themselves injure oully dealt with and complain, but they complain without a jul reason; for they can with Justice only blame themselves, the Ho

r and Interest of a whole Nation being infinitely preserable to Contentment of the Ambition of any private Persons of what nk or Degree soever: Let them therefore approve their Princis to be found, and tending directly to the general Good, Honour true Interest of their Country, and there will be no longer any son, ceteris paribus, to decline or refuse their Service; but if on contrary Men of avow'd Principles, not only opposite, but deetive of the fundamental Institution of the Government, pred to the Administration of the eminent Trusts and Digauties of State, it will always be suppos'd they do it in view only of adcing their own private Fortunes and Interests, if not something rse, and the Prince in the end shall never fail of finding himself os'd and betray'd; and therefore in such cases there is much re Injustice in their Pretensions, than there can be in the Prinrejecting them; but if besides it shall appear that such Men are able of actually forming Defigns to inflave and betray their nae Country to the Tyranny of a foreign Power, it will not only thought reasonable to prevent the Execution of such execrable figns, by excluding them from such Offices as may furnish them th the means to accomplish them, but that they justly deserve utmost rigour and severity of the Laws in their Punishment for empting it: For Barclay himself, one of the most strenuous Asters of the absolute and despotical Power of Kings, in these two es, either of subverting the fundamental Laws and Religion of Kingdom, or of betraying it into the Subjection of a foreign wer, allows it lawful in the People to take up Arms against such attempt either, for their Defence and Preservation; and it it be allow'd against our Kings themselves, whom we acknowledge Supream executive Power of the Nation, it will appear someing more reasonable to make use of the same or any other means ainst any subordinate Officers or Ministers, who act only by an thority deriv'd from them, when they are wicked enough to in the same traiterous Designs. Whether this be not the very he and Scituation of a certain fee and noble People at present, I all leave to the sequel of this Discourse to make appear, and to ery honest difinterested Englishman, who shall give himself the buble of reading it, to make what Judgment he pleases. But be that as it will, when a Set of Men, whether rightly quali-

dor not, have form'd the Detign to make a Change in any estash'd Government, it is absolutely necessary for 'em sirst to secure Favour and Approbation of the Prince, under the colour of dogall things for his Honour, and the Good of the Nation; and next cajole and predispose the People into an Opinion of the Sincerity their Intentions for the publick Good; and as there are great issculties to be strugged with to obtain these two Ends, the sirst ep is to impose upon such as they cannot convince, or to corrupt that have not Vertue enough to resist the Temptation; and as it impossible to establish Error and Falshood by any other means, than

dently rational) they never fail to imploy fuch as are sufficients their purpose of ingaging Mens Wills to their Interests, withou being capable of convincing their Understandings; for in such Cal they oftner stand in need of Hands than Hearts; and when ingg in such Designs, and animated by the Spirit of Faction, they have made these first Advances; we have had but a too melancholy Exe rience, that they will boggle at no Means, how scandalous and honourable foever, to convince and support their Delusions. Thener Point to be gain'd is, by all the fame laudable Means to difgrace the great Men and Ministers in Possession, by rendring them suspend to the Prince, and odious and contemptible to the People; which always best effected by the infamous Arts of Lying and Calumn the never failing Instruments of High-Church Politicks and Divinit The common Topicks in such Cases made use of, is to indeayou to expose 'em to the Publick, under the odious Characters of Di respect to the Prince who henour'd them; of their Ingratituden fo gracious a Benefactor; of being Enemies to the Government; Friends to the establish'd Religion; the Danger to their dear Church and State from their Administration, republican and antimonarchi Principles, and the like; some of which I have already exposidant refuted, as I hope to do the rest under the particular Heads I sal range them, as the Reason and Train of Things shall occasionally fer them. The Offices of Profit, Trust and Dignity in the State, at either Civil or Military; I have indeavour'd, in the former pane this Discourse, to defend the former from the injust and infamou Reproaches and Calumnies of the most dangerous Faction that en disturb'd the Quiet of these Nations; and as I have discharg'd mysel without Fear of the one, or Flattery of the other, I hope it will, leaft, give a Handle to some abler Pen to perform it better; and had I am not conscious to myself of having advanc'd any thing but what is firially agreeable to Truth and Justice, my honest Countryma will have the goodness to accept the Probity of Intentions, in in of the Weakness of the Performance; I shall therefore, with the same Courage and difinterested Integrity, undertake to defend and in flify our noble and generous Warriors, the Glory of the British Valor and Nation, from the shameless Invectives and Calumnies of the malicious Enemies; who as they can never tarnish the real Lula of their Honour, in the Opinion of any wife or honest Englishma fo will in the end not fail to reflect an Infamy upon the ingrated Authors of 'em, which shall not terminate even in the Grave; but to main as an eternal Monument of their Treachery and Ingratitudes the end of the World. I constantly maintain that it is next to in possible for a particular Person, upon the Strength and Sufficiency his own fingle Genius, however elevated and diffinguished it mi be, or even with the help and affistance of a few others, to under take, much less accomplish the Renversement of an ancient Govern ment, established upon the folid Foundation of the universal Con fent of a free and powerful People, without the Concurrence and Help of some very considerable Power from abroad; and therefor it is as much their Interest to prevent the Ruin or Diminution

t favourable foreign Power, as by all Means to destroy the Credit Reputation of the suppos'd Enemies of their Exaltation, or gain Opinion of the People, so absolutely necessary for the accomplishnt of their Deligns at home. 'Tis in this View that the prefent niffry, who by their Address and Artifice had the Power to imeupon the Goodness and Credulity of their Queen, and by their reenary Tools of the High-Church Priesthood, debauch'd great mbers of the deluded People into their Interests, and thereby planted and undermin'd the noblest Set of Statesmen and Paots that ever had the Administration of the Affairs of these Natis, found they had done but half their Work, unless with the ne Facility and Success they cou'd deprive their Country, and the of powerful Confederacy that ever was in Europe, of the Courage Conduct of a General and other gallant Commanders, who had ry'd the Reputation of the British Arms to a more elevated pitch Glory than was ever known to former Ages, and who by an exampl'd Rapidity of Conquests and Successes had reduc'd the brbitant Power of their fingular good Friend and Ally, on whom y folely depended, to the poor Necessity of humbly begging a ace, upon terms very unfuitable to the Pride and Infolence of a ighty Monarch, who had so long before been accustom'd to bully

the Powers in Europe.

In this, as in the rest, they but too happily succeeded; yet the nown of his Exploits, the Reputation, the Courage, the Conduct, d the good Fortune of the Man, shall ever be held in Veneration all honest, vertuous Englishmen, who heartily love theirs Country, d know how to make a right Estimate of so rare and elevated a rtue. I have not undertaken the Panegyrick of this great and exllent Person, illustrious in his Disgrace; I acknowledge it a Task Subject infinitely above my feeble Capacity; and but to attempt without a force of Genius equal to the Dignity, is in some Deee to lessen it; yet as I love the Honour and Liberty of my Country, hich I will die maintaining, and adore a sublime and distinguish-Vertue, that feem'd by Providence destin'd to the increase and elervation of them, and is still referv'd to finish the glorious Work, hall without Fear, and in Contempt of all his Enemies, indeavour defend and justify the Merit and Conduct of a Person, who long s been, and will ever continue the Admiration of all the World, ofe only excepted whose Interest it is to disgrace him. The noble eltimony that the wifest, bravest, and the best of Men as well as finces, I mean our immortal Deliverer King William gave him, is flead of all Panegyrick. This incomparable Prince in the last Moents of his Life recommended him to his Successor, our gracious ueen, as the fittest for his rare Genius and Capacity to succeed him the head of Armies, and the Confederacy he had form'd, against exorbitant Power which was preparing Chains and Slavery for all prope; though at a time when there were unhappily, by the Arnces of secret Enemies, some occasions of Disgusts against him. A estimony so advantageous, attended with such Circumstances, was wally glorious to the Prince and Subject; to the Prince, who as gave the World the most convincing Proofs of his Sagacity and

Penetration into the Merits and Qualifications of Men, so he did ticularly to his High-Church Enemies of the Pority and Perfection the Christian they are forc'd in Secret to admire; he show'd 'em noble Example of a forgiving Spirit, one of the most shining Example lencies of the Christian Religion, to which they have ever been Stra gers; he taught them how to tacrifice their private Injuries and Re tentments to the publick Good; he taught them how to cong their unruly Passions, of all Conquests the most difficult and mo torious; but oh! fo far from copying after fo perfect an Original that as they hated and revil'd him living, reproach the facred Men ry of him dead. And to the noble Subject, who has with form Glory fill'd and justify'd the Royal Character, and so well maintain the great Idea of his Master, that as in the glorious Toils and H zards of the War he equall'd, he may without Offence to Truthe Violence to the lov'd Memory of that immortal Hero, be faid by Train of wonderful and stupendious Successes which Heaven blest him with, to have surpass'd him. So much has been alread offer'd in the Defence and Justification of the Probity of his Inter tions and Defigns, and the Glory of his Performances, that there but little left to any that comes after to add but bare Repetition. leave to others of a Genius more fertile and suitable, to expatiate Praises, which ought always rather to take their Measure from the Merit of the Subject, than from the heated Imagination of the Or tor; which when they are just are never reproachable, thoughth may feem excessive. Flattery, as it is the Estect, so is it the Tribu of a poor and mercenary Spirit for private Advantage, and is alway a Vice; and as none but servile sycophant Slaves will pay it, there none but empty Fools, or crafty and deligning Knaves are fond of it gives a certain foreign borrow'd Lustre to false Merit; or Qui ties that in Appearance are amiable, and in reality nothing less they who covet it ever want Matter of just Applaule; 'tis the fi plying the defect of a Merit they want, with the Affectation of Vain-glory they ought to be asham'd of; 'tis ever founded upon t narrow Principles of Interest in the Giver, and of Vanity in the Receiver, who is fond of the feeble Incense of popular Applause, cause he know he has not Worth enough to merit more substanti it has, for the most part, the same Reception and Reward as To son; every vain empty Fool is pleas'd with the Flattery, that agre ably tickles his Imagination, but despites the Flatterer; as commo ly Princes make Advantage of the Treason, but detest the Trayton But there are some Vertues so eminently perfect as connot be flatter they are as much above Expression as Imitation; all just Praises their due, but never exacted; they support themselves by their on native and intrinsick Excellence, they dazzle by their own excess Light, without the extrinsick important Help of Artifice or Emb lishment; and Men cannot refuse the Tribute due to 'em, without being or stupid or ingrateful; they may be, and at most ever are Objects of Envy and Distraction, but they carry with them a led fort of Magick that inchants and compels even the Envious, and Detracter to venerate an excellence they feem to hate, but cannot id p est it may be publickly to revile and discredit it. This I neither fear, or am asham'd to affirm to be the Case of the at and noble Englishman before us; a Merit founded upon an uninrupted Series of the most glorious Atchievements abroad, which extended and admir'd through the Universe, where there are any niments of Vertue and true Honour, has had the Fate to meet the infectious Poison of Malice and Detraction from his inreful Countrymen at home; it is in the last Degree surprizing to eign Nations, who think and speak of him with the highest Reds of fomething above Respect and Esteem, Admiration, to see Man who has carry'd the Reputation of the English Arms and Nan to such a degree of Glory, as will hardly find Belief with future es, treated at home like an Enemy and Betrayer of his Country. en the French, the most mortal Enemies of both, out of a Sentiat of Honour and Generofity so natural to that noble Nation, are respect to him a fair One, and never mention him but with the not Marks of the highest Honour and Esteem; whilst they debre the Difgraces brought by the General upon their Nation, that ta few Years ago made all Europe tremble by the Terror of their ms, speak with Veneration of the Vertue, the Conduct and good rtune of the Man; and in the Conqueror, cannot but sever the ourge and Humbler of the exorbitant Power of a Monarch, which bugh it has been sometimes chequ'd, was never overcome but by superior Genius. Only in his own Country has he met with an gratitude, capable of attempting to tarnish a Glory, which is not ly the principal Ornament, but has been the Support and Defence it from Popery and French Slavery. The Malice of an infernal ction sprung up for the Ruin of the Nation, has laboured hard to plane a Vertue, the principal Obstacle to all their wicked Designs; d has to their eternal Infamy but too unhappily succeeded with eat Numbers of such, at least, who are in their Interests, and Acimplices of their Iniquity; yet he has this Consolation in his Difare, that whatever there is remaining of Wife, or Brave, or Ho-It in a corrupted Nation, which we are fure are yet the greatest and moblest Part, will never cease to pay him that Respect and Honour at is justly due to his glorious Character, and the Importance of s Service; nor shall we in the least fear the despicable Impotence the Faction at home, or Infalts of their dear French Friends and loved Pretender abroad, fince God has been pleas'd to preferve at noble Englishman from their Malice, to put himself at the Head those many hundred Thousands of his honest and gallant Countryon, who will cheerfully put themselves under his Command, and tifice their Lives, or triumph with him in the glorious Caule of eir Country's Liberties, and the established Religion.

Tis apparent as the Sun at Noon to every Man in the Nation, ho is not wilfully and perversely blind, that all the poisonous lalice of the High-Church Faction that is pointed at the diminum of his Reputation, takes its Origin from that Valour and

Conduct, which had not only weaken'd but ruin'd and overthron a formidable Power which they look'd upon not only as invince ble, but as their furest Hope and Support of their own grandle figns of introducing their Pretender. They well enough foreign that all their impotent Projects and Machinations must fall to the Ground and prove abortive, unless they had the Succour and h couragement of a Neighbouring Prince, who had long form the Delign of inflaving us with the rest of Christendom, and order to it to deprive us of the Wisdom and Bravery-of a Gran ral who had so often made him tremble. Both he and his de good High-Church Friends at home were too fensible of wh Importance it was to conserve their poor Remains of Strengt intire, that was so absolutely necessary to carry on and accompile the commendable Work of Slavery; tho' they knew that the Strengt of their Faction was considerable at home, yet they were as fa fible that there was, and we hope ever shall be a more formidal Party of the true Lovers of their Country and their antient Com stitution, who were more than an over-ballance to them, and who wou'd oppose them to the last drop of their Blood and Fortuna in the Preservation of things so dear and precious to them as the Religion and original Liberties. This made it therefore absolute ly necessary for them to seek for assistance from abroad, and to pro vent by any means the Destruction of that Power by which alon they cou'd reasonably expect to accomplish their Designs, as it sit gave Birth and a Rise to the Projection of them. This is not a Conspiracy of yesterday or of three or four years ago; 'tis a old as the late happy and glorious Revolution, in which as the ha nest part of the Nation expell'd the Father for his illegal and to rannical Administration, ever since the corrupt and mercenary High Church part of it have been labouring to establish the same dete stable Government and Principles in the Person of his pretended Son. The Nation is very sensible what Measures have been all long taken by them, during the course of the short, but ever me morable Reign of our glorious Deliverer, to embarass and perple him from fetting the Liberties of his People upon the first followed Principles of their Constitution; and in which, by the Bleffing of God upon the Vertue and Industry of that incomparable Prince and his Faithful and Loyal Subjects of the Low, evidently defeat ed and confounded the Malice and Wickedness of their Intentions we know very well that the same restless and implacable Spirit ha ever fince been industriously imploy'd to carry on their Designs by the same means, with an additional Strength of new Inventions

This then is the mortal and unpardonable Sin of our Renown'd General, and if they condemn'd him for the seeming Temerity of the Attempt, they will be sure never to forgive him for the Glotious Success of it; from that ever Memorable Day of Blenheim, which in the Opinion of all wise, henest and gallant Men will crown him with the Character of the consummate, and fortunal General, he may date the Epoch of the Envy of the Faction, and the Difgrace he is at present under from it: There is with em no Remission for the fault of a Man who had the audacius hardiness to beat, to take Prisoners, or to destroy the Flowof the French Soldiery, their boafted Gendarmery, and the Troops the Houshold esteemed invincible; tho' an Action so great and prious in it felf, and of that extensive Merit to all Christendom, ere sufficient to atome for all the Sins of another Man's Life. but was a mortal Blow that equally affected the Vitals of French wer, and the English Faction; for if in that famous Day he deoy'd as it were the Body of that brave People, in the fucceeding es, he seems to have had to combat only with their Fantoms. hatever may be the Sentiments of these ingrateful it imports not ich; but it is evident that God crown'd him with a Success. nal to the Greatness and the Generosity of the Enterprize. Bed the wonderful Effects, as the vilible Bleffings of Heaven uphis Courage and Conduct, for Heaven is ever favourable and paitious to Valour in a just War, carry'd on in the noble Cause the Liberties of Mankind; an Empire say'd from imminent Deuction, all Germany deliver'd from the cruel Ravages of an un-I Invation, which caus'd fuch terrible Convultions in the Head d Bowels of it, as threaten'd the whole Body with approaching solution; a Traytor justly expell'd his Country, the most noble I ferile flourishing Sovereignty in it, the rightcous Recomace of his Perfidiousness and Treachery; and may that be ever face of all fuch faithless Traytors to their Prince and Country. e grateful Emperor was too sensible of the Blessing of so comat and advantageous a Victory, not to give the Conqueror an uffrious Testimony of his Royal Acknowledgement, in confering him a Principality of that Empire he had by his Valour so hapy preserv'd; which as it was the only one and greatest he was e in the present lowness of his Fortune to offer, and inferior the Merit of the Service, yet will for ever remain as a gloris Monument of his Gratitude; for the true estimate of a Benefit es not so much arise from the value and greatness of the Gift, from the intention and generofity of the Doner. If we confir in cool Blood, if it be possible to consider them without eption, the wonderful Successes that attend the noble Toils and tigues of our General in the succeeding Campaigns, we shall eay be convine'd that each Enterpize added a fresh Laurel to the ory of his Triumphs; and as every succeeding Battle, every Siege as a disgrace and diminution of the Power of the common Eney, so was it a mortal Stab to the designs of a Faction, to which he first gave Birth, he has ever fince incouraged and supported; d we are but too well convinc'd fince that, that the Envy and alice of both equally increased in proportion to the Triumphs and erits of the Conqueror. I shall not infift here on the detail of e great and furprizing Actio s he every day perform'd in the no-Cause of the common Liberties of Europe, and his own Counbecause 'tis more properly the Business of the Historian: My incipal Defign in this being to show, that the base and malicious Ingratitude of a Domestick Faction, took its Rise from the vincible opposition his continual Conquests brought to their Into tions, of inflaving their Country by introducing their belov'd? tender; I need only name after the memorable Battle of Blenkin Liege, Ramelies, Audenard, Tournay, Doway, Lifle, Mons, Blan nies, Aire, St. Venant, Bouchain, as of io many tresh and extraor nary, Additions to his Glory, so of the abatement of the Power of Enemy, and the ruin of the Hopes of the Faction; and shall on make this Remark, that a continu'd and uninterrupted Series of most unexpected, and indeed unaccountable Successes that werem fibly ever known in the World, is an uncontestable Evidence of Favour of God in the choice of this great Man, to carry on the figns of a mysterious Providence. 'Tis true indeed, that God in often, and for a long time, given Successes to Tyrannical and A bitious Princes, but he has always permitted them only as Scoun to execute Vengeance on Nations for a Pun shment of their Sins has never fail'd when he has done with them, as his Instrument, execute terrib'e Judgments on them for their own: But herein Instance of a Great and Vertuous Man, the chosen Minister of H ven, rais'd up for the Good and common Liberties of Europe; there cannot be a more convincing Evidence of this Truth the the continued Bleffings that have without Interruption attended in the Pursuit of so glorious a Cause, and the vitible Care and vour of Providence in his Protection from all the imminent Haza and Dangers of the War; ever Valiant, ever Conquering; helen not so much to court Victory, as to command her; and his alw been as it were, in the happy Possession of every where beating the Enemies, who always boafted and thought themselves Invind This alone were sufficient to open the Eyes, and put a stop to Malice of his engrateful Countrymen, to fee the work of Gods Liberty fo prosper in his Hands, if he had not had to do withat of Men aband n'd to the hardness of their Hearts, in the Profe tion of their work of Iniquity, and lost to all sense of Vertues Honour. When Posterity shall read with equal Pleasure and A nishment, the Wonders of a General, which for their surpul Greatness shall difficultly find Belief, yet for their unquestion Evidence cannot but be believ'd; shall they not read with the most Contempt and Execuation, the Wickedness of an ungrateful Ction which has so hardly labour'd to disgrace and oppreis the and elevated Vertue that atchiev'd them?

But there was too much of Conquest, too much of the Blood their beloved Consederate spilt; to loose more, was to destroy the Hopes of what was yet to do; it was high time for the alarum'd clion to express their Fears by their Resentments: The last glorid Work of taking Bouchain, and making a numerous Garrison of the Price of a Royal Army perior in Numbers, made them sensible they had no more time loose; all the Artillery of their wicked Artisices, was pointed batter down a too Fortunate and Victorious General, who was of the principal Obstacles to their Designs: Another Campai

pend upon, and tremble.

Were it not for the fatal Consequences that have attended the M tion and the whole Confederacy from the Point the profess'd En mics of both have gain'd, a Man would be apt to laugh at the palm Means, the poor and pitiful Infinuations, the falle, the grounds and malicious Infinuations they have been forc'd to make use of effect it. When Men in their Senses undertake so great and difficult a Defign, as to introduce a new fort of Government upon the de throw of the ancient, it has always been their Manner to offer the Publick such Reasons of Interest and Advantage, as by apla fible resemblance of truth, may be sufficient to amuze and puzz the more Judicious and Discerning, and to delude and impose out more Weak and Credulous; but the trifling and frivolous Infinus ons of these wretched Politicians, though they have in too great Measure had their Effect upon the latter, are too feeble to hind those of more Sagacity and Penetration, from discerning that the draw their Origin folely from an infernal Malice, and the m frontless and intamous of Calumnies. The whole of their less Pretences have so amply and irrefragably been detected and con ted by so many learned and ingenious Lovers of their General'sa their Country's Honour and Interest, as leaves but little Room, or deed Necessity to subjoin any thing to their abler Labours; yet to be wanting either in Duty or Affection to my Country, at great Man, who by his Valour was establishing it in a Condition be less apprehensive of the Power of her foreign Enemies, than I Attempts of her domestick ones, I shall briefly touch at some them, which how fenfeless and ridiculous soever, have made a No in the World, and been able to make Impressions to his Dilada tage in the Minds of Fools, which are of the Growth of every Co try who want Sense to discover the Imposture, and of Knan which of late have appeared the more particular Growth of own, who may think it their Interest to encourage and supp them. The Cant of a General for Life; of a War of the Good not of the Prince and Nation; and of a War continu'd and prolon only for the enriching and aggrandifing a certain particular fam is such a wretched Jargon of Falsehood, Nonsense and Absurdity is only worthy the Refinement of High-Church Policy: The Auth of it, as they feem to have abandon'd all Sentiments of common nesty, are not asham'd too to discard all Notions of common of If ever there was a Design to establish his Grace General for " as Things have been manag'd fince, and in the Scituation they a present, I am very sure it would have been happy for all En and particularly for the Honour of our own Country that he been io; and only incommodious to a handful of Men, and common Enemy, whose Interest and private Ambition made absolutely necessary for them he should not. could have enter'd into the Head and Heart of the General, whose isdom and Prudence have contributed as much to establish the erit of his Character, as his Bravery and Valour, as much as he belov'd and even ador'd by his honest Countrymen for his great deminent Vertues, he would have found such Pretentions, and the ecution of them utterly impracticable; if indeed it had been the od pleasure of Heaven to have left him the Consolation of his only ale Hope, there might have been at least some fort of Colour and etence for an Ambition, which in most Men knows no Rule and casure: Do not these Men know, that in case of failure of Issue the Royal Line in Possession, that the Crown is entail'd and setby the Legislature upon the Illustrious House of Hanover? Cou'd Wife and Prudent Man in an advanc'd Age, Heaven long continue to triumph over the Malice of his ungrateful Countrymen, who s spent the most glorious part of it in giving daily the most conicing Proofs, a good and loyal Subject can be capable, of his Fideyand Loyalty to the best of Mistresses, her present Majesty, as of inviolable and constant Affection to the true Interest, the Relion, the Honour and Liberties of his Country; who has been fight-Battles, principally to support the Succession of that Illustrious pule, against the most formidable Power in Europe, whose eternal terest and Endeavour it is to prevent or exclude it; cou'd, I say, th a Man, in such a Scituation, be capable of forming so wild and practicable a Design upon the precipitate Death of his Royal Miels, as the Renvertement of the legal establish'd Succession, as must t only have inevitably have miscarry'd in the main; as must not ly have destroy'd the beautiful Structure of a Reputation, establish'd on the solid Basis of a thousand great Qualities and glorious Actis; but loose him in the Opinion of all the Brave, the Wise, the nest and Vertuous in the Universe, and render him the Scorn and patempt as the most Wicked and Ungrateful of Mankind? Yet all s, notwithstanding, I will be bold to add, that there's ne'er a Man England, High Church always excepted, who would not be conat to see a mobile Gentleman upon the Throne, who we know is able of preserving and maintaining the Religion, the Honour, I Interest of his Country, than their despicable abjur'd French etender, who we are as sure can never be establish'd on it, but on utter Ruin and Subversion of them all. It were time thrown ay to discourse long upon an idle Subject of this Nature, were it to convince the World, that there is nothing so shamefully false abominable, so absurd, so wicked and unaccountable, that our dern High Church Fanaticism will boggle to employ to gain their ds, at the Expence of all that there is of Modesty, of moral Holy, of vertuous, commendable or facred in this World. The rest is all of a Piece; do not these ingrateful know that the War was began under the Auspices of our great and glorious liverer King William, to reduce the exorbitant Power of France, which he was forc'd, by the Clamours and Perplexities of their tion, to terminate in the Peace of Ry/wick, against his Inclinational Judgment, as what he well understood was against the Interest of Europe, as well as that of his own Dominions? Dom thefe same Men know that the second War was begun for the same End, and upon the same Motives, to procure and maintain a B lance of Power, and that with the Addition of the most facred a folema Ingagements on our Part, never to conclude a Peace but on the Restitution of the whole Spanish Monarchy to the House Austria, which had been with the utmost Injustice torn from then by the detestable Forgery of a fraudulent and suppositious Will? An further, never to enter into any fecret Negotiations with France, a to conclude a separate Peace, without the Consent and Knowledge and the full Satisfaction and Security of all Allies? Did not whole Voice of the Nation, by their loyal and repeated Address animate our late glorious King to revenge the Infolence of an A front to the Majesty of Great-Britain, by the French King's acknown ledging and declaring the Pretender to be still King of it, in Contem and Breach of his most folemn Oaths to the contrary? Whit old Usage are our wondrous wife Heads to expect from the same Prince from their Conclusion of their separate Peace? Do we not ath Day see their Pretender still incourag'd and abetted by him, and he vering in the Neighbourhood of his Coasts? Do we not see Herli jesty, notwithstanding all the Obligations she has been impos'd up by them to lay on him, insulted and affronted in the same mann that we have feen her glorious Predecessor? Or do we wait till w feel him with a French Army in our Bowels, before we shall be con vinc'd that the Nations are infamously betray'd? Was it not up this Foot and Motive that we were compell'd to recommence a Windows against a faithless and perfidious Tyrant, who never held himself blig'd, by the Conscience of an Oath, further than was just confilm with his Interest to do so? And when Heaven, for our Sins of la gratitude, depriv'd us of our belov'd Monarch we no longer deferr Mation so much more noble Blood and Treasure, to his illustrate Successor her Majesty, under the Direction and Conduct of his who of all her Subjects for his Prudence, Valour and confummi Capacities, he thought most equal to the importance of the Esta prize, and most worthy to succeed him? With what Front, what Impudence therefore could they call this a War of the General and not of the Prince and Kingdom; which was begun by the Prince and fince carry'd on with the unanimous Confent of the Nation, conjunction with the rest of her Allies and Confederates? In the pursuit of which he has had, by the bleffing of Heaven, the god Fortune to carry on this War with that Vigour and Conduct, wi fuch a torrent of fo unexampl'd Successes, with to much Glory! himself, so much Reputation to the Brit sh Arms, so much to the Interest and Advantage of the Nation, and the Security of all ! zope, as if there had not been a stop put to him by the Malice a Ambition of the Faction at home, he had long before this time! relves, as the War had been glorious and honourable to the Conerois: We needed not have been babbling and chicaning with deluy and prevaricating Ministers of France, or the treacherous Ones our own, about this Town or that Barrier; nor been trifling aut the Terms of a Peace, which we should have been in a condin to have forc'd upon him, after what Manner and upon what nditions we had pleas'd; we need not fo long have been fooling out the demolition of Dunkirk, as a cautionary Recompence of an lorious and treacherous Cessation of Arms as we have been, when were upon the point of giving Laws to an Infolence, that had g been accustomed to hector and gasconade all the World. owned General, in concert with those gallant and generous Comnders of the Confederates, at the Head of the best appointed and of redoubtable Troops in the Universe, might even, in one Camon more, have conducted them into the Heart of France; they ght have occasioned a general Insurrection of a People, who, wever they venerate their Kings, are weary of the Oppression, donly wait for the happy Opportunity to shake off a Yoak of Slary, his Pride, Cruelty, and Ambition have render'd insupportable; y might have expelled a Tyrant with his Family from a noble ngdom originally free, which he had reduced into the miserable polition of the most vile and abject Slavery; and plac'd one of bre Honour, Vertue and Sincerity in their Room, their Title to Crown being at best but doubtful and suspitious, as depending ly upon the Authority of a Pope in the nullity of the Marriage of argaret of Valois with Henry the Fourth; and there is as much reato question the Legitimacy of his Successors, the Children of withe Thirteenth, as that of our High Church Darling Pretenr's; they might have been the glorious Instruments of restoring er ancient Liberty to that generous People, which had been rah'd from them by their perfidious Kings, in the Restoration of eir respective Parliaments, and the free Assemblies of their gene-Estates, in which the supream Power of their Nation was origilly lodg'd; they might have reestablish'd the pure Protestant Relion as it stood reform'd, which by the Wickedness and Malice of e Jeluits, and Treachery of their Kings, (to the Difgrace and Reoach of all the Protestant Powers of Europe, and especially our vn, whose Princes were Guarantees of it) has been totally extirted out of the Nation, in contempt of the most formal Sanctions t its Security and Establishment, and particularly of the memora-Edict of Nantes, made in its Favour perpetual and irrevocable, all the Ties and Obligations that human Wisdom or divine could nder Sacred and Inviolable.

These were some of the many blessed Fruits might have reasonay been hop'd for from the Goodness of God up in the Labours of it noble General, had he been permitted by his and the Nation's nemies at home to have continu'd at the Head of those Victorias Troops, which without the least cheque to their good Fortune ad freed all Germany from the Ravages and Insults of the common nemy; which, by the same Valour, recover'd all Flanders, which the French had got intire Possession of, by their laudable accuston Artifices of Fraud and Circumvention, and forc'd them to retirely hind their Lines for the Defence of their proper Frontiers. Who ver is acquainted with the Scituation of the Spanish Netherlands, to Number, the Force, and Strength of their Garrisons, their Plans either by Nature or the Fortifications of Art, made as it were in pregnable, the manner of taking and defending Towns, will wonderfully furpriz'd to fee a whole Country, under the Cenduda our renowned General, reduced in the space of four or five Year which might have been the Work of more than half an Age to the most formidable Power in Europe, in a fair way of making War, or a supposition that each Town and Place was tolerably defended yet we find that upon gaining the famous Battle of Ramelies, at on Blow, and as it were in one Day, the great and noble Provinced Brabant and Flanders brought into the Hands of their lawful Prince from whom they had been injuriously usurp'd; so far were in French Troops from being what they were heretofore effeem'd, in viscible; so far were they abated and dispirited of their ancient Vi lour, that they feem'd not to be the same People, or the Descendent of those famous Gauls, who so long and generously defended the Country and Liberty from the Violence of the Roman Legions; a who in later Years, and in our Memory, have given a thouland Proofs of their Gallantry, even in the unjust Cause of oppressing their Neighbours; if their ancient Character were ever true, than their first Charge they were more than Men, and in the second le than Women, they feem'd now to have lost the first noble Part of it and in every Action to have retained only the latter. The Genin of France, as now inflay'd, long shrunk before the superior Geniu of Liberty, that animated and invigorated the generous Troopso their Confederate Enemies. Far be it from me to detract from the Merit and natural Bravery of that noble People; but there is a certain Fatability in Kingdoms at destin'd Periods, that imperceptibly pro disposes for Conquest and great Revolutions, when the time pointed by a mysterious and unsearchable Providence is at hand, & very naturally makes Men Cowards, and that is one of the principal Dispositions that has dispirited and enfeebled the Vigor of a People renown'd in all Ages for the memorable Exploits and Glory of the Arms; for Men who obey out of Fear only, who are torn from the Arms of their Wives, Children, Friends and dearest Relations, wh are compell'd into a Service they detest, who are ill paid, ill clearly and worse fed, what Seeds or Principles soever of true Valour the may have in their Blood, can difficultly be suppos'd to exert themselve and fight well, when they know that 'tis only for the Augmental on of the Glory of a tyrannical Power that oppresses them. Butt return; in the succeeding Campaigns to the Day of his Demission, ou noble and fortunate Warrior, by an inconceivable Rapidity of Con quest, had reduc'd almost all the rest of the Spanish Provinces, eve to the French Frontiers; and whether might not fuch a General, a the Head of such Troops, have extended it, had not the French good Friends here, and our own Country's perfidious Enemies, put their plus ultra to a course of stupendious Victories, which must necesly have terminated in a glorious and honourable, a secure, lasting advantageous general Peace, which was the End of the War, ead of an infamous, insecure and inglorious separate one; which not only reslect a Dishonour (I had almost said upon my Coun) upon the faithless and persidious Contrivers of it, but in a short

e be the occasion of commencing another, which shall necessari-

f to gain compleat and glorious Victories as often as a Man fights: o take every Town he his down before, how impregnable foever e esteem'd by Art or Nature, though defended with numerous risons of the most select and gallant of the Enemy's Troops; o carry all things before one, with the impetuofity of an irrefifti-Torrent be, as these senseless and invidious High-Church Trayhave infinuated, to prolong a War; they would have oblig'd the old, if out of their wondrous Magazine of modern Politicks they discover'd to them their more compendious Arts and Methods acilitate and expedite it. Shameless Impertinence! frontless Imlence! Was the exorbitant Power of such a Kingdom as France to educ'd in one Day, or by the Loss of a fingle Battle? Was the Retion of the Spanish Netherlands, which may properly be said to be continu'd Cittadel, Suppos'd to be the Work only of one Camgn or two? No, the Crime of this great Man, was not for doing little in the common Cause of Liberty, but for doing too much their private Designs and Interest; he beat their dear Friends the nch too unmercifully wherever he met them, and they would d to be beaten; he would not suffer them to breath; he was too reasonably swift in his Conquests; he did not seem so much to rch to fight, as to fly to certain Victory, which was the Bane and rtal Poiton to their laudable Design of inslaving their Country; le, we but too well know, are the Crimes which they can neforgive him. Oh, that we have so much Reason to say, that a separated to the holy Offices of the most pure Religion know Forgiveness! How shall such Men dare to expect that the black s of base Ingratitude and breach of Christian Charity should ebe forgiven to them? If he has inrich'd himself with the just pils of the War, if he has augmented his Treasure in proportion his Glory, in the ravage of a Traytor's Country, who call'd the amon Enemy into an Empire, of which he was a principal Memand which he ought to have imploy'd his Life and Fortune to e defended, what is all this to them? 'Tis no more than Just and while so to do; 'tis the eternal Practice of all Conquerors; 'tis due, and though below the Merit of his Service, yet the fair Reppence of his glorious Toils and Dangers of the War. Vertue is yenough faid to be its own Reward; yet he that feeds on nothing a whole Campaign, will make but a meagre Figure the latter of it, and may be starve into the Bargain; there is seldom any tue to be found so perfect amongst Men, as not to be pleas'd h Applause and Rewards, though they are not essential to it; and by have been observ'd to have been valiant in Crouds where they had Witness of their Actions, who alone would have been ball enough, when they have neither the Testimony of Multitudes to pland their Valour, nor the Prospect of the Favour and Munificen of the Prince to recompence it. I never read of but one, and he an iquated Bear-garden Roister of a Greek, I think they call'd Ajax, who only defired Light of the Gods that he might fee told his Enemy's Guts out, and did not care it Agamemnon and all rest of his Countrymen had been at the Devil; some Men inde may give great and eminent Proofs of their Bravery and Course in hazardous Enterprizes, but 'tis no more than a feeble and occasion mal Vertue; but he who daily exposes his Life to the most cent and inevitable Danger, only for the fake of Glory, and the Hong of a fair Reputation, may be esteem'd something more than a Ma As Men are made, there is something more than bare Speculations ceffary to content them; we shall never be enabled by philosophia Fumes, or a metaphytical Subtility to force a Trench, or flora. Breach, or vigoroully beat out an Enemy's- Brains; they are all and airy Diet, which whilst it agreeably flatters and amuses in Philosopher, starves the honest Soldier, the much more useful Men ber of the two in a Common-wealth; there is fomething more in stantial in Recompence and just Rewards for Service, which as the animate em to bold and dangerous Actions, inables them to thell ecution of them; Mens Weaknesses and Passions, and particular their Vanity, must be sometimes indulg'd, as well as their Vente and Perfections, and in no profession of Life more than in the nourable and perillous one of Arms; an Officer or private Soldie who is fure to return home if he escapes with Life, as poor as went abroad, and may be with his Bones broke into the Bargain, but a melancholly and disastrous Scituation of Life; but cloth, a feed, and pay good Men well, and they will fight well; for but a forrowful Circumstance for a Man to have his Brains beat out upon an empty Stomach; nor are there any Attempts, hower difficult or dangerous, in which they will not cheerfully expose the Lives, when they are fure of being indulg'd by the Favour of the Prince, or inrich'd with the Spoils of the Enemy; and if this ter be in any Measure the Case of our English General, mu good may his Acquisitions do him, and may he long live to in and increase them in Despight, and to the Confusion of all his try Enemies who begrudge him.

The pitiful Reproach the mercenary Underlings of the Factor who knew no better, make him of his Ingratitude to his Mais as they are pleas'd to call him, King James, is as irrational a foolish as all the rest. If that King cast his Eye upon him as Gentleman worthy of his Favour, 'tis the only Mark that I know he ever gave of his Judgment and Penetration, and it may be it to his Credit; but when he was ingaging a Man of Parts and C pacity to his honest Service, he was not supposed to be purchase a service Slave to all the vile and wicked Purposes of his Ambit on. particular Marks and Distinctions of his Favour, that his Jue, his Wisdom, his Vertue or Valour may deserve, and the Laws horize; but évery honest, loyal Subject is under greater and re indispensable Obligations to his Country; for it is possible for Prince, as in the Case of that unhappy one, to forfeit and canall the Obligations of Gratitude and Allegiance by his Mal-adinstration. For the Merit of Benefits is destroy'd, when they lavish'd only to debauch Men to the Interests of an irregular illegal Amhition; they are then to be look'd upon rather as fusions to corrupt an honest Man, than as an Instance of the ce and Favour of the Giver; which let it be of what Value and ure it will, is ever too dear a Purchase at such an Expence as of a Man's Vertue and Honour, when he cannot be esteem'd ne Friend to his Master, without becoming a false Traytor to Country; and in such a Case, the Man who has receiv'd the diffinguishing Marks of his Munificence, if he does not basely ungenerously betray him, gives sufficient Proofs of an elevated ommon Vertue. It a Great and Vertuous Man owes much to Prince, there is something due to his own Honour and Connce; and when he finds himself defigned to be only the Tool wicked Ambition, 'tis a great Sacrifice he makes of his Rements, if he does no more than to discontinue his further Ser-; for when the Prince makes it appear, that he evidently goes at to subvert the fundamental Laws of his Country, to destroy Liberties of his Subjects, and to extirpate the establish'd Relin, there is an end of all private and publick Obligations, both Gratitude and Fidelity; and he who draws his Sword against in their Defence and Preservation, becomes neither an Ingrate a Traytor, but for fakes and oppoles one that is both to God and People; inafmuch as the publick Good of a whole, great and Nation, is infinitely preferable in the fight of God and all d Men, to the Interests of any single Person or Family who our to destroy them. We leave the contrary Practice to the rthy Refiners of High-Church Divinity, who have given the orld reason to believe, or at least have been at abundance of pains to so, that they place the Merit of their Loyalty in the Slavishof their Obedience to their Idol of absolute Power, which both disclaim and despise. And here I think my self oblig'd to e notice of a certain fort of a North Country Pedlar in Highirch Politicks, in a notable Treatife which I think he calls No ten, or no General; and in which, if I am not very much mien, the Man seems to have had a much better Opinion of his formance himself, than any body else; wherein he is pleas'd to merate all the great and noble Exploits of the English General, a body would think, with a great deal of Pleasure and Stision, from the ever memorable Day of the Battle of Blenheim, he ever memorable Day of the Reduction of Bouchain, and to by of which he attributes all the Merit and Praise which are juffly their due; but from his ingenious Premises, deduces a veodd and dubious Conclusion: 'Tis true, fays this Aretick Politi-

And then in complaifance to his or Nation, is pleas'd to name three Commanders, the Earl of Orling Mr. Murray, and Mr. Roffe. Thefe, 'tis acknowledg'd, without ! wy or Exception, to be very brave and gallant Men, and excelled Commanders in their respective Stations; but it is one thing fight an Army, and another thing to command one, as the Head a Confederacy compos'd of most of the greatest Powers in Euro there is something else to be done in such a Circumstance, being bare cutting of Throats; there are other Uses for them, than the Exercise of a wild and savage Ferocity common with Men to Brut There is required in such a General a consummate Knowledge founded upon a long Experience and Observation of the gener Affairs of Europe, and the particular Scituation of the Interesti the respective Princes, whose Troops compose a grand Confeden cy; there must be a wonderful Fund of Merit, founded upon establish'd Reputation of Conduct and Courage, and a suitable, culiar Address to infinuate a Man's selt into the Grace and Este of these Powers, so as to ingage them to confide securely, and trust the management of their Interests with a perfect Confident in the Valour, the Integrity, and other great and requisite Quality of the Man; for they, as it were, delegate their Lives, Liberto their Fortunes and Powers to him, who acts as the Soul of the who Confederacy: There is a very nice Regard to be had to the Culton the Manners and Temper of the respective Troops; they all expe to be carefs'd and indulg'd, according to the Merit of their Servin or the Dignity of their Prince, and after their own Way too: Co rage, 'tis true, is of every People and Nation, and apt to be all the rough and untractable, if they are free; for the Courage Slaves, if there be any such thing amongst them, is a very que good natur'd and governable Quality, but with the others is a to bulent restive Creature, which must be manag'd with a very me and delicate Hand, otherwise you may be embaras'd with a mul tude of Mutineers, instead of being inforc'd by serviceable Audi aries; yet a General, who expects to perform great things by Troo compos'd of different Nations and Humours, which none of Antiquity was ever known to do but the admirable Hannibal, m have the Art, than which nothing is more difficult, to confor him e fa

nfelf to their different Humours and Manners, he must be as a nmon Father to them all; and if he expects to be well ferv'd. must find out the Address to make himself be obey'd, more out love than fear. There is nothing in a grand Army, of the great-Importance to the least, that is not the Business, and to be unthe Care and Eye of the General himself; for he, who wholly es upon the Management of Subordinate Officers, will always himself deceiv'd, to see the necessary Provisions for such a Mulde to a Point provided: To have them regularly cloth'd, and connly sublisted; their Arms, their Hories, their Equipage, their nts, their Artillery and their Ammunition; to choose the Advanes of Incampments, to-watch and take all Opportunities, to pals iver, to force a Pass, to befiege Towns, and to make the best confitions of his Toops in a Day of Battle; a Judgment to fore-Events, and to provide for a fafe and honourable Retreat in case any unexpected Disgrace, to incourage and reward the Brave, punish such as deserve it; a severity of Discipline, which must rather from the necessity and good of the Service, than from harshness and ill nature of the Commander; a Fund of Stratans to surprize the Enemy, and of Judgment and Penetration er to be over-reach'd or circumvented by him, with a thousand er Qualities, too tedious to enumerate here, are the certain Buels of a consummate General. Now, whether all these great necessary Qualities are to be found in any, or all of this Auor's Favourites, I neither inquire nor dispute, but the Event has ficiently convine d the World, that those I have mention'd, and ny others, necessary to compleat that glorious Character, were indantly found to be the Partage and Ornaments of our own; with all imaginable Respect to his Northern Heroes, I humbly nceive, it may justly be question'd, whether the Princes and Powof Europe wou'd have thought any, or all of them equally quad to be at the Head of the greatest Confederacy that ever was it, or their Interests and Honours so safe, as in the Hands, and der the Conduct of the Renowned Duke of Marlborough; but sides, with that worthy Author's permission, if it had been her pety's, or the other Confederate's Pleasure, to have inquir'd atanother, England is not yet so barren of Vertue and Valour, o' the rankness of the Soil, and the indulgence of too luxuriant Liberty, produce abundance of Vermin or late, which we call our vulgar Language Fools and Knaves, or in that of the Cabala, ries and High-Churchmen) as to be under any manner of necely of strolling so far Norward for Commanders of a diftinguish'd erit and Capacities. And from the whole, I shall venture to draw e Conclusion, which I think will follow something more natuly than his, that if we had not had this very fame individual eneral, at this time of Day we shou'd have had no Queen; and thout pretending to the Spirit of Prophecy, I boldly maintain, at fince, by her falle Friends, she has been depriv'd of the assistice of his Sword, which he had fo long and fortunately drawn ther Honour and Preservation, the time is not far off, if it please

God she lives, when she will see her self deprived of a Crown, blace it on the desecrated Head of a certain popish Pretender.

These are the senceless Reproaches tounded upon the most me rious Fallehood, that the little mercenary Scriblers of the Fact have blarted thro' the Nation, to difgrace and blacken the Reput on of our noble Englishman, who has reflected more Honour up his Country, than they can ever be able in the utmost Profusions their Gratitude to recompence; they show, indeed, the bitterness their Malice, but at the same time illustrate the Vertite of the Ma and whilst they labour hard to injure, against their Wills comme him; they open Mens Eyes to fee and reflect upon the base his tice they have indeavour'd to do a Merit, which is the Glory Ornament of their Country. 'Tis the Fate of injur'd Vertue and nocence to fhine more bright, thro' the fullen Clouds of Envy Destraction; their senseless Ribaldry is but the yelping of munn Curs at the brightness of the Moon, without affecting it. It my indeed, be acknowledg'd, that when we fee a great Man under in Displeasure of so August an Assembly as an English House of Con mons, one might reasonably expect to find something of another Nature, some heinous Crime against the State, as the Foundation it, which, upon the certainty of Evidence, may be suppos'd to are ry the Punishment along with the Conviction; yer, with all in Deference to fo considerable a Branch of the Legislature, they have fufficiently manifested to the World, that as they are no more in Men they can err, and have err'd; and all that can be reasonal faid to excuse an Error, is to distinguish and separate the Frank and Weakness of human Nature, from the study'd and concern Efforts of Malice or Envy, which are ever the voluntary Refults the perverienels or obstinacy of a corruped Will: The former my be in a great measure excusable, because they may proceed from Ma whose Intentions may be upright and equitable, but may poll want Judgment to distinguish; but the latter are ever in the high Degree-criminal, as proceeding from fuch, who prefer the private Interest of a Faction to all Considerations of Honour, good Sal and Equity. Yet, it was fomething strange in this Instance of Grace, that a Senate, that is or ought to be compos'd of Gentle men of Sense, Probity, Honour and Love for their Country to are chosen to represent, shou'd with a premeditated Design again a great Man run precipitately into the Frenzies of fuch without doors, whose Interest it may be to fear and consequently hate his This but too evidently shows how far Men of all Sorts and Proff fions may be transported, when they abandon themselves to the Passions, in contempt of the Lights and Sentiments of their Reals and Conscience; but a fatal Spirit of Discord was gone forth, a right reverend learn'd Prelate has observ'd, (and for which held been sufficiently insulted) that troubled fore the Camp , he Ciya the Court. 'Tis a melancholy Instance, how possible it is for full grand Assembly to be so far misguided by Passion or Prejudice, to run into Measures to disturb the Peace and Tranquility of the Country, which they were elected to defend and maintain. W

r in future times shall a great Man, who has nobly ferv'd that untry at the hazard of his Life, fly for Protection, it his Countrymen those who ought to be his Friends, are the first who cruelly ult what is infinitely dearer to him, his Honour and Reputation? s the utmost stretch of humane Malice, when it is not only cont to watch and take, but to feek, to hunt after, or rather than , invent Pretences to opprels and punish the Innocent; yet in the hous Cafe I am about to mention, this appears to be wholly the fign of his Enemies; but as the Justice of his Cause exempted n from the Guilt of a blameable Action, his Innocence plac'd him.

The Kingdom was at Two pence more Expence to make it good, or reimburle m; what reasonable Handle is there in all this, to object to him a me of that high Nature, as the Embezzling the publick Money? the General indeed had exacted this from those Troops of his own ad, or had defrauded them of fo much of their Pay by any Arbiry Act of his own, to put to much Money in his own Pocket, ere might have been some colour of a Pretence to have reproach'd n with; but as all the World is now fatisfied, (but those who will ver be satisfied with any thing but his and their Country's Ruin) atit was a formal Agreement made with our glorious King William. note Memory they equally hate, and fince confirm'd and ratified her present Majesty, whom they are infamously berraying, for e of the most necessary and important Services of the War; 1st Crime was it in a General, whom the most inveterate of his emies cannot prove to have employ'd a Doir of it to any other e than that for which it was defign'd? and those employ'd in them, make a Practice necessary, while it felf is blameable, the necessity of the Evil in some Measure, only excuses but justifies it; for as all Men are made of the Paste, with various and different Modifications, a General w Servants and Officers are liable to be corrupted by the Money Enemy, will make but a very indifferent Campaign, though he all the Vertues of an Angel, if he wants the ampler Means of on terbribing those of the Enemy : He may console himself if he plant fes with the reflections of his Integrity, but he shall not fail to expos'd to all the raillery and difgraceful Evils of an unfuccess War. The honest and greatest part of the Nation are but over alm dantly satisfied, that ever fince the Happy Revolution, and at time, we have had, and still have, and know them too, Betrale enough of our most secret Councils and Designs at home, who may a notable Figure in their successful Treachery, to repine at the General's keeping those Secrets in his own Breast, without be oblig'd to discover them to certain Persons here, who would have fail'd the next Moment to have communicated them to Enemy. But further, if this were in effect so great a Crime in Duke of Marlborough, as to deserve the Displeasure and Animalia fion of a House of Commons, how came it to pass that the same House of Commons thought fit to allow it to the Duke Ormand, in the same Post? Was it a Fault in the One, and a Men in the Other? Or was the Foreigners Money necessary for secrets vice and Intelligence during the Command of the One, and un ceffary in that of the Other? Yes most certainly, and the Reason wonderful plain; the One has never beaten the French, and as Ma ters now stand, we are very fure never will; and the Other h beaten them too often and too unmercifully; and one may venture fwear, that however they may be inclin'd to forgive him all then of the Sins of his whole Life, they will never forgive him that me crying and damnable one of drubbing so inhumanely their de new Friends.

The other Instance of Sir Solomon Medini, is yet more frivola and impertinent. If a General contracts with an Undertaker Bread for an Army under his Command, and that Undertaker apparently out of the usual Stoppage from each Soldier make immoderate Profit by that Contract, what Injustice is it to the Pa lick if he shares it with him, since the Fund for Bread is out eff Soldiers Pay, which the Nation has no longer any thing to do we unless to correct Abuses when it appears they have been defra ded? I marvel how it came to pass, that the Devil did not put it their wife Heads of ranging this too under the Article of emberall the publick Money; for I am certain there is full as good Real for one as the other; but I challenge the most malicious of his to mies to assign a time when the Army under his Command any Complaint for want of their Bread; whether ever the Sold wanted an Ounce of his Proportion; nay, whether they were better and more regularly provided for in that Point than eyern were known to be before? The best of it is, that the Event has justified what I e here offer'd; his good Fortune and Merit, the Justice and Inence of his Cause, set him as much out of the reach of their iment Malice, as his Vertue is above their Imitation: There are some tues so vigorous and strong, as carry their Antidote with them, cannot be affected with the Infection of the most malignant Poi-; their natural Vigour is their Security; and they who attempt last them, are short of the good nature of the Devils, though in the Instances of their ill they wonderfully resemble them; for admire at least the Happiness they have forfeited and lost by r Ingratitude and Ambition, though they must never again posses I shall conclude this feeble Defence of this great and inparable Man, which is but a just Tribute which every honest lishman, who heartily loves his own Honour, or that of his intry, owes to him who has done so much for its Glory and Infl. the Soldier; a Judgment clear and strong to form great Defigu and a Courage switt and prompt to their Execution, equally cape tated for Council and Action, who in an early Age has had to good Fortune to merit a Reputation, and arriv'd to these honoun ble Stations that are for the most part the Reward of the And and most Experienc'd, which he has had the Happiness to haven nag'd with that Address and good Manners, as to have deserv'din Admiration of all without being envy'd; a rare and uncommonly licity! Covetous of Opportunities where Honour was to be got, a brave in the pursuit without Temerity; Calm and Sedate; as of wonderful presence of Mind in the warmest, and in the most po lous Occasions intrepid; patient of Labour, and in the dischar and exercises of his Duty, indefatigable; a fingular affortiment of Scholar and the Soldier, equally capable of Bufiness and of We he feems to be born to the latter, and to make the other only Divertion; and when I have mention'd his inviolable Love to Country, and his Attachment to his noble Master, I have but draw the outlines of his imperfect Character; and as both those amin Qualities, have render'd him the Object of the Malice and Ham of the Faction, he has had, if not the Address wholly to parry, h generous Courage to despise them; the Unconcern with which parted with Employments, which few Men would quit with Regret and Deficulty, is an Argument he thought it not worth while to continue them after the Difgrace and Loss of his below General: 'Tis the effect but of a common Vertue, to express all or Concern for great Men unjustly under Missortunes; but to so fice all things, and adhere to them, even in their Difgrace, is a Pin fomething extreamly above the common Elevation of humanels fection; and amongst all his other excellent Qualifications, his & titude to that great Man shall ever be the most shining of his racter; Heaven has rescu'd his and other of our gallant County men's Swords to retrieve the Glory and Honour of our Nation.

When I have mention'd the great good Fortune, the rare and vated Vertues, and the wonderful Successes that have been interest ble from our renowned General through the whole course of the War; far be it from me from depriving either the gallant Officen our own Country of an inferior Rank, or those of the Confeden both Commanders and Troops, of that share of Glory that is as ju and equally due to their Courage and Bravery: If there have be any Contestations amongst them, it has been only that of a general Emulation to advance the Reputation of their Nations. The British are without question a brave, hardy and valiant People, capable executing the most daring and perilous Enterprizes that can be pected from a free and resolute Courage; but those Qualities and .common with them to the rest of their gallant Confederates; the has always appear'd a commendable Emulation in all the Tro that compos'd the Contederacy, which arose only from Vertus the strife for Glory, but void of Envy or Jealoufy; for Discord ice at present at least, to be more particularly the Growth of our of Country; the struggle amongst the rest was only that of Home

the thould do best; who should show most resolution, most firm es, most constancy and contempt of Death, in the prosecution of he common Cause of Liberty. Wou'd to Heaven it had pleas'd the overeign Disposer of all Power and Dominion, to have continued heir Union and his Bleffings on their Vertue, till they had obtain'd he great End of a more fecure, lasting, honourable and advantageus Peace than our wretched High Church Politicians have shamm'd pon the World and us; this we should have had no Reason to have espair'd of, in spite of our perfidious domestick Enemies, from the nole and vigorous Resolutions and Efforts that the rest of our high Confederates (who had a juster rellish and estimate of their Liberty han we had) were willing to have continued, with a General at heir head, who to fay what he justly deserves, in all the Vertues nd rare Qualities of a great and confummate Captain, was equal to ur own; to say more, were in one to offend a Modesty equal to is Valour, and the sublime Merit of the other. It is wonderful to bserve by whit secret and mysterious Means the Eternal Providence recutes the Order of its Designs. This great Person, as a younger rother, was at first design'd for the Service of the Church; but that by profession of Life no way suiting to the fire of his Genius, and mirial Disposition destin'd to nobler Ends, he prevail'd with his riends to move the French King to give him a Regiment of Horle, who answer'd them with a Pride and Contempt so natural to him, which yet has prov'd so fatal to his Interests since, that he did not hink him worthy to be trufted with a Troop of Dragoons; a Refual fo vicient and outragious exasperated the Spirit of a noble Youth, whole Birth and Spirit, more than enough, justified such a Pretenon; he left upon it the Kingdom in disgust, and went into the bervice of the Emperor who was then at War with the Turks, where he had immediately a Regiment of Horse given him; with which n the first Campaign, he perform'd such extraordinary Exploits, as ender'd him the admiration of his Friends, and terror of his Enenies: In the progress of this furious War, he continued to give such ally Proofs of an admirable Sagacity and Judgment, and of a daring nd invincible Valour in so tender an Age, as were the happy Omens of his future Grandeur and Glory in a more advanc'd one. I do not pretend here to write the History of all the glorious Actions of this lustrious Prince; it suffices to tay, that in the ensuing Campaigns, he so eminently distinguish'd himself, both by his Courage and Capacity, that in the space of a few Years, the World saw him Young s he was Commander in Chief of the Imperial Army, where he had he good Fortune and Glory in an intire and compleat Victory, to give the Turks such a Blow at the ever memorable Battle of Zenta, is they have never to this day recover'd, and has never fince been qual'd but by that of Blenheim, where he shar'd the Glory against he most Christian Turk, with our Illustrious Hero, From that time he has always had the Honour to have been at the Head of the Imperial Armies, where he increased a Reputation was thought inca-Pable of Addition, by fresh Wonders sufficiently known to all-the World, for the good of Europe and his own Immortal Honour. has been formerly faid, that those whom God has design'd to Design ction, he first infatuates; this was never more evidently verified than in the Instance of this haughty and imperious Matter, who for unhappily for himself despis'd and exasperated this great and ex cellent Captain, whom God rais'd up and preferv'd tobe, in so great a Measure, the Scourge and Humbler of his Ambition and Tyranny, His never to be fure forgotten March of near forty Days, in spite of a thousand Oppositions from the Enemy, to the Relief of Turin; his forcing the Retrenchments of a French Army before it, more numer. pus than his own, with a Brother of France at the Head of it; and the intire Defeat he gave them with his fatigu'd and harrafs'd Gen mans, as they carry'd his Reputation to fo high a pitch of Glory, a one can with Difficulty conceive a greater, so shall they be real with Wonder and Aftonishment by all succeeding Generations; and fince by our Treachery we loft the Affiftance of that noble and ge nerous Commander, I firmly believe that the glorious Work of hum. bling that common Enemy of Mankind is referv'd, to add the la Comble and Complement of Honour to our own; for God will never permit an Inexorable Tyrant to descend in Peace to his Grave.

Thus loaded with Honour, the occasions of the War in a little time after gave the Opportunity to the Interview of the two greatest Cap. tains of their Age; who at a distance had been long Admirers of each other's Merit. In great Souls, where Vertue pure and difinterefled has the ascendant, the firmest and most perfect Friendships are, asi were, form'd in an Instant, by a certain secret Sympathy and Conformity of Manners; whereas in feeble and less generous Minds, tindurd with the Interests of the World, or Vanity of Applaule, it wants length of time, formal Acquaintance, and a Communication of mu tual Offices, which beget generally that which rather ought to be call'd Respect and Esteem, than distinguish'd by the sacred Name of Friendship; at best, 'tis no more than a fickle and precarious He bitude contracted upon the traffick of Benefits, and feldom is longer liv'd than they continue; and not a Principle founded upon a pure and simple Vertue, which is ever constant and uniform, and never cealed but in the Grave. But that of these two illustrious Heroes was not born Young; it needed no Degrees to cultivate it; but was, as ! were, created in its full Bloom of Excellence and Perfection, by fecret Remblance, and fort of Intelligence of Vertue; their Souls," they were distinct, seem'd to be long and perfectly acquainted before they law; or rather (as they appear'd to be rais'd up by Providence for one great Defign, as the glorious Instruments of defending the Liberties of Europe) if it were not one and the same Soul that all mated both. He that will but feriously consider what great and work derful Things the Duke of Marlborough and Prince Eugene have don't in concert, with an Unanimity and harmonious Concord that has rate ly been found in former Ages, will find but little Difficulty tob lieve what I have here advanc'd; as in all the noble Actions they have perform'd together, they both went strait to their End, and went neither byass'd to the one Hand by Envy, nor to the other by the ry.

anity of Self-love, but were folely influenc'd by the Sentiments of cason, Honour, and the common Good; what the one conceiv'd nd propos'd as necessary to the Execution of any great Defign to at end, was ever approv'd of by the other. There was nothing fo ifficult, and next to impossible, that was not reasonably to have been spected from the joint Efforts of such united Vertue; Evil be to em who first contrived to separate and divide them; but it is too edent that the perfidious Enemies of our own Hero (befides the easons I have already mentioned) envy'd him the Glory of finishg the War he had carry'd on with so much Honour to himself, and o much Prejudice to their detestable Designs of betraying their ountry. If ever the Character of duo fulmina belli were justly due any, 'tis to these two great and incomparable Captains, Twins of lory, and Brothers of the War. The shameless and scurrilous Treatent this generous Prince receiv'd from the Canaille of the Faction, hilft he honour'd our Nation with his Presence, is a Reproach and famy no time can ever wear out, or the profitue Authors ever anefor; and as his Vertue and Merit are infinitely above the reach f their leud and profligate Ribaldry, he will have the goodness to stinguish the honest and greatest Part of the Nation, who esteem nd venerate him from the Scum and Ordures of an infolent Faction, at dar'd to infult, and whose Interest it is to hate him. It was from e superior Genius of this great Commander, at the Head of a potent onfederacy, who had form'd and continu'd their vigorous and gecrous Resolutions for the establishment of the Peace and Liberties f Christendom, that we might still have hop'd for the Defeat of all he treacherous Designs of their and our common Enemies, if both and they had not basely been betray'd by us; nor shou'd we have ad any Reason to doubt but he wou'd have shown the World, that till knew how to conquer the fame Enemies, as he had done forperly without us; but oh! what might we not have depended on om our united Forces, under the Command of two fuch confumate and successful Generals? To affirm, that by their Wildom, Couge and Unanimity, and all the rare and admirable Qualities necesry to finish the Character of the most perfect and excellent Capins, they have surpais'd all the famous and renown'd Men of Anquity, is of the Declaimer, and smells the Vice of Flattery I detest; ut to maintain that in all future Ages they shall stand the most per-A Models for Imitation of all that shall pretend to be great, or orious and fortunate in War, is no more than what is frictly confeat with the Modesty of Truth and Justice.

Nor was the Demission of our noble General sufficient to satist the Rage and Malice of the Faction; there was a criminal Fleet well as Army to be call'd to Account; there was an Admiral of igh Renown stood sirmly in the Way of their Designs, who as he was sufficient the same Principles and Love for his Country, must run the Fate of all there of the same Character, and whom therefore it was as much heir Business to hate, and Interest to disgrace; their Animosity ook its Rise from the same Fountain, as against all such as had ontributed to the mortifying and reducing the overgrown exorbitant Power of their best Friend and Protector the King of France And though the memorable Services of this kind will ever be to counted worthy of all Praise and Commendation, by all wife and henest Men, as being as well for the Glory as Security of their berties; yet must the gallant Men who perform them be alike treat ed, with the utmost Affront and Indignities, because destructive of few Traitors, whose Intention it is manifestly to betray and delto them. This noble and generous Patriot, who by his Bravery and Conduct, had all his Life in the West-Indies, the Mediterranean, and wherever elie he had the Honour to command, given a thouland Proofs of his Affection to the Interest of his Country and his W. lour, had the good Fortune to give the French Power at Sal mortal a Blow, at the famous Battle of La Hogue, as to this In they have been never able to recover. A noble Scene for every mi and honest Englishman, to see the Royal Sun of France of 110 Gun with thirteen or fourteen more, many of them three deck'd, at all of them Line of Battle Ships, in a Flame by the fury of English Fire; besides what were taken, blown up, sunk or otherwised stroy'd during an Engagement, which utterly ruin'd the Maritim Power of France in these Seas, as having never fince been abled this Side to furnish out any thing but inconsiderable Squadrons; asa the other hand it was a Sight of Terror, and the utmost Mortificat on to the late King James, who stood ready upon the Beach with an Army of thirty Thousand French, and the few abanden'd Ingli and Irish in his Service (at the Invitation of these Loyal High-Church Politicians, who had prepar'd all things for his Reception, many of whom are still alive, and some of them at the Head of Business to be the sad Spectator of the Destruction of the French Fleet, at in that of all his Hopes, by the Bravery and Courage of a People is had so shamefully manig'd, and in the end as shamefully abandon't Tis worth while to reflect a little upon the Scituation of their im formidable Fleets, that were in a short time to decide the Fate of England and Liberties thereof. Monsieur Tourville, a Commande of great Experience and Courage at the Head of the French; and our noble Mr. Ruffel, fince the Right Honourable Earl of Orford, a honour to his Family and Country, Admiral of the English. The two Fleets had been sometime in view before they ingag'd, eat waiting for the coming up and junction of their Friends, the Frent for a confiderable Squadron from Toulon, and the English from His Lal. The Ministers of France foreleging the Miscarriage of the in tended Invation, equally from a delay as a nonexecution, and know ing their Numbers to be much superior to ours alone, obtainds positive Order for Monsieur Tourville to fight, notwithstanding it expected Squadron was not yet come up. By great good Fortung and the particular Providence of God, the Dutch, if I missake not arriv'd and joyn'd our Fleet the very Evening before, and together made about an Equality. There possibly never was an Ingagement began and continu'd fo long, with fo much Fury and Obstinacy of both Sides, each being senuble of the importance of the Successi but in the End it pleas'd God to bless the English and Dutch with most compleat and glorious Victory that ever was obtain'd upon t. Water. How far the other Admirals Delaval and Ashby actted themselves of their Duty, with regard to those Enemy's Ships ich fled and elcap'd through the Race of Alderney, I dont pretend determine; but our worthy High-Church Men at home, I rememfull well, who can very gallantly fight Battles in a Coffee House, dare not look an Enemy in the Face in the Field, pretended to be ndrous angry that the whole French Fleet was not catch'd, as in let, and every Ship of them either taken or destroy'd; so nota-. a Talent has Hypocrify to disguise the Sentiments of Men, who uld have been much better pleas'd to have feen their gallant untrymen and the Dutch beaten, and the French and their abdied King insulting their Coasts in Tryumph. 'Tis as well worremark, the Difference of the Reception of the respective Adrals upon their return home. Monsieur Tourville, who was well ten, and under whose Conduct the French that Day suffered the eatest Disgrace and Loss that ever that Nation met with at Sea, all the Court expecting to fee him meet with a Reception fuitato the Circumstances of his evil Fortune, was generously rey'd by his King, comforted by him for his Difgrace, as the chance ly of War, and dismissed with this noble Elogium, There goes the in who fears less to die, than disobey my Orders, and was immedily after honoured with a Baten of Marshal of France; in this mmendable, that he knew how to cherish and reward the Merit d Valour of a great Man, though unsuccessful: 'Tis this grateful enerosity of his Temper, for Vertue is ever to be respected even in Enemy, that may be esteem'd the principal Reason of the great d eminent Services he daily receives from his Officers, who are re of his Favour and Indulgence, if they behave themselves on Ocions with Honour and Distinction; whereas our noble Admiral as insulted and reproach'd by this implacable Faction then in Powfor doing greater Things than any of his gallant Countrymen in at high Station had ever done before him; but in Effect, for having ne too much to prevent the Designs of such, as had something else View than the Honour and Interest of their Country. It was erefore absolutely necessary for them to deprive the Nation of the burage and Service of fo great and gallant Man, who had the untky Art of beating their best and dearest Friend, least by the Essect the same Valour and good Fortune, he should once more defeat e Hopes they had entertain'd of the next Invasion from that King's erended Son. I cannot here but take Notice of another internal rifice of the Faction, at the same time, to expose the Kingdoms d our illustrious Queen Mary of blessed and immortal Memory, in e Imprisonment of the Collonels, Hales, Langston and his Brother, oundnell, Williams, Brereton, Culliford, Rodney, with Writs ready the Secretary's Office for the Seizure of above a Hundred more, ly to deprive the Nation and her Majesty of the Service of so mavexperienc'd and gallant Commanders, at a time when we were reaten'd, and had been invaded (if it had not been prevented by happy Deseat of the Erench Fleet, by our renowned Admiral)

The next Victim that was to be facrificed to their Rage, was on noble and generous Countryman General Stanhope, for the Devile Faction never does his Work by halves; a Gentleman of those or cellent Parts and Learning, of that unshaken Loyalty to his Queen, and Love of native Liberty, as any but a High-Church Profelite, who a profes'd Enemy to all that is good or commendable amongst Ma would have effeem'd an Honour and Ornament of his Country This gallant Man was thought fit, for his universal Capacities, to redress and resettle the Affairs of Spain, and to compose and a commodate the Disorders had been occasion'd in them, by the the ordinary Management of a noble Peer, who has fince given to World surprising Proofs of his Attachment to a predominant Fach on. A certain notable Agility and Expedition in travelling. feema be much properer Qualifications for what we call a Courier of the Cabinet, than the General of an English Army; for there are many of the Virtuoso are of Opinion, that his great Disposition for scouring about is something exceedingly like flying or running away, which they are inclinable to think is no very valuable or commendable Qu. lity in a Commander of Importance; at least they maintain it was not deem'd so amongst the fighting Fellows of Antiquity, who my be thought, by fome Moderns, to have had more Courage than Brain or Discretion; but be that as it will, the gallant and prudent Ma who fucceeded him, to the highest Degree answered all the Endso his important Commission, and of the Opinion that was conceived of his Vertue, Courage and Sufficiency; but I know not by what strange Fate it happens, there is a crying and abominable Sin in the bloody and ungodly Whigs, I mean, that of beating their Enema almost wherever they met them, that will eternally damn them a the Opinion of this Honest, Loyal, and Pious High-Church Faction It was such an Argument of a Republican and Antimonarchical Spi rit and Principles, with which they had endeavoured to blacken him to rise out of a Man's fick Bed to fight, beat and destroy, by a glow ous Victory, the Troops of a Tyrant, who as by the vilet of Frauds he had circumvented another Prince of his just Rights, by Violence and the Power of his Arms detain'd and defended them as is no where to be found but in the Maxims of High Church h licy and Divinity. 'Tis worth remarking, that he obtain'd this my morable Victory over the faithless French and rebel Spaniards in the cause of Liberty, in or near the same Plains where the young at noble Scipio led on his Roman conquering Legions to the defeat the faithless usurping Carthagenians; and at his return home, or the long after, in Recompence of all his noble Toils and Services, certain is it that a sublime Virtue can never be without Enemie met with much the same Treatment from his ingrateful Fellow C tizens; when by a Thousand gallant Actions he had surpasidt most celebrated of his Predecesiors, and compleated the Measures his Glory by the Reduction of Carthage, the Rival of the Roma Greatness, to Ashes; sometime after, when he was impeach'd by the rbitt alice of some of his Enemies for imbezzling the publick Treasure, of saw a Schedule of the Articles of his Impeachment affix'd in publick Place, with a noble Innocence and generous Disdain, me, says he to his Friends, let us go and sacrifice to the Gods, for a Day I conquer'd and subverted Carthage, and left the raskally ihune, with his rabble of corrupted Commons, confounded and onished at the noble sierceness and generosity of the Hero. There eds no Application; as much Ingratitude has been the Lot of rs, whose envious Countrymen had left him so long, as it were in mains, for a Missortune that an excess of Courage, an Error of the ight-Hand natural to the English, had precipitated him into; yet his long Detention the Faction had a double View, that of deliving him of surther Opportunities of beating their French Friends ain abroad, and that of securing themselves from the Opposition ey were sure to find from him to their infamous Design of be-

aying their Country at home. I shall mention here but one more, and he by Birth a Foreigner, Sentiments and Inclinations an honest Englishman, I mean my ord Galway; a Gentleman of rare and eminent Qualities, that eally render him proper for the Cabinet or Field; of which he as given abundant Evidence in the Reduction, and his Administraon of the Government of Ireland: There is something in this exllent Person's Circumstances in relation to the Faction, that wou'd ppear so extraordinary, as cou'd not well be accounted for, if evething they did were not unaccountable; for after having given he most shining Proofs of an extraordinary Conduct and Valour, oth upon this and a thousand other Occasions, he had the missorand to lose the Battle of Almanza; if a Man can be said to lose a lattle, who purchases an Immortal Stock of Honour to himself, ad Troops under his Command, in exchange; for the Duke of Berick, tho' with triple Numbers, with great Difficulty obtain'd the dvantage, and acknowledg'd he had only got one of the famous yrrhus his Victories; one or two more such wou'd have ruin'd im; yet, it is certain, with all that disadvantage and disparity of lumbers, if the Portuguse Horse had that Day done their Duty, nd not run away at the first Charge, and so left their Confedeate Troops naked and expos'd in Flank to the Insults of the Eneby, one might conclude from what they had performed, when hey were cover'd, that in all human Probability they wou'd have ain'd a Battle little inferior to any of our former: That then which cems strange, is this; one wou'd have imagin'd, that his being deeated by their good Friends might have made some atonement or the Misfortune of an ag'd General, maim'd and cover'd with ionourable Wounds, and reconcil'd him to the good Grace of the action; but no such matter, no Quarters; what is there remains hen for a great, unfortunate Man to do in such a case? 'Tis some. hing hard, indeed, and strange too; here is one General must be hilgrac'd for being once over-power'd and beaten by the French, and another under the same disgrace and misfortune, if it be one, or eternally beating them; beat or be beaten, 'tis exactly the same thing to High-Church, and fuitable to the Equity and Generolity their Proceedings in every thing else: For let an Englishman have all the great Qualities of your Cafars, your Scipios, your Hamibal your Pyrrhus, your Alexanders, and your Lord knows what othe Rabble of fighting Heroes of Pagan Memory, it imports not; it be a Whig, according to the Modern High-Church Philosophy, a is a Fool, a Vicious, a Knave, a Coward, or a Republican; for the it for granted, my honest Countrymen, that he who will not blind ly run into all the Treasons of the Faction, is in their Opinion, with out Bail or Mainprize, an infamous Betrayer of his Country; and particularly a Whig General, or a Whig Admiral is with them to most dangerous and pernicious of their Enemies, and in every the else the most worthless, and insignificant Creature in the Universe yet one thing they may, if they please at their leisure to reflect up on a little, that whilst there is a Whig General, a Whig Admin a Whig Peer, or a Whig Commoner, they may depend upon it, the they have so many strenuous and formidable Opposers, who willing good time know how to beat them, their High-Church, the French Friends and Popish Pretender together as ours and our der

Country's most mortal Enemies.

Let us now proceed to confider the Scituation and Condition of our Affairs, both in relation to our selves and the rest of Europia the Year 1702, in the time of our gracious Queen's Accession to the Crown. Our glorious King William, thro' the course of ablow dy and expensive War, had in great measure abated the exorbitan Power of France; and tho' he liv'd not quite to suppress and reduct it to the Limits was expected and hop'd for, yet he, as it were confounded and stun'd it to such a Degree, as to compel them to conclude a Peace at Ry wick; that all the Powers concern'd might at lest have a time to breath, and recover the Feebleness occasion'd by the Lois of Blood and Treasure, in the Prosecution of so chargeable and languinary a War. A Peace, such as the Condition of the Times and Circumstances of the respective Princes wou'd admit of, was concluded; but fuch as it was, it prov'd but very flor liv'd. Two notable Incidents in a very little time gave occasion in the further Effusion of Blood, which were the French King's still at knowledging and declaring the Pretender to be King of England, against the express Stipulations of the Treaty of Ryswick, and the placing his Grandson on the Throne of Spain, upon the Presump tion of the late King Charles's Will: If that Will had been the genuine and authentick Piece of that feeble Prince, 'twas fritolous and ineffectual to all Degrees and Purposes; but as all the World is convinc'd that it was the detestable Forgery of a Priet it was infinitely more fo; for the Crown and Kingdom is not the Princes, but the Peoples, and he can no more with Equity diffole of it to another, in prejudice of the rightful Heir, without the Confent of the general Estates and Cortez of that Kingdom, than the Pope at this time of Day can grant the Imperial Crown of Great Britain primo occupanti; but of these two Occasions, the former to the last Degree exasperated the People of England, who were sen tible ofity d e of the Insolence of the Affront to the Honour of their belov'd ng and Nation; and the latter the Emperor, and the rest of the ies to recommence the War, in which they reasonably hop'd for Bleffing of God in so just a Cause, as the Defence of the comn Liberties of Europe, and the particular Rights of injur'd Prinfrom the Violence and Injustice of Tyranny and Usurpation. A A powerful Confederacy was form'd by our great King William, en it pleas'd God for our Sins to deprive the World and us of Biessing of his auspicious Government, and lest the Prosecutiof it to his Successor, our gracious Queen. In this remarkable ar was finished that famous League and grand Alliance, which fo long been the Security of all Europe, against a tyrannical ogrown Power, increas'd by the additional Strength of the Spa-Monarchy, which was preparing new Chains for them. In this w Alliance, it was between all Parties mutually stipulated, with the Solemnities that can make fuch an Ingagement facred and inlable, never to lay down the Sword till they had reduc'd the wer of France into Limits confistent with the Safety and Tranility of Christendom, and restor'd the Possession of the whole mile Monarchy and the West Indies, with all their Dependencies, the rightful Heir of the House of Austria. Thus was the Comincement of this second War, and these the just and righteous tives to it: Never was any War begun with more Justice, card on with greater Bleffings of extraordinary Successes, or conded with more Scandal and Infamy; which had it continued in fame Hands that began it, wou'd long before this time have ded in such a Peace, as might for Ages have secur'd the Tranquiand Happiness of our own Nations, and all the rest of Europe. Thus we see Her Majesty at the Head of this powerful Confedey, with the hearty Affections of her own People, and the Eem and Admiration of all the World besides. She had the Wism and great good Fortune to place the Management of Affairs in Hands of Men both Civil and Military, whose Vertue and rare pacity were equal to the great and difficult Task before them; in who feem'd to be born to Bufiness and to Conquest. As there nothing that more evidently discovers the Wisdom and good Inations of the Prince for his Peoples Good and Happiness than the Choice of his Ministers; Her Majesty in the Choice of Hers, we the World as high Idea's of her Judgment and Prudence, as ey had already conceiv'd of the Reputation of her Arms. Never ere there in any Nation a Set of great Men of more Ability to mage the most difficult and arduous Affairs of State; never of more belity and Affection to the true Interest and Honour of their Queen d Country: Mature in their Councils to form great Refolutions, d swift and sure in their Execution; a wonderful Penetration to refee distant Evils, and timely to prevent the Mischiefs of them; use of shameless Artifices to circumvent an Enemy, but watch-, never to be deceiv'd or impos'd on by them; no treacherous prespondence, or base betraying our Councils and Designs to ance, but an unshaken Love to their Country above Corruption.

It has been observable in an Age design'd by Providence for ge and wonderful Events, that there have ever been produc'd Man rare and uncommon Genius and Capacities to manage the fun zing Turns and Revolutions of it; it was never more manifel so than in the beginning of this, in which, as there already he been, and yet likely to be such Movements and Changes as will no ly be parallel'd in future Ages. Never were there Men of men consummate Prudence, more elevated Vertue, or more rare Suffic ency to guide and manage them for the publick Good than the able Ministry; few Men have found the delicate Art of reconcile Business with their Diversions, and fewer that of uniting Policy State with the Interests of Religion; but where they do, there no Praise or Recompence above their Merit and Pretensions; to this is but the just Character of those excellent Men, who, as the were the principal Rampart of their Country's Honour and Seun ty against all the Designs of the Faction, were as constantly the ject of their Fear and Malice; and as they were known to belle of Principles conformable to those on which the Government founded, it was impossible they shou'd ever undertake or transfer any thing that was not for the publick Good and Interest of This is evident past dispute, from the Scituation that Things were constantly in, in all the Instances of the Discharge of the Duis of their respective Trusts and Offices. The Finances manag'd with an Integrity and Frugality, which as they have but very rarely be known before, have not been reproach'd fince with any Defail founded upon any thing but falle and groundless Calumnies of the Enemy, which never were or can be prov'd; our Councils always fecret, and manag'd with an admirable Sagacity and Prudences the best Advantage of the State; our Commerce and foreign In fick as secure and extensive as cou'd be expected from the mo consummate Prudence and Application in the Exigencies and Co cumstances of a War with a potent Neighbour, more considerable his Pyracies than his Fleets, who, as he had but little Share of it his felf, was more at leifure to disturb and intercept ours; and if in the respect there were considerable Damages receiv'd by the Nation, by were more to be attributed to the necessity of the Times and a cumstances of the War, than the Fault of the wisest of Minister nor is it just or practicable with any but High-Churchmen to " proach such as are in Station, for not foreseeing and preventing fortunes, which it is absolutely impossible for human Wisdom either to foresee or prevent; such Accidents as these are rather the Cal mities of Times than the Faults of Men: Private Persons, wi are affected by them, may be allow'd to murmer and complain, with reason the Publick cannot, when it is apparent, there has be nothing wanting on the Part of the Minister's Care and Application to have prevented them; no grumbling and complaining in of Streets, but from the fuborn'd and mercenary Malice of Malecon tents and the disaffected; no breaking of Regiments out of the turns, and leaving fo many gallant Officers and Soldiers, who is fo nobly hazarded their Lives in their Country's Service, withou grad Men of Surprisifest

r Arrears, which the Nation has long ago given to discharge, erably to starve in every City and Corner of the Kingdom; the blih'd Religion in perfect Safety and Tranquility under the Secuand Protection of the Laws, and undiffurb'd but by fuch as much Plenty and Indulgence make wanton and luxurious; who content to enjoy and enrich themselves with the Profits and Renes of the National Church, difturb the Peace and Tranquility of Nation with Chimera's of imaginary Dangers from the Lord ws who, and the Lord knows whence; the People cheerfully ing their Taxes, how heavy and burdensome soever, because they e fure they should be employ'd against a Power that threatned Loss of their ancient Liberties, in Chains of French Popery, Sla-, and Arbitrary Power, persuaded as they were of the Honesty, lities and Integrity of a Ministry, honour'd at Home and reve-'d Abroad, the Hope of their own Nation, the Support and fidence of their high Confederates, and Terror of their Enemies; Notion of many Millions destin'd to the honest Services of the ion, but hoarded up for a certain Occasion of paying Foreigners hall invade us, or corrupting fuch Villains as are to be corrupinto the Interests of an abjur'd Pretender: Peace and Plenty in Cities; no Fears, no Alarms, no Distrusts or Jealousies in our es, of forfaking or betraying them to the common Enemy; and nce only trembling at the immoveable Firmness and incorrupti-Honesty of the Men. In this happy Scituation of Affairs at home, mented with a Train of furprizing Successes, next to miraculous, er the Conduct of our renowned General and Troops abroad, Nation continu'd for eight Years; and I wish I could say for the our of her Majesty, the Good and Interest of her Kingdoms, and Happine's of all Europe, it had still continued in the same fortu-Hands and Administration; but every thing in this World is e and subject to change; yet that Eternal Providence, which has erto been ever visibly watchful for the Good of these happy Nas, is not afleep, though angry: We hope we have not forfeited, igh our Sins may for a while have suspended the Effects of it; we doubt not but there is a Vengeance in store, that we shall long fee feverely executed upon all the faithless and perfidious rayers of their Country's Honour, Religion and Liberties. But the evil Genius of England has at length prevail'd; the Spirit faction at present rides triumphant, and the ablest, wisest, and estest Set of Ministers and Commanders the Nation ever had, have a disgrac'd, insulted, dismiss'd, to make room for Men as it e of another World; of new Opinions, new Principles, new trines, and new Maxims of Policy. Mens Principles, as has already hinted, as they are always the Origin of their Actions, re they the most certain Indications of their Intentions and Des; and if it shall appear that these Gentlemen, now in the maement of Affairs, are the avow'd Professors and Supporters of e Doctrines and Opinions, I have prov'd not only to be inconsit with, but destructive of the very Nature and original Constion of our Government; nay, even impossible, that they ever fhould

Thould have been in those Stations, if they had not publickly elpoy and made Profession of them, I think it will not be difficult to me it appear that they can have only one View, that of introducing new One in the establishment of the Pretender; and that it natural and confequentially follows, that they are the principal Fountains Authors of all the Disorders, Confusion and Dishonour that have long turmoil'd and afflicted these Nations, and put an End to glorious Progress of the Confederacy, against a tyrannical Pom that is the profess'd Enemy to all the Interests in Europe but in own, in order to that fole End. It will for this purpose be only ceffary to place in a fair Light before my honest Countrymen, present different and disastrous state of Affairs, and compare it in the happy Posture and Condition they were in under the excellent Administration of the late able and faithful Ministry; and leave the to judge which of the two were most likely to provide for them mon Good, in the Peace, the Security, the Commerce, the Un ties and establish'd Religion of the Nation; they whose Principles agreeable and consonant to the Nature and Constitution of our and ent Government, founded upon Consent, Prerogative and Liber or they whose Principles and Opinions are diametrically opposite and destructive of it, as tending solely to the Establishment of absolute arbitrary Power and flavish Obedience, which can never establish'd, but upon the certain Ruin of them all. But before | m into the Particulars of this Disquisition, I think it necessary to the ate the clamour of a Question, which the wise Ones of the Fath from the beginning laid a mighty Stress upon, in relation to the Change of the Ministry: What, fay they, shall every private Man at his Liberty to change his Servants when and as often as heps fes, and shall not the Queen have the same Liberty and Power of Hers? I know no Man in his Senses (and when I say that, I ex to be believ'd that I do not in any manner mean those of High-Chur who disputes, or in the least questions that Power in her Majet but I must take leave freely to tell those empty Pretenders to Real and Politicks, that their Paralel bears no manner of proportion any Instance between the Power of the Prince and a private Sent man, or between the Nature and Character of their respective There is no doubt to be made, but that every private Pel may discharge and change the Servants he hires for his Wages they do not to his Satisfaction perform the Duties of the Services which he entertains them; and if they cheat or defraud him, punish him by the Law into the Bargain; but I must inform them fides, that in our happy Country, no Master is permitted to to his Servant like a Slave, or use him with Violence and Outrage he does his Duty; for in that Case, so well have our honest An ftors provided for the liberty of every Individual, that the Sero has his Action at Law against the Master; and upon full proof evidence of the Fact, shall recover Damages in reparation of the olence or Injury may have been done him; nor is a Servant to is in any manner accountable to the Laws or any body elfe for the prices, the Follies, the Madnelles or the Injuries, which the [pour

ho hires him may do, or be guilty of, either to his own Family or any other of his Neighbours, because he cannot reasonably be pposed to be his Adviser and Counsellor in such Cases, and theree stands equally exempt from the Guilt and Punishment; but as Facts are folely his Master's, fo are the Consequences for any each of the Peace that attend it, and in Law affect him alone. In like manner the Prince may, without all question, change his misters, when and as often as he pleases, and may remove and diface them if they are found perfidious and treacherous in the Exution of the Trusts with which he may have honour'd them; and ough he may thus remove or difgrace them by the Lois of his Faur and Imployments, yet he cannot, Heaven be prais'd, by Vertue any legal Prerogative of his own, punish the meanest of them, herwise than by a formal Process at Law: Nor are Ministers of ate, in any manner, under the same Circumstance with ordinary rvants; it must be consider'd that they are, for the most part of e first Rank for Birth and Quality, and always of suppos'd Merit; d that there are inherent to them, as such, certain Marks and Dinctions of Graces, Privileges and Immunities inseparable from eir Character, the principal of which is, at the Foundation of all erest, that they are free; which the other are so far from being hilft they continue Servants, that they cannot properly be faid to Members of the Common-wealth; for Servile and Free at the me time, are Light and Darkness at the same time; which I think not admitted in any School but that of High-Church, where Nonple and Absurdities are sovereignly indulg'd and cultivated. When inisters of State have faithfully discharg'd all the Duties of their rust, they are reasonably suppos'd to expect that good Usage from e Prince's Equity and Justice, that the others are intitl'd to from eir Masters by the Laws; but there is a further more remarkable, d much more essential Difference between them, which is this; private Servant is no more than the Servant of one Master, unis by his Contract he submits himself to the Will and Domination more; but Ministers of State, though they are eligible with us the Choice and Pleasure of the Prince, and in that Respect may be operly enough said to be his Servants, yet in another of more aportance, they are more properly to be esteem'd the Servants of c Common-wealth; nor are they oblig'd to cultivate the Interests that Prince as a Master, when it appears that he makes it distinct id leparate from that of his People; but they are eternally oblig d study and promote the publick Good of the Nation, which can ever be long, if at all ingrateful, whilst they continue in a faithful scharge of their Duty and Trust, though the Prince may and too ten is. 'Tis true that they must come into the most eminent Staons folely by his Favour, because the Laws have intrusted him with e Dispositions of them, as believing that he will never imploy any, It fuch as may be depended on for intending only the publick ood; but the Rewards and Recompences of their Service and Fasues, their Pension and Saleries are from the publick Treasure, hich is the Peoples, and of which the Prince is no more than the

Aconomist and Dispenser, for the Exigencies and necessary Serviced the State; and though he may deprive them of these Posts, and the Emoluments of them at his Pleasure, without giving his Reason yet he cannot in Equity do fo, whilft they give him all the Proof that can be defir'd of a faithful Discharge of that Trust in the M ministration of the publick Affairs of the Nation; for if they hi in any eminent Degree in that, as the Crime is not so immediately against the Prince as the Common wealth, they are answering with their Heads to the latter; and therefore the Prince, who outd Caprice or Pique shall remove from the management of Affairs such as have the Merit, the Fidelity and other Qualities necessary for the Execution of them, and do constantly and sedulously apply them to that one honest End, is not only conscious, but guilty of all the pub lick Calamities and Diforders which may be the Confequences fuch Removals, but runs too visibly to his own Destruction, in the loss of the Hearts and Affections of his People, which are both the Glory and best Security of a King of England; otherwise the Honor and Profits of Places of Trust would be too insecure and precarion to be worth any great Man's coveting, who is able to make a note Figure in the World upon the Fund of his own Fortune, whill the are suppos'd to be subject to the Caprices of the Prince, or the antifludy'd Designs of every Sycophant flattering Slave, who may have the Address to impose upon his Weakness and Credulity to their Di advantage. As the Merit of publick Ministers arises more in proportion to the Degree and Measure of the Good they procure to the Nation, which feldom or very rarely fails in acknowledgment, the their particular Service to the Prince, who may happen to be Vie lent, Unjust, Capricious or Wicked; so are the Rewards of the Toils and Labours juftly due to their Quality, their Fidelity and out Capacities, more lasting and secure on their Parts, than on his; in though we have had but too melancholy an Instance lately beforen how far a dangerous Corruption may be introduc'd into a Majority of Representatives, yet 'tis next to impossible; that the whole Boy or Generality of a Nation should be so far blinded to their own in terests and Preservation, as to be wanting in a just Regard to the Vertue and Merit of such great Men as serve them with the utmo Fidelity, Application and Integrity without Reproach; for as int very well regulated Government, and especially one of the Scium on of Great-Britain, the Honour, the Interest and general Happind confist principally in the Glory and Reputation of their Arms, and the Extent and Security of their Commerce, I challenge any High Church Man to produce an Instance in our own or foreign History of any who have ever contributed fo much to the Augmentation the one, or Security of the other, as the late noble and faithful M nistry and renown'd General have done for ours.

I have already infifted upon some of the poor and unfair Artification have been made use of, to lay them under the Disgrace they are a present, by the Address of the Faction; they are equally known and despised by all the sober, thinking, honest Part of the Nation; no shall infist on them surther, or but briefly and occasionally, as the

effity of my Defign may require; and shall proceed now to coner and examine the gross Consequences that result necessarily from ir Demission, and the Exaltation of their Successors; and how ch they have affected both our selves and our Contederates, in tender and delicate Points of Honour and Interest; my Defign, the main, being to prove that as it is the Bufiness and Intention the Faction to bring in their beloved Pretender from the very Nae and Necessity of their Principles, 'tis of the same Necessity ir Interest to preserve the Power of France from being ruin'd, aufe without that they know full well it is absolutely impossible them ever to hope to effect it; for a Ministry founded upon Prines, opposite to the Fundamental Ones of any Government, can er long subfift (though never so much in the Grace and Indulce of the Prince) but by Means of the same Nature and Comsion of their principal Defign; and theirs of overturning an estah'd Government, being to the last Degree wicked and unwarrane in the Foundation, will ever appear to be so in the Superdure, though erected with the most refin'd Address that humane idom, without Vertue, can be capable of; fince the only Means tein be made use of to that Purpole, is a Fund of Money to corrupt h Slaves as are to be corrupted; and a foreign Power to abet fustain them; the latter of which is Treason in the highest Dee, and the other the Perfection, if I may speak so, of Wickeds. Private Conspirators may flatter themselves with what plea-Dreams they think fit, but it must be a Power more than Human, t can change an antient established Form of Government, withthe universal Consent and Concurrence of the whole People; s is a Truth has been ever prov'd and justify'd by the Event in those, who in all Ages have attempted the Subversion of the Funnental Laws, Religion and Liberties of their Country; for tho y may for a while, by Artifice, or usurp'd Power, or some strange ality, feem to be triumphant in the Successes of a fortunate Terity, yet have in the End funk under the Weight and Enormity an ill-concerted and immeasurable Ambition, and been overwhelm'd melves in the Ruin their Treachery was preparing for others; there is a certain Providence that eternally watches over the Deyof Nations, which seldom fails to confound and infatuate the imtent Devices of faithless Traytors, who conspire their Ruin; and should defire to be inform'd from any High-Churchman in the ngdom, where we shall meet with an Instance to the contrary, m the beginning of the World to the Year 1710, where there re been any Sentiments of Vertue or Sense of Liberty in the Peo-The Question then only is, whether this be the Design of the ction at present or no? And if it shall be made appear to be that onnay, that it is impossible it should be any other, the Nation it is be hop'd will confider, before 'tis too late, what Punishments are lly due, and ought to be inflifted upon the Authors of so detestaa Treachery. those noble Ministers and Commanders, who were the principal Obstacles to their Design, as Scandal, Detraction, Calumny, Falls hood, ill-grounded Reproaches and malignant Invectives, them ver failing corps de reserve of Faction, in a brutal, impudent ma ner imploy'd to asperse and defame the fair and noble Character they could not destroy; by these means they indeavour'd to me der in the Dark what they wanted the Courage to attempt in the Face of the Sun; the Poisons of their Tongues and Pens were fort of white Powder, which did their Business effectually with Noise; a working by the Sap in Politick Mischiefs to overtund Out-works, when they had not Bravery enough to attack the la dy of the Place. The fly and malicious Infinuations of the Management of the Affairs of State at home and abroad, the Da ger of the Church, Republican and Antimonarchical Principle and especially those damnable Ones of Forty One, were the confin but poor Varnish of the Faction, with which they guilded the Po fon of their Treachery, to make it go down the more easily will the simple and credulous, and are always made use of to prepare and make the necessary Dispositions for any treasonable Chap and Alteration in a State; the general Corruption of Manners, po vate Interest, and the Prospect of Advantage, rendring People to receive their Impressions. But that which aggravates the Gu is, when the Conspirators have the successful Wickedness to a tempt, under the Appearance of his and the publick Good, to inge the Prince in the Design against his own Interest and Honour; in there are three things absolutely necessary to carry on a plantil Treason, that is, such a one as pretending the general Good, point only at the Establishment of the Traitors; those are the Countenant and Favour of the Prince, the Seduction of a confiderable number of the People, and a formidable foreign Power to back and in port them. In this it must be confess'd the Faction have show a Master piece of Address, and so far for our Sins succeeded to M miration; the two former are to be preserv'd by the same man they were first drawn in, that is, by continual Cajolery and Da fion; the latter, which is ever fure to act more for his own lat rest than theirs, cannot long be conserv'd otherwise than by con plementing it with fomething that is ever to the Disadvantage, a for the most part terminates in the general Ruin and Slavery of the Country.

By what Artifices they have been able to impose on the gor Sense and Judgment of the Queen, I don't pretend to inquir but as it was absolutety necessary to the Faction, for the Securify and Establishment of their ill-got Power, to have a Parliament much as possible of their own Maxims and Principles, in this as the other for the unhappiness of the Nation they too well succeed to their wish; but this shall be left a wonder to all the thinking Part of Mankind, that in a Nation which has no mean Reportation for the plain and simple Genius and Honesty of their marks, for their distinguish'd Liberty, and for their good Sense, the shou'd be found by any means whatsoever amongst them a go jority of fuch as shou'd run into all the violent Measures of a tion, which demonstratively tend to the Ruin and Subversion of if the sensible Part of the World were not enough convinc'd. t in all Nations there are great Numbers with whom the Conerations of private Interest and Ambition are of infinite more eight than Liberty, Honour, Religion, and the publick Good. us then for the great Glory of the Nation they were fecur'd of Majority of the late House of Commons, ready booted and spurr'd Popery, Slavery and Arbitrary Power; but there happens uckily to be a certain restive and untractable Spirit in another rt of the Legislature, which they call a House of Lords, in which re are two or three aukward rugged Vertues of the antient owth of the Country, which tho' but an out of fashion antiated fort of Trumpery, yet our foolish Ancestors were very fond which some Men have been pleas'd to nickname old English lour, Honour and Love of their Country, and who can never prevail'd upon to truckle, or fawn, or flatter, or fall in with upstart Measures and Maxims of modern Policy. What then s to be done in that case, for their laudable Project wou'd but t without them? Why the Remedy was ready and at Hand; the viathan of the Faction being an extraordinary well accomplish'd viathan, was ever fertile of Expedients; it was but over-ballang them, for Vertue must fink under Numbers, by the corruptiof the North British, and a Creation of a new Set of Occasio-Lords of our own, and presto the Work is done. In respect the former, it is something surprizing, that in a wife and vaat Nation, jealous to Extravagance of their Liberties, there shou'd found amongst those of the first Rank and Quality of antient od and Distinction, who ought to be the Examples of Honour Grandeur of Spirit to their Countrymen, such who can so forget the Merit and Glory of their generous Ancestors, as to rifice both theirs and their own Stock of Honour to the dishonoure and precarious Confiderations of private Interest. As to our in upflart Peers of a Night, the Lords of the Occasion, I have ly to remind them, that there was a time in this Nation, but it a long while ago, when Dignities and Honours and Nobility, as arks of high Distinction, were the glorious Rewards of Vertue d Courage alone, and confer'd only on such as most bravely harded and expos'd their Lives and Fortunes for the Defence of ir Country's Honour and Liberties; and he who led the others thest in the pursuit of Glory, was esteem'd the most honourable; on such, as by their many taithful eminent Services to the Comon wealth, might otherways deserve them; but it is reserved to impleat the Infamy of our unhappy Age, to confer those precis Marks of Honour and Nobility on Men, who can prevail with emselves to contribute to its Ruin, by basely betraying it into the lains the Faction is preparing for it; this is not to become hoburable, but to purchase Titles at the Expence of Honour. What a our Country expect of great, or generous, or noble from those reams, whose Fountain is thus polluted from whence they flow?

If of either Sort there are any amongst them, who not with flash ing their Beginnings and Ingagements to those who made then shall act upon Principles of true Honour and Interest of their n spective Countries, they are out of the reach of this Reflection it concerns them not; but if they don't, and only serve the line rests of their Faction, let each Man take his share of the Infam, and intail it on his Family as it is heartily intended. The time ma possibly come, and we hope too is not far off, when it may be a quir'd, whether this Advice of the Counfellor does not tend de really to aretch what they call the Prerogative of the Princein to what we call Arbitrary Power: I have been told, that in the Memory of our Fathers it has been thought fo; for the our King are faid to be the Fountain of Honour, 'tis to be understood, win they act folely upon the Principles of it, and even then they m rather consider'd as the Dispensers than the Proprietors of it; and every vertuous, valiant Man, who nobly ferves his Country, has Claim to it from both as the Reward of his Service; nor ought ever to be bestow'de but when the eminent Merit of the Subject or Dignity of the Nation require it. No body, I believe, question but that the Prince may confer Titles of Honour when he please and we have heard of a merry one who made his Horse a Sense tor; but it is to be understood that he shall always have more in gard to Vertue and Merit than Caprice; for as Honours are or oug to be folely the Rewards of the former when eminently exerted for the Service of the Nation, the Prince, who confers them of fuch as have neither, only to gratify a worthless, and perhaps false and traiterous Sycophant or Favourite only to gain a cerain Point, makes a large Step towards betraying both his own Character and Interest; he may indeed make Creatures, but he will maken noble Men; and so I leave our right noble Lords of the thrice! lustrious Order of the Mushroom to make what Reflections the thall think fit.

Let us then proceed to examine, whether all the Steps of the ction, from the beginning of this difastrous Change, have not tent ed directly to cultivate the Amity of France, and prevent the Rul of a Power from whence alone they cou'd reasonably expect the Establishment of their own, as the only human Means to introduce their Pretender. This cannot more evidently be mode appear, the by reflecting upon the miserable low Condition France was reduced to, by the rugged inflexible Vertue of the late Ministry and god Fortune of our renown'd General at the time of the Treaty of Go truydenberg. It was then high time indeed for our High Chard Projectors to look about them, and prevent the Depression of the dear Friend and Ally, by obstructing with all their Address and to liticks the conclusion of such a Feace as wou'd at once infalled blaffed all their Hopes and Defigns at home, We are yet to least at least we were till lately, whether the first Overtures of this con certed Treason were made by the High Church Faction to Frank or by France to them; but the Event has pretty clearly discover fince, that the honour of it is intirely our own; and what a

ing to relate to confirm this, besides the present Evidence of the ing, I can my felf prove, if I were judicially call'd to it, by irreoachable Testimony. Amongst many Officers who were Prisors in Champaign after the Battle of Almanza, there was a Genmin, the Interest of whose Family oblig'd him with all Dilince to return to England; he apply'd for a Pass-port, but the Deshe met with being such as were extreamly prejudicial to his Afrs, he became very uneasy, and frequently complain'd of what thought ill Usage, He happen'd at this juncture to meet there field Officer of the Irish, then in the Service of King James, who s of his former acquaintance, who feeing him very melancholy, 'd him the occasion: He very frankly told him his Case and Cirnitances; to which the Irish Officer reply'd, My Friend, be not pain, or trouble your felf about your hasty going for England, you e not so much Business there as you imagine; we have many re Friends there than you think of, and the King my Master has tain Advice from them, who are incessantly labouring his Estahment, that his Affairs there are in a very good Train; and that ore fix Months pals away, there shall be a certain Doctor shall ach such a Sermon, as will set all the People in the Nation toger by the Ears; of which the French King very well knows how make his Advantage. It was the Execution of this laudable Deh which was near, that gave Marshal Villars the Hardiness to dere, before the opening of the ensuing Campaign, to the Officers Magistrates of Dunkirk, that they ought not longer to despair; tho' they had hitherto been unsuccessful, yet that the Affairs of Master had chang'd their Face, and that there was such Designs m'd, and near their Execution in England, as wou'd not only prize and aftonish all the World, but soon put France in a Conon to be no longer apprehensive of any thing from all the rest the most formidable Powers in Europe in Confederacy against in which no honest Man questions, but that amongst other ings was to be understood the execrable Design of assassinating pious and gracious Queen, a commendable and most Christian tempt, equally agreeable to French Politicks and High-Church Diity! Whether then it took its Birth at St. Germains, or was born e and fent thither to be nurs'd, imports not much; the fatal Conuences being equally pernicious to us, from whence soever it drew Original. But to return to Gertruydenberg.

The insupportable Trissing and Prevarications of the French Minis, supported by their Intelligence from hence, were no longer to born with, and our noble General put an End to their impudent icanery, by the Edge of a Sword he never drew but to conquer, a glorious Campaign, as much to his own Honour and that of the ole Consederacy, as to the terror and enseebling the French, and ortification of the Faction. It is very well worth remarking, that consequence of these new Successes, that Monarch, ever insolent Prosperity, was reduc'd to so low and despicable a Condition of tune, as humbly to beg a Peace at the Hands of a conquering Concracy he had been accustomed to bully and insult when he was

Superiour; he was then beaten by our victorious General and Trom into the humble Stile of a Suppliant: The honest Man was all of fudden touch'd in Conscience, and grown at length weary of Effusion of Christian Blood, just when he had but little more let shed, after having sacrificed that of so many Millions of his win ched Subjects and others, to the Devils of Pride and Ambition, in the long Plague of an impious and tyrannical Reign. But now! of a fudden, in the name of High Church! the strain is alter'd, immortal Man has by a Miracle recover'd his broken Forces, and his infolent Propositions of t'other day, I mean, the Preliminary of the present infamous Peace, he assumes again the Tene of Mafter, who has a Right and Power to command; yet our mi General the Campaign following, continu'd taking his strongell in tiers, and beating his Gascon Troops wherever they had the lim dence to fland a Beating. This in the Opinion of most Meninte Senles was no very rational way of bettering his Condition, or secovering of his broken Spirits and Forces; from whence the of a fudden this unaccountable Fit of Bullying again in fuch a Sin ation? Not from any new Vigour or Courage in his inteebled in dispirited Troops; for we know very well, that in the last Campa our renowned General made, he was not able for want of Money recruit them; not from the Will and Affections of his Subjects, i we know as well that they detest and curse the merciless Auth of all the Miseries of Oppression they groan and languish under; from any new Reinforcements of Auxiliaries, or Augmentation of exhausted Treasure, for a Tyrant is naturally detested and defel by all just, great and powerful Princes his Neighbours, and a fear'd by the lesser. Nothing of all this, yet this Mystery of luing is easily unfolded; his good and dear, Protestant they call themselve Friends in England were equally the Foundation of his Hopes and rogance; the fatal Divisions which his High-Church Faction of own Principles and Maxims of Policy, and very near resemblan and propinquity of Religion, had unhappily fomented amongst had given him fomething more than Hopes, even politive affurm of separating so considerable a Branch of the Confederacy as ou and the Dissolution of the rest.

Whether the Letter that goes under the Name of Monsieur in tecum, on the occasion of a Conference with the French Plenipote tiaries at Gertruydenberg, or that suppos'd to be found after the king of Doway, be genuine Pieces or no, imports not much to he Question in hand; but the former has given so particular an account of the Expectations of the French from our satal Divisions in England and the latter so exact a plan and detail of the Means which then their one grand Design of introducing and settling their below Pretender on the Throne, that they may really be supposed to have been of the Privy Council which drew the first lines of the Design especially happening so long before the Execution; and if we relate them the Honour of veritable Predictions, the Authors cannot with out Injustice be deny'd that of an exquisite Knowledge of the second

rigues and Affairs of that Mystery; as also of an admirable Penetion and Judgment to foresee all the Particulars of so damnable a intrivance fo long before, and which the Event has reified in ery Article fince; nor do I think that there can be any more cern or infallible Instance of the Truth and Genuiness of any Piece this kind, than the Correspondence of the matter of Fact that follow h, call it what you please, Prediction or Foresight. I am not y fond of Transcribing; but there is something in the Letter of former so very a propos to confirm what I have advanced in reion to the Deligns of our French Enemies abroad, and our factiones at home, that I shall do my self the Honour, and the Pubthe Service to transcribe the greatest part of it in his own Words m the Original of so extraordinary a Person, who had the Honour be entrusted with such a Share in the management of that faous Negotiation. As it evidently appears through the whole course it, that the principal Design of the French Ministers was by findout daily new Delays to fpin out the time, which at that Juncture y judg'd advantageous to their Master's Interests, according to constant Maxim of their famous Richelieu, Chi guadagna tempo, dagna mollo; he told them that it was very furprizing, and out the Rules of all Policy, for their Master to refuse to conclude a ace when he was no longer in a Condition to maintain the War: eurg'd the low Condition of France, the Union of the Allies, the ility of England and the rest of the Confederates, to carry it furr on with Vigour; The Genius of our Ministry at that time, and mper of the Parliament of England, irreconcileable Enemy to the wer and Interest of France, as so many unanswerable Reasons as ght to oblige them to haften the conclusion of the Peace; and furer urg'd, that notwithstanding the removal of the Earl of Sunderd, the Queen had publickly declar'd and promis'd she would ke no further Alteration in the Ministry.

To all which they answer'd, That if all he had said were true, the calures that France was taking would feem very unaccountable, but at they could not believe him so ignorant of what was doing in gland, as not to think that France had good reason to change her le, and expect a Peace upon far better Terms than cou'd be hop'd , or ever thought of last Year; and that they did not doubt but at he wou'd be of the same Opinion when he saw the English Geral dilgrac'd, or so mortified, that he could no longer serve; the As they observ'd mistry discarded, and the Parliament dissolv'd. at he was very much startl'd at these Notions, and entertain'd them utter Impossibilities, they told him in short, that these Measures ere already concerted betwixt France and her Friends in England; d as he was still more surprized, and beg'd a further Explanation, ey with the usual Freedom and Confidence they had always treated m, further told him, that it was true indeed Queen Anne had dear'd she wou'd would make no further Change in her Ministry; e was sensible how acceptable her present Ministers were to all her cople, but bid him observe the Artifice of her new Advisers; this eclaration of hers was confin'd to Ministry, and therefore the Letter of her Promise was not broke, if she did not turn out any of her combinet Council, or that properly might be call'd a Minister of State. There was a Latitude lest to remove all the chief Officers that do not come strictly under that denomination, which would soon be done by picking out of the Offices of the chief Consequence all that as known to be in the true Interest of their Country, and to be the best Friends and most saithful to the chief Ministers, without any regard to their having well or ill serv'd; and when these are all remov'd and others of a quite different Interest and Principles put in their room, in whom the Ministers cannot at all conside, the Minister may if they please still continue in their Posts, Queen Anne has no promis'd to turn them out.

They defired him further to observe, that there was no Ingagement not to dissolve the Parliament, which was now labour'd Night and Day, and very great Hopes given of being accomplish'd, or at least an Instances should be able to obtain a Declaration to the contrary: And if the States General, forseeing of what satal consequence a Dissolution of the Parliament must be to the whole Alliance, should represent their Apprehensions upon this Head, though in a most submission Manner, they will be told they needle with Things they have no thing to do with; and there are those who have now Access to Questanne, who will satisfie her 'tis a Treatment she ought to resent

Upon this Foot they press'd it very home to him, that whether the Parliament be dissolv'd or not, the King of France must find him Account in it either way: If it be dissolv'd, he will immediately have the Satisfaction to see all those great Men oblig'd to quit their Employments, who have been the chief Instruments of reducing his Power; and if they will quit, who can help it? There is no bread of Fromsse in that Case neither: He knows very well that those who must succeed them gave all the Obstructions they possibly cou'd to the publick Affairs through the whole Course of King Williams Reign; that they were against entering into this War; that they were ready to acknowledge the Duke of Anjou for King of Spain, and have in no Instance of their Lives given him Reason to think they repent of their good Wishes to him.

If this Parliament be dissolved, it must be with a Prospect of hiving a new Parliament of quite another Complexion; and what can France wish for more? And for this the People of England are propared by Dr. Sacheverell; and here they could not forbear expressing their Satisfaction at the general Infatuation of the common People that so inconsiderable a Man cou'd do their Cause so much Service; and that a Criminal, convicted of the highest Crimes and Misdemenors, shou'd be suffer'd in a Country that pretends any Government to ride in Triumph through the Kingdom, to draw in the deluded

People to consent to their own Destruction.

But then admitting that the Eyes of the People should be opend before a new Election, and that a Parliament should be chosen contrary to their Expectations, the French Ministers were for from thinking that France would not have been a sufficient Gainer by the Dissolution of the Parliament; for the common Method of summon g and choosing a Parliament, and their necessary Rules and Forms on their first Meeting before they can come to do any Business, will ke up so much time, that they did not at all question but the public Credit would have suffer'd so much before the Sense of a Parliaent could be known, that the Mischiefs to England would be irre-

The very thought of destroying the publick Credit so transported em, that they enter'd immediately upon the Advantages that France of furely reap, even though the Parliament should not at least be solved, and so did but slightly mention the Hopes they had of the eat Consusion that must necessarily attend a new Election, when a People are so heated, and the opposite Parties so fir'd and enrag'd be against another. But here they had their Fears, and were appeared that the Hereditary Right being so publickly avow'd and little discourag'd, some of their well meaning Friends might deare too soon, before the principal Actors in England had brought atters to bear, or the King of France was in a Condition to back the retender with a sufficient Force to affert his Hereditary Right.

But what they chiefly insisted upon, and the greatest Satisfaction, as the Scheme that was laid for destroying the publick Credit of gland; which would make it utterly impossible for the Allies to rry on the War any longer. They boasted of certain Assurances at were given to France, either to dissolve the Parliament, or orr it so that all People should expect a Dissolution, which they flatr themselves will have the same effect. The very Report they are afident well manag'd, and improv'd by their Friends to the best dvantage, will so far affect the publick Credit, that they expect ery day to hear that the Stocks and Funds are very confiderably I'n, and that Bank Stock will foon be above twenty per Cent. worse an at the beginning of the Year, which may probably end in a Run on the Bank, but will certainly oblige the Bank to make such Prolions against all Events, that they will be no longer able to supply e Necessities of the Government; and if the faithful Endeavours their Friends do not fail, they are not without Hopes to fee the my before the End of this Campaign want their Subfistence.

They instanc'd in a great many more Particulars, and from the hole concluded, that if Marshal Villars could spin out the Campaign ithout hizarding a Battle, and oblige the Allies to spend this Sumer in three or four Sieges, the Advantages that France would reap om the Measures concerted in England, would overballance the Loss three or four of their most considerable Towns.

They fell after this into the Cant of their Clergy, that God who spoles the Hearts of Kings, is doubtless preparing some secret Redies, or some unforeseen Events, and that by dividing the Natiswho will have War, he will declare for their Master's Arms, and

e just Cause he defends.

By all therefore, Sir, that I can gather from their Discourse, the ench Ministers seem to have new Instructions, and will talk to you quite another Language; that France is not reduc'd so low, as to clare what Security his most Christian Majesty will give for the

le

Evacuation of Spain and the Spanish Indies, before they had held the utmost Demand of the Allies.

There dropt another thing from them, that still more surprisided that there wou'd come Instructions from England to their Plenipota tiaries, to make use of any Expedient rather than suffer the Freed Ministers to leave Gertruydenberg; and depending upon this they will tell you, that if the Allies desire they should go home without entering upon any further Negotiations, they were ready to be gon, as soon as a Day should be prescrib'd them.

In the mean while they are drawing up a Manifesto, wherein the will lay the whole Blame of breaking the Peace upon the English Plenipotentiaries, and the Deputies of the States; and they talk with confidence, that their Friends in England are ready to back and support all that they shall think fit to publish; and to persuade the Peace shall say, than depend upon the Honour, Integrity and great Abilities of their own Ministers.

I have now, Sir, very fully explain'd to you the chief Dependent of France at this critical Juneture, and must submit it to your M cretion, to make the best use you can of it for the Good of your om Country, without exposing the Author of your Intelligence to the Resentments of the French Ministers, which you know will rente me for ever incapable of doing the like Service for the future.

I shall not pretend to give my Advice: The States General and wise People, and very watchful of their Interest; but if they sail see the Expectations of France answer'd in most Particulars, and that Measures taken in England upon which France builds all her Hops, who can wonder if the States General should think it high times look after themselves.

But furely France must be mistaken; there cannot be a Set Men in England, who if they had the Power, wou'd run the Rul of facrificing their Country to their own Ambition; the People of England are in daily expectation by a fafe and honourable Peacet reap the Fruits of so much Blood spilt, and the many Millions the have been expended; and if they shall see all at once their best A lies ill treated and disgusted, the Parliament dissolv'd, a happy and fucceisful Ministry disgrac'd, to make room for what no body is 16 willing to name, the publick Credit from a most flourishing Condition reduc'd to the lowest ebb, the Properties of many thousand Perfens concern'd in the publick Funds, who have ventur'd the All for the Support of the Government, abated at least one find part of their present Value; the moral Certainty of an advantage ous, lasting and honourable Peace quite banish'd, and the Nation labouring under the Burthen of a War, which they are no long able to support; the Spirit of the English Nation will awake, and pursue with Vengeance the Authors of such desperate and destre ctive Councils.

I have been the more willing to revive this excellent Piece, and communicate it again to the Publick, because such single Sheets of what Worth and Importance soever are apt to be lost or forgotten both to do Justice to the Merit of the judicious Author, and because the undeniable Evidence it gives to the Truth I have advanced; nd of which it so much concerns every honest English Man to be refectly inform'd, that his Eyes may be unleal'd to discover the le Arts of the Faction, who under the Cover and Appearance of e publick Good, labour hard to destroy it, folely for the advantage their private Interest and Ambition; and as it demonstrates with Certainty past contradiction the Scheme of the Designs both of em and the French to bring in the Pretender. The other Piece, mean the Doway Letter, as particularly and evidently discovers the eans that had been concerted between them to accomplish it. uthor to his Friend in England recommends above all things, first to perse and blacken the Memory of King William as the sole Author all their Misfortunes; that nothing but his Ambition and the fire of a Crown induc'd him to invade England; that Religion d Liberty were only false Pretexts to cover his ambitious Degas; that the only thing he had in view was to augment the Powof the Dutch our mortal Enemies, and to raile them on the Rus of our Country; to dress the Revolution it self in the most ightful and infamous Colours of Sedition and Rebellion, to renrit odious to the People; to represent all those who were instruental in it, especially the great Men and the Ministers, as Repubcans, Enemies to regal Authority and Monarchy, Traitors to their ountry, and Men of no Religion, who only profess to be of the burch of England for the fake of their Interest, but are secretly inspiring her Ruin; to indeavour by all means to separate the onconformists from the Interests of the Low-Churchmen, because these latter have procur'd them a Toleration, and indeavour to and weaken those Laws which still restrain the Sectaries, the rmer maintain and support the Low-Church by way of requital; as one cannot make them People too odious whom we refolve destoy, to draw the Diffenters in fuch Colours as are most liketo produce that Effect; and in this you will find the Clergy natully dispos'd to fecond you; to represent them as furious Schilmaiks who have rent the Bowels of the Church, as senseless and riiculous Fanaticks, who perfift in their Error out of meer obstinacy, hat it is nothing but worldly Interest and unsupportable Presumpon that keeps them from conforming to the Church; that they are ir from being fatisfy'd with the Advantages they injoy, that they spire to greater and to be Masters of all; that they do not content hemselves to plot against the Church and contrive her Ruin, but heir Design is also laid against the Monarchy to which they have ways been Enemies; and that they wait only for a favourable Oportunity to overturn the Government, and to set up a Rebublick; pon which Occasion it must never be forgotten what they did in he Reign of King Charles the First, and as ready to act the same Part again; and as their Power is founded upon the mischievous Act f Toleration, to be fure to clog that with fo many Restrictions and imitations as you may do with it what you please, to represent only as a Provisional Act, and not as a Fundamental Law of the tate; that it was in a manner extorted by the Confusion of the Times, and the Necessity of Affairs; that it is rather positive that negative, that is, that it does not establish Nonconformity, but we ly exempts Diffenters from the Fines and Penalties the Laws decreed against them; that it is meerly an Act of Indulgence Respite, which only suspends the Laws and stops the Course them; that it relates only to Consciences that are truly tender as scrupulous, that is, such Persons who after having examin'd but Religions without Bigotry, Passion and Prejudice, are convinct that they cannot conform to the Church of England without would ing their Consciences, that is, without committing a mortal at anneardonable Crime. Now if once you can get the Act explain in this manner, you may quickly do with those People what you please; first you will bring them into an odious and ridiculous Con tradiction, fince they have hitherto always confess'd that the Church of England teaches all the Articles necessary to Salvation, and the they have nothing to object against her but some matters of Dillo pline, and some few Ceremonies of small Importance; but the they must be oblig'd to maintain, that she entertains Fundament Errors and Doctrines which cannot be imbrac'd without month Sin; fo that they must either miserably contradict themselves of speak a new Language, nothing being so capable of rendring that more odious than fuch a Confession, if they dare be so bold as to make it, or more proper to hasten their Destruction, for no both will indure People who alledge that the Church of England min tains damnable Doctrines.

By this means you will become Judges of the Consciences of Diffenters; you will then have a Power to determine whether those who claim the Protection of that Act have the Qualities it require for when a Law grants a Favour to certain Persons on Condition that they be so and so qualify'd, 'tis certain this Favour is not confer'd on every one that claims it; this is to be done judicially by Magistrates appointed for the Execution of the Laws, and by the means you may exclude who you please, and at the same time mail the Act of no effect; and if the secular Judges find any difficulty in it, you need only erect an Ecclesiastical Tribunal, which by a bliging People to give the Reasons of their Scruples, and by consequence of their Faith, will speedily see whether their Conscient ces are truly tender, and whether their Scruples be really and & fectually such, as they cannot change their Opinion without incutring eternal Damnation: But above all Things, if you wou'd effects ally destroy these Low-Churchmen, you must not fail to make us of one means which is worth all the rest, and that is, to bring the Clergy into your Interests, and get them intirely devoted to you you are not ignorant what Power they have over the Minds of the People who are naturally superstitious, and you know as well a I that, the Gown excepted, the Clergy are altogether like other Men, nay it wou'd feem that they are more addicted to Revent Ambition and Avarice than Laymen. You know, Sir, it was they who by their pretended Maxims of Non-refistance and absolute Submission, and by their fair Protestations of Loyalty and inviolable than

But in order to gain the Clergy compleatly, and bring them abucly into our Interests, you must give them good Assurances that y shall be restor'd to all their former Prerogatives; they have a g time groan'd under the Oppression of the secular Power, for ugh they be allow'd to meet in Convocation, 'tis nothing but for take of Form, for they will not allow them the Liberty they alys had to adjourn themselves during their Session, nor to take Consideration the Relaxation of Discipline, and the erroneous Oions taught every Day by Members of their own Body; the Bips have no Power over the Clergy of their Diocess, and how vius loever they be, they can neither punish not deprive em, in orto try them in their own Courts; and the Cause is at last brought way of Appeal before the secular Tribunal, which for the most t makes void what is done in the Ecclesiastical Courts; its the he as to Excommunications which the Clergy pronounce against Laity, they are always absolv'd by the secular Judges. you think, Sir, there must be other Motives to bring them inting to our Devotion, I will propose one which is worth all that can be thought of, and that is to put them in hopes of a Restitution of the Church Lands which they wish for with all their Hearts, be have no Ground to look for it as long as things continue as they are The late King James began this Affair, but in my Opinion he wa ill advis'd; he fet about it too foon, and perhaps this contribute more than any thing else to his being abandon'd by the Nobility, who possess most of those Lands; the time is not yet come, but they need not doubt it when our Prince comes to the Throne, and this is what ought to oblige the Clergy to haften his Restoration by all possible Means. To this end, Sir, you and our other Friend ought to exhort them to preach and write continually in favour Passive Obedience and Non-Resistance; were the People once we persuaded of this Principle and its Consequences, it would not he difficult to bring them to what you please; in short, this Docting tends directly to the Restoration; for if Kings hold of God alone, they are not to give Account of their Conduct to any other, if the Right to the Crown be founded on Proximity of Blood, so as the fucceed to Dominion, as Children do to their Father's Effates, and in the last Place Subjects are never to resist them on any preten whatfodyer, it clearly and unanswerably follows from thence the James the Third is the only Prince fince the Death of the late King who can or ought succeed to the Crown of Great. Britain, and the all that has been done to the contrary, is absolutely Null and Voll This being once laid down, there's no Man fo weak as not to in what he ought to think of the Revolution, which violated all the Maxims just now mention'd; and by this we may judge by what It tle and Authority Queen Anne does possess the Crown; but we mil not touch upon that String, till the Peoples Minds are better diford for it; that Subject is too nice, considering the present Posture Affairs; and we have nothing to do but to maintain boldly that the right of Queen Anne is the same with all other Kings, that it is to reditary and founded upon Blood; for that Language, far from to ing us hurt, will establish our Principle, fix it in the Minds of the Péople, and infensibly prepare the English to receive their Prince who is without Contradiction the nearest and true Heir, and who lone, fince the Death of his Father, has a Right to claim the Crom by vertue of those Maxims. If you object that this is too gross impose upon the Publick, fince the Act of the Prince of Orange to regulates the Succession of the Crown is founded only upon the pi tended Rights of the People, to whom it expressly ascribes a Power to choose for King who they please, and to despoil them of the Roy alty when they think good, without the least regard to the Proxim ty of Blood or Birth ; you must allow me, Sir, to tell you at the land time, that you dont well know the Power that the Clergy have of the People, who never examine things, but are eafily perfuaded what they please, and eagerly receive all that is told them with h thority and Confidence; their Genius naturally leads them tothe and they imbrace every thing with Fury when their Passions tire

by'd, and at the same time animated with Sentiments of Hatred, ar, Interest and Revenge, there's no Contradiction then so palpa, nor Absurdity so gross which they don't receive with all their earts, and will maintain, at the Peril of a thousand Lives, if they d them.

After this you may judge what they are capable of doing, when ng posses'd with our Doctrine, they shall see a Prince, who ae has those Qualities which are own'd to be absolutely indispenle for lawfully possessing the Crown. You see, Sir, that accordas you are able to persuade the People of the Truth of these xims, and prepare their Minds as I have mention'd, the Difficulwill be remov'd, and we shall gain as much Ground as the Dissens and Low-Churchmen loofe. As to the Objection of the Impractilenels of this Scheme, fince our greatest Enemies are equally in session of the Ministry and Parliament, which are headed by able, ming, vigilant and active Men, who profess a great Disinterested. s and a particular Affection for the good of their Country, than hich there is nothing more capable to win upon the Minds of Men, to gain the People, I'll only answer and tell you in general, that may underhand represent our Enemies to Queen Anne, in the of difadvantageous manner that can be, and that as Women are urally more tender, and of a nicer Temper than Men, you may resent the least Opposition they make to her as a want of Respect, pmission and Deference, and thus you may charge the whole Parwith the disagreeable Steps that any particuar Persons are guilty you may at the same time publish to the World, that they treat Princels without any Respect, oppose her most reasonable Desires, keep her in a fort of Slavery and Servitude. - Since what cerns Religion is always the most tender and delicate Point, you It appear intirely devoted to the Protestant Succession; at the same e it may be privately infinuated that the King will turn Protestant, if that be the only Obstacle in the Way, however zealous his May is for the Catholick Religion, I make no doubt, but with the fent of his Holiness, he will outwardly, for a time, profess hima Protestant; I say for a time, because I dont despair, that after Majesty has reign'd peaceably for some Years, he may have the pinels to bring back the English to the bosom of the Church of me. You must not forget to maintain with our Friends, the Clerthat the Church of England is in imminent Danger, and on the ak of Ruin, not only from the Nonconformists, but from the w-Churchmen and Latitudinarians; you must add that the latter the more dangerous, that being got into the Church, and proing a great Zeal for the Protestant Religion, they easily infinuate mielves, and have a great Influence among the common People; above all you must insist upon this, that the Low-Churchmen do they can to keep the Clergy in Servitude, and to bring them lowthan they are at present; it wou'd be proper also to insinuate that House of Hanover being bred up in the Principles, very near se of the Presbyterians, or rather which at bottom are the same, yvery probably make Alterations in the Church of England, either by establishing Presbytery, or indeavouring a Comprehensia which will be no less pernicious; you must not sail to improve thought : In short, as it is lawful in so just a Cause to make use of Advantages, it will be proper to infift upon the Danger of the Church from the Books of Controversy which the Nonconformists with against the Church of England; this must be represented as an unber of piece of Insolence and Boldness, which is not only contrary the Toleration wherein no fuch thing is specify'd, but directly ton to the R in of the Church, by perverting her Members, and filing her with Trouble and Confusion. You may also charge the who Body of the Nonconformists and Latitudinarians with certain Piers that fome Atheists, Deists, and Socinians have publish'd in England fince the Revolution; you must aggravate the Number of them, and declare boldly that unless the Authors and Favourers of those about nable Libels are destroy'd, nothing less is to be expected but the Judgments of God upon the whole Nation, and that the Church should be intirely ruin'd. These are the Methods, Sir, which we think will be most effectual to restore his Majesty of Great-Britan for my own part, I look upon them as infallible, if they be made use of with the Direction and Prudence which are necessary um all fuch Occasions; you must not discover your self too much at the nor push on things with too much Ardour and Precipitation, by Fellows to found the Fords, to view the Enemy, and skirmish with them; such People as these being well sustain'd and supported indus time, do sometimes draw the Enemy into Defiles, from when they cannot get without being beat --- . When once you ca possess the People with these Maxims, the Restoration of our Print is not far off, for those Low-Churchmen are almost the only and dis Obstacle in our Way at present.

This is the Substance of the Advice of this Author in his on Words. Many other Particulars of leffer Importance I have put posely omitted to avoid being too tedious; nor has it been sown in barren Soil, the venomous Weed has sprung up but too fast top fon and infect too great a part of the Nation; and I appeal to Sense of every ingenuous and difinterested Reader, whether it is not been follow'd and cultivated by thole of High-Church, heat ry where calls his Friends, with all the Malice that Hell, or With Man abandon'd of all fense of Reason and Religion cou'd deell I defire only every such Person to look back and reflect, whether our late glorious King William, during the whole Course of Reign, and fince his lamented Death, has not been revil'd, infult and reproach'd by them with an unexampl'd Baseness, that nothing can equal but their Ingratitude? Whether the Revolution, within Principles upon which it is founded, have not been attended with same Fate, and continually branded by them with the odious infamous Characters of Sedition and Rebellion? Whether there had not been all the unfair and wicked Artifices imaginable implored foment Jealousies and Divisions amongst us, and to separate Diffenters from the Low-Churchmen, only to weaken, and there n Goo.

ke them the more easy Prey to their mutual High-Church inveate Enemies? Have they not and do not still all their Libels, Pame ets and Pulpits ring with the most bitter Invectives and Reaches against both, in breach of all the Rules of Charity and nmon Humanity? Has not the Danger of the Church been bel-'d by them in all the Cities and Corners of the Kingdom, at me when she was never better secur'd and establish'd than unthe late excellent Ministry and Protection of the Laws? Has that absolute, arbitrary Power, the hereditary Right and unlied Passive Obedience and Non-resistance been the eternal Subof every corrupt Preacher and mercenary Scribler, which are utterly incompatible with the Liberty of a free People, and the are of a limited Monarchy as ours? Have not the execrable Books Atheifts, Deifts, Socinians, folely of High Church Birth and Extion, been father'd upon the Low-Churchmen and Dissenters hequal Falsehood and Impudence? Has not the Illustrious House Hanover been infamously traduc'd as defigning to establish Presry or Lutheranism upon the Ruins of the National Church? If le things are so, if they are Truths of Evidence so palpable as y be seen and felt, what room is there longer for any honest dishman to doubt, but that there has long been a study'd and conted Defign, both of the French abroad and the Faction at home, subject and betray our Country to Popery, Slavery, and arbiy Power, by the Establishment of their Idol of a Pretender? by these Steps and Degrees they have been able so far (by the eds of a successful Wickedness to advance on their Journey to r Country's Ruin) as the Removal of an able and faithful Mini-; the Digrace of our noble and fortunate General; the Diffoon of a Parliament, inviolably affectionate to the Honour and erests both of the State and Church, who were the Glory and port of both; and in the Succession of another, scandalously just France and the Faction; and in every other Instance they are rung head-long to compleat their Wickedness in our Slavery, if the nal Providence hitherto ever propitious to us, and our own Verand Valour do not timely interpole to stop their Carrier. But if any of my honest Countrymen are not yet sufficiently coned of the certainty of the Design of the French and Faction n the Means already us'd, and the Steps and Advances that have n made by them at home, in order to that one principal End, them but turn their Eyes upon the Affairs abroad, from the first ir of the Elevation of this Ministry to this Day, and consider ether all the Turns they have given to them be not of the same ce exactly with the rest; that is, if they do not see that they evitly tend to the Preservation of the French Power from Ruin, he fole View of accomplishing the one grand End of introdug the Pretender; then are we an infatuated People, and destin'd Destruction, and for our blindness or our treachery deserve it too. ave already in some measure touch'd upon their Scituation, till removal of our renown'd General, and proceed to confider their lent Posture and Condition, and from thence deduce the Confequences that have necessarily follow'd from the Change. 1 pose it will casily be allow'd, the Liberties, Protestant Religion Interest of all Europe, together with our own, absolutely dependen on the Union and good Agreement of the Protestant Princes Powers that compole it, which are the British, the Dutch, the Instrious House of Hanover, the Family of Hesse, the Kings of h fia, Sweden and Denmark, Duke of Wirtembergh, part of the fers and the Grisons; of which, without offence to the others, British and Dutch are much the most formidable, and in all Manne most considerable, in respect of their Scituation, Riches, and it strength of their Forces both by Sea and Land: It is as eviden that in the last Century but one, the Princes of the House of the firia had form'd and pursu'd the chimerical Project of an universal Monarchy; I call it Chimerical, because it is manifest from Word of God, that there never shall be any such thing, because Prophet Daniel, by the Inspiration of the Holy Spirit, having no tion'd only four, which he so particularly describes, sufficiently in dicates that there never shall be another. In the last Age, the Free who had rais'd their Empire upon the Ruin of the Spaniard, h notwithstanding, conceiv'd the same ambitious Design; but with the Protestant Powers of Europe, as the Instruments of Providen defeated and render'd abortive both in the one and the other; how near to the end the French were with which they flatte themselves, will appear to every Man who is acquainted with Scituation of the Affairs of Christendom in the Year 1672, will by the furprizing Valour and Conduct of the young Prince of Oran fince our glorious King, the vigorous and generous Efforts of Dutch, and the powerful Assistance of the Elector of Brandenburg (when they were in all appearance upon the very brink of the Ruin) were intirely baffl'd and defeated. I cannot here but to notice of two very remarkable Incidents which happen'd at the time: In a grand Council of War, which the French King helds on the Defign of invading the United Provinces, most of the gent Officers, either servilely to flatter the Ambition of their Princes upon a false Motive of Glory, or the Hopes of inriching themsel by the Plunder of those rich Provinces, gave their Opinion for Invasion; but the Prince of Conde, the greatest Man, and great General of their Nation, gave his in the negative; and his Read were, that the Dutch confider'd in themselves were a rich and midable People, that they were a very good Ally, and confident that they apply'd themselves wholly to the business of their To and Commerce, without troubling themselves or intermeding other Peoples Affairs, or disturbing their Neighbours; and that it was not the Interest of the other Protestant Powers, so nest was it their Inclinations to fuffer them to be destroy'd, as very w knowing them by their Riches and maritime Strength, one of chief Supporters of the Protestant Interest of Europe, and that that ore, it was his Opinion, that the Invasion of them, as it was tended with greater Difficulties than were generally foreseen, it wo gever be answer'd with the Success with which they flatter'd the ves; and if that should happen, it was worth considering whether Attempt of so much Violence and Injustice without any provocan on their part, might not one Day exasperate a People to rege and repay it with bloody Interest on their Nation: I leave it the Judgment of every confidering Reader, whether the Event has more than sufficiently verified the good Sense and Prediction of tigreat and judicious Prince. The other was this : King Charles the Second, who during the e of his Exile, at the Initigation of Cromwel, had been treated banish'd out of France by Mazarine, after a Manner more besitg a Slave or a Vagabond, than one of the greatest Princes in ristendom, was honourably receiv'd and entertain'd publickly by Dutch; but when by the Necessity of the Times he was forc'd retire out of their Dominions, he was privately though nobly fubed by them at Cologn, till his Restoration, to which they not a e contributed; great and repeated Professions of Friendship on ir part, mighty Acknowledgments of their Generofity and Affuces of suitable Returns on his; yet he had not been above five ars upon the Throne, when forgetting the ill Ufage and Insuite France, and the generous Treatment and Liberality of the Dutch, was prevail'd upon by the Tory Faction, to enter into an Alliance h France, the worst of his and Country's Enemies, for the Extira on of his best and surest Friends the Dutch. War was proclaim'd, several Engagements happen'd at Sea, wherein 'tis well known seldom got any thing but Blows; and in the Year 1672, when French invaded them with a formidable Army by Land, he fent rong Squadron with Land Forces on Board to infult them at the e time by Sea; but by a wonderful Providence of God, (who has shown himself a Protector of such as are unjustly oppress'd) Day that was appointed for the Landing of the English Forces, te was not only no Tide of Flood as usual upon the Coasts of and, to carry the Ships up to execute their injust Delign, but the was observ'd twice that memorable Day to fall beneath the lowest ter-mark, which retarded the Enemies Fleet, and gave time to t of the Dutch to oppose and prevent their Descent; nor has the e good Providence been wanting fince upon several other Occas, by Effects something very like Miracles, to the Preservation of great and powerful Republick: Next to this secret Protection leaven, they ow'd their Safety to the prudent Advice of the noble of Shaftsbury, and other faithful and eminent Patriots of both ules of the contrary Party, who made that deluded Prince lensithat it was by no Means his or the Nation's Interest, to suffer One he principal Supports of the Protestant Religion and Interests of ope, to be oppress'd by the growing Power of France; so perhed in all times have the Whigs been of the Justice and Necessity cultivating the Friendship and Alliance of a flourishing Protestant ple, whose Republick was founded upon the Basis of Liberty; all true Lovers of our Country were very well satisfied then, that le we were providing for their Safety against a Power that threatall Europe with Chains and the Extirpation of the Reform'd Religion, we were at the same time providing for the Security and Es. blishment of our own. They were not influenc'd then by any narrow Principles of Fear or Envy in the growth of Power of an afformer and friendly Neighbour of the fame Religion with themtewes; the were very well appriz'd, that the further the Dutch should exten their Conquests and enlarge their Barrier against France, the further off was the Danger remov'd from England; they lookt upon even new Acquisicion to be an additional Strength to a Friend, and an en feebling a haughty and ambitious Prince, who upon the Principle both of his Religion and Interest was and ever must be the me mortal Enemy of us both, and never envy'd them the Glory or M. vantage of their Successes; whereas if they had basely sufferd in renown'd Republick to have been ruin'd and overthrown, theirom Danger as it came nearer, and as it were at their Doors, was inches table; and they would have had at best but the miserable Confidence tion to be the last devour'd, and would for their Baseness and The chery have deserv'd it too. These were the wise and generous to timents of the Whigs at that time, have been ever fince, and mi eternally continue to for the Defence of their own Country and Pre fervation of their Confederate Neighbours, from the very Name and Necessity of their Principles; and those the Opinions and Com fels of the Tories of that time, to cultivate the Friendship of a Popul Enemy, have been ever fince, and must eternally continue so, by very Nature and Necessity of theirs, and which all the Worldish fible lead directly at this Day to our own Destruction and Slaver in that of our noble Confederates the Dutch; for not all our wood Walls we so much boast of, not the Riches, the Strength, the Form the Valour, and the Numbers of the Nation, equal to any other Christendom, wou'd without a Miracle (which we did not seem mu at that time to deserve) have preserv'd us from the Violence and la petuofity of the French Power, if by the Perfidiousness of the Im Favourites, we had been depriv'd of the Assistance of the Dutch, w in Conjunction with us have ever made a great overballance at to the French, though fingly, as things have been fince manag'd, shall very soon be inferior to them.

Truth and Honesty are in their Nature ever one and unalterable and though Men change their Opinions and Sentiments in mattern Policy which ever fluctuates, and may vary according to the Natity and Circumstances of Time and Things, and Princes change to Ministers at Pleasure; yet the reason and nature of Things remi eternally the same, and are immutable; for though it be true, the necessary sometimes and Circumstances of Affairs may make necessary sometimes to shift and change Counsels, and the ording Measures of Policy, there are no Circumstances or Accidents of the are of force to change the Essence of Truth or right Reason. It is true, that some Considerations of Policy, even amongst friendly a consederated Powers, may oblige them respectively sometimes think some things both reasonable and convenient to be done to certain Occasions, which at other times they may not; but this always to be understood of the Ont-branches as it were, and Affairs and the ordinal support of the Ont-branches as it were, and Affairs may not the ordinal support of the Ont-branches as it were, and Affairs may not the ordinal support of the Ont-branches as it were, and Affairs may not the ordinal support of the Ont-branches as it were, and Affairs may not the ordinal support of the Ont-branches as it were, and Affairs may not the ordinal support of the Ont-branches as it were, and Affairs may not the ordinal support of the Ont-branches as it were, and Affairs may not the ordinal support of the Ont-branches as it were, and Affairs may not the ordinal support of the Ont-branches as it were, and Affairs may not the ordinal support of the Ont-branches as it were, and Affairs may not the ordinal support of the Ont-branches as it were, and Affairs may not the ordinal support of the Ont-branches as it were.

leffer Importance, but never of the Vitals and Effentials of a State, of a Friendship and Alliance contracted with Confederates when unded upon the absolute Interest of their common Good; for in ofe Respects, whatever is or was originally good for their publick d common Safety and Preservation, will at all times and constantly fo; for Interest, which is the Spring and first Mover of most prite, and I may fay, all publick Actions, and the principal Union of Confederacies, can only be best secur'd and continu'd by Means at always and perpetually are or ought to be the same and unangeable; fuch as are the publick Faith, Justice, Reason and mutu-Affistance, and therefore ought never to be suppos'd capable of ange or Diminution; otherwise it is impossible for the best constied Governments upon Earth to Subsist long with Honour and Retation. But to make this general Speculation familiar and intellible to the meanest Capacity, which is what I always propose in s Work, by an Instance in our own Case : If it was ever good d convenient for the Kingdom of England and Republick of Hold to have been inviolably united for the Security and Preservation their mutual and common Interest, it is so still, and will always ntinue to be fo; but uncontrovertible Experience from the beging of that Common-wealth has shown, that such an Union alone fecure and perpetuate their mutual and common Interest: The ouclusion therefore that naturally follows is, that it will be eternally reslary for their common Good that it should continue firm and violable for ever; Matter of Fact and Experience ever carrying a stainty and Evidence with them, superior to all the Speculations, her of Divines, Philosophers, or Politicians; for these we all but well know may be influenc'd by their Pride, their Passions or ir Ambition, but the other is founded upon the immutable nature dinflexibility of Truth it self; from hence then it will unavoidy follow that they who contribute most effectually to preserve and ltivate a good Understanding, Union and Friendship between these o formidable Powers, are without Contradiction the best Friends the common Good of their Country, which has ever been the actice of the Whigs, and must always be so as I have said from the ry nature and necessity of their Principles; and they who incestily labour to create Jealousies and Divisions between them, in each of the publick Faith of Engagements, are the most pernicious d dangerous Enemies of both, from the same Nature and Necessity theirs; and I leave it to the World to judge, if this has not always en the Practice of the Tory Faction who have sufficiently demonated by a late famous Instance that they still, and are very likely continue it whilst they remain such ; for they who espouse an solute and arbitrary Power in the Prince, and a slavish Passive Obeence in the Subject, can never be Friends, or their Politicks confient with the Liberties of a limited Monarchy, or a free Common-7. 下分。1. 多有的人

and expensive War, as it will remain to Posterity a glorious 74 mony of their Sincerity and Faith of the Engagements and Honor of their Arms, so will it be a perpetual Reproach of the want them in us, and a Blemith to the Reputation of a People who have in all Ages before been renown'd as much for their Integrity as the Valour: A plain and natural opennels and simplicity of Manners in ever been esteem'd the Genius of the English Nation; and an invis lable fidelity to publick Engagements has, till of late, in a peculin and diftinguishing manner been the Practice and Characteriftick of it whilft Men of Honour, known Principles and Love of their Country were employed in the Administration; and we have this only Confolation left us, under the Misfortune of the present difastrous Con juncture, that our high and noble Allies will diftinguish between simple Honesty and Genius of a People, and the wicked Spirit of factious few, the Authors of their Difgrace and ours, which is unbo pily predominant amongst us, and not impute the Infamy of the Breach of the publick Faith to a whole Nation, which is purely in effect of the cursed Ambition of a handful of Men, grown go by the Indulgence of an excellent Princels they have had the Address to deceive and impose on; and as we are sure that God can now prosper the wicked Designs of such as endeavour the Slavery of the Country, though for Reasons we cannot dive into he may sometime fuffer them to go a great Way; yet we doubt not in the End but fee the Event in the Severity of their Punishment, suitable to the Gat and Enormity of their Crime.

In the forming this grand Confederacy, the greatest that possible ever was in Europe, and for the Ends the most justifiable for which War can be commenc'd, that of doing Justice to a Prince, injur'dly the Fraud and Violence of a tyrannical Usurper, and the Preservit on of the common Liberty; and confidering the happy and gloring Successes that attended it for eight Years, whilst it continued in the Hands of Ministers and Generals, who had no other Interest in that of the Honour of their Nation, and the general Good of Europe the Man who should have affirmed that the English, the Powerful the Rich, the Free, the Valiant English should have been the first have broken it, out of the scandalous Pretence of Inability to carry on, would difficultly have found Belief; yet such is the Instability continual Flux of all human Affairs, that we have liv'd, in a flot time, to fee verify'd that which was hardly possible to be believed by which we are by a melancholly Experience taught how far Por er, in the Hands of a few corrupt ambitious Men, may be abus to the Difgrace and Diffionour of a whole great and generous Po ple: Yet Vertue and Valour are not only the Portion of the English our noble and illustrious Neighbours and Confederates, by their gorous Resolutions to carry on so just and honourable a War, and their fleady adherence to their Confederacy even after our infamous Defertion, have demonstrated to the World, that they more than ? qual us in all the magnanimous Qualities that form the Character of Nations that dare dye fighting for their precious Liberty; and a firmly perswaded that the Genius of the Liberty of Europe thaliful Telli.

What was the End of this great and powful Confederacy and Armament? Was it not to reduce an overown and exorbitant Power of a Prince, who was conspiring to ake his fole Ambition the Rule and Measure of the Submission and edience of all the great and free Nations in Europe, and the rering the Crown of Spain, with the Indies, to the most August pule of Austria? How often have we been affur'd of this from the rone, and the general Voice of the Nation? How often have we en told that no Peace should ever be concluded with France, but on the reduction of her Power, the establishment of the Emperor his just Rights and the full Satisfaction of all the Allies, confederaonly for that End? How are these Conditions executed? Or why he they not? Were we not folemnly ingag'd and fworn to fee m performed? What is become of the publick Faith, the Soul of liances? Where is the Security of publick Treaties and Ingagents, if the Majesty of England and the Honour of a Nation canthe depended on? Why this unaccountable Rupture of the Conheracy? Why this infamous Desertion of our Friends just in the tical Time when we were upon the point of reducing the comon Enemy, and forcing such a Peace upon him with our Swords our Hands, and upon Terms the Conquerors should have thought in their turn to command, when there was but a paltry Town two in their way to hinder them from piercing into the Bowels his Kingdom, and which for Ages to come might have established e Safety and Tranquility of all Christendom? Is there a Man in his nies in England that does not fee that fo execuable a Treachery ok its Rife folely from the Fears of the Faction, who forelaw eir own inevitable Ruin in the downfal of the Tyrant who only prorted them? Did they not see the Loss of all their Hopes of estathing their ill got Power they knew not how to use but for the uin of their Country, and that of their dear Pretender, to skreen eir wretched Lives under his Authority and Protection, from the engeance of an abus'd Nation so justly due to their Perfidiousness d Treachery?

It was not the scandalous Pretension of the Inability of the Kingom, to carry on the War to the desired End, that was the occasion all this load of Infamy to our Country, and prejudice to our Conderates; but the Inability of the Faction, to maintain and support temselves otherwise than by the intervention of an inglorious sepate Peace, which they knew could solely preserve from Ruin the token shatter'd Force of their Sovereign Popish Protector in France-hey knew the Nation not in want of Means or Inclinations to carry on the War vigorously in Conjunction with their Allies, til they high have obtain'd such a Peace as would (in a short time) have anwer'd their past Expence, and secur'd them for the suture; though they found them in some unwillingness to part with their Money, to establish the Authors of their Disgrace and Ruin, they knew w ry well, that as the Riches of the Nation are mostly in the Hank of the Whigs and Low-Churchmen and Diffenters, they were as few fible they wanted Credit to draw it out upon the Pretention of the Occasions and Exigencies of the State, though upon the Security fuch Parliamentary Funds as theirs, when they had but too mind Reason to believe, that it was not to be imploy'd to the honeste vices of their Country, for which it might be intended, but lavid ed out in fecret Services, either to establish a private Interest and la figns of their own, or to corrupt the Ministers of foreign Prince to their Ends, or to the viler Purpoles of debauching Electionia Parliament Men at home, or to keep steady in their Iniquity fad as are corrupt enough to fell or betray their Country's Honour and Liberty when they are elected: I know well enough that the Ma who advances these bold, but honest and undeniable Truths, attempt a very daring and dangerous Enterprise, and exposes himself to the Malice and Revenge of a mercilels and unforgiving Faction, wh know no more Bounds of their Rage and Fury, than of their Am. bition; but I give them to understand that I equally despise the Resentments, and detest their Treachery; 'tis long ago since I have learned to prefer the Honour and Interest of my Country to all other Confiderations of this World; and if I had ten thousand-Live, I would facrifice them all in the glorious Cause of the Defence of it Liberty and established Religion. What honest Englishmen can with Patience or Temper reflect upon the Dishonour that rebounds upon his Country, from the Perfidiousness of a Set of Men, who have shamefully abandon'd their Confederates in the very Eve of the Ac complishment of their noble Toils and Wishes? At the very point when they had little left to do but to receive (in the Fruits of a honourable and lasting Peace) the Recompence of all their generous Labours and Protutions of so much Treasure and noble Blood to puchase it? Is there any honest Man in England whose Heart would not have rejoye'd to fee the Power of France humbled and reduced within the natural Extent of a paternal Dominion, more than fullcient to content the Lust and Avarice of the most Ambitious of Men; except this wretched Spawn of High Church, whose Interest it is, for their own takes, wholly to preferve it? How came it to put that Britain, all of a sudden, which for Riches and Courage is equal to any Nation in Europe (except France in its flourishing Condition on) and superior to most of the rest, should be the first to desent Confederacy form'd for a certain End, and stipulated under certain Conditions, by the Sanction of folemn Oaths and Ingagements, before that End was obtain'd, or those Conditions perform'd? 'Tis true that the Nation, by the Effusion of so much Blood, and continual draining of so much Treasure, was considerably enfeebl'd and exhauled but she was neither dead nor beggar'd; if we were drawn low by an uninterrupted Expence, we are very certain that France, our common Enemy, was much more fo, and our good Friends and Allies suffered equally in Proportion; but as both we and the Dutch had loney, initely a greater share of Trade than the French ever had, (I think e shall not have the Occasion to boast of that long) it must eviatly follow that the Riches which accru'd from it, and are the Siews of War would have furnished us with the Means to have main it it much longer with the Treasures brought from all the Parts the Universe, than he could reasonably have been supposed to we done without them, and barely upon the Product and Funds of

own Country how extraordinary foever. Tis true indeed that the Present which his fingula good Friends the Faction have made him of the Monarchy of Spain and the ches of the Indies, will put him in a Condition to bully again all grope, (of which he has already given us several pretty good Ininces) and that too in the space of a very few Years, either by mielf, or one of his Family; yet by the Asistance of the good God, edo not yet despair to see the Ambition of the one, and Perfidy of e other disappointed and confounded; at least had the wise Heads the latter but permitted the handful of Troops of their Nation to ve acted a little longer in concert with those of their Allies, and sh'd the Fortune of that single Campaign, they would have left. Room for Scandal to themielves and Reproach to their Country; d if by the superior Power of his Arms, he had established his and son in the Acquisitions he was in possession of, by the infamous its of Fraud and Perfidiousness, we had had nothing left to do t to submit ourselves to the disposition of a Providence we are not rmitted to dispute or complain of; but to put a stop to their Sucfices when the gallant Officer and Soldier, flush'd with a Train of ctories, and fearless of the happy Issue, were upon the Point of forcing e last Lines of their dispirited Enemies; at the Instant when they ere already breathing French Air, and in one Attack more, for I ill not call it a Battle, ready to put an End to the Toils and Faues of the War; at such a juncture, I say, to put a check to their arrier, by Measures as infamous in their Circumstances, as they were foreseen and less expected, was such a Stretch, such a refin'd ece of Treachery as none but an Ideot who cannot, or a Highhurchman who will not perceive it, can be ignorant of, or not det. What Vexation, what cruel Disappointment, what Grief, what espair to our gallant and generous best Friends; what Contentent, what new Life, what Joy, what Transports to our most mor-Enemies from fo triumphant a Piece of Iniquity? Though it be at to impossible for human Wisdom to foresee the particular Deos of a secret Conspiration, which none but such as are concerned it can precisely know; yet every single Step that has been made ith regard to the Allies, fince this mischievous Change, has been ficient to have convinc'd the least discerning, that there was someing hatching that portended some notable Evil which might end general Ruin, though they could not tell after what manner it ould discover itself; as Men at a distance hear the rumbling of hunder, yet know not where the Danger, with which it is always lended, will fall, till it burst from the Clouds with an impetuoy that nothing is able to refift: Thus the Resentments and Ani-

mofities of the Faction, big with Mifchief against our great and w ble Allies the Dutch, were as the Lightning that always precedes at toretells the Thunder. 'Tis wonderful to observe with what inter nal Malice, with what Infamy of Lies and Calumnies the Examine the Review, the Remarker on the Barrier Treaty, the Author of the Conduct of the Allies, and the rest of the mercenary Legion of the Scriblers of the Faction, (in all which I confidently maintain thatin any matter of Importance there is not one fingle Syllable of True indeavoured to represent the Dutch, a free and powerful Republic profeshing the same Faith and Religion of Jesus Christ, and one the principal Pillars and Supporters of it, and render them office and suspected to our Nation, as a Prelude to the Execution of Villany prepar'd against them and the whole Confederacy; m these great People, whose Common-wealth is founded upon Liber and the generous Principle, the Right of all Mankind, of free themselves from the Slavery and Oppression of their tyrannical By Philip the Second, have, by the visible Favour and Assistance of Ha ven, rais'd themselves to a degree of Glory and Puissance, equals the most renown'd Nations in the Universe; and have in all Time defended and maintain'd that precious Liberty with a Wisdom, W lour and Constancy, equal to the noblest and most memorable Time of the antient Romans, from the expulsion of their last infolent King to the Tyranny of their ingrateful and perfidious Emperors.

I am not entering into the Panegyrick of the Dutch; thoughle ver did and ever shall honour them for their Wisdom, Vertue and W lour; and if any thing can add to the Esteem which I and every lo nest Englishman who loves his Religion and Liberty ought to on ceive of them, 'tis their firm and fleady Adherence to their Friend and Confederates in the Cause of Justice to an injur'd Emperor and the common Liberty, as long as they could pretend to do so will their own Safety. I do but bare Reason to their Merit, and m proud to do my felf the Honour in the Defign of an honell as friendly Office; nor can the foul-mouth'd Poison of the Hireling of a Faction affect them with any Body in the Nation, but Fools Knaves like themselves, who wish Evil to their own Country, that they intend to so faithful and powerful a Friend and Confett rate. How and in what manner unforeseen Accidents or Circum stances of Time and Affairs may have oblig'd them to alter the Measures, was only in the Hands and Knowledge of Provident but notwithstanding what they have been compell'd to do, there little Question to be made from the noble Efforts they have so los made, but that they will adhere to the End to the Interests they wen ingag'd in, as far as shall be consistent with the Honour and Secon ty of their own Republick; but this we may with Confidence man tain, that when they can no longer support and defend their Friend they will never basely sacrifice or betray them; and in case of sid a Misfortune, all the reasonable Part of Mankind will distinguil the Force of an irrefishible Necessity, from the Effects of a study and concerted Treachery; and whilst they may lament so prefing Misfortune, will acquit them from the Guilt of having willingly co buted to it. In the mean while they have fo handsomly, and th fuch a Force of Truth and Reasoning, justified and defended eir Conduct and Innocence from the frivolous Cavils of an Enemy, buse of Commons, and the viler Reproaches of the laborious Trirs of the Faction, that it is time lost, and a fort of Presumption to

nglycon tribu If they are a People who perfectly well know their own Interest, how to pursue it, 'tis no more than what is to the last Degree mmendable, and adds to their Character; it ought to be the buess of their Neighbours to do so too, that is, to understand theirs, d cultivate it the best they can. If there were an Article in the rier Treaty that feem'd to intrench or interfere with the Comerce of the British Nation, as in effect it is most certain that there is not, it had been a Matter to have been amicably adjusted in a inference amongst Friends, and not an Argument for a Rupture, or Handle for the Breach of the publick Faith of a solemn Confedey: They have in so friendly and respectful a Manner offer'd her jesty and the Nation all the Satisfaction they could defire, as is ficient to convince all the World of their earnestness to cultivate ncere and hearty Friendship and Understanding between the two tions. A Treatment so rude and violent as they met with in so nice critical a Conjuncture, had been enough to incense any People o were not as commendable and famous for a rare and uncommon udence, as for their Power and Valour; and they who by the prizing Effects of both, the Providence of God, and Affistance of ir Alies, have not only withstood all the Efforts of so formidable lower as that of France, but abated and humbled it to a degree of intempt, may in Compassion and Charity for the frailties of Men, , but can never fear or apprehend any thing of Moment from the ble Malice, or Rage and Fury of a paltry and despicable Faction. is not indeed for the Credit of any Nation to be the Dupees of any their Neighbours of less Figure and Confideration in the World n themselves; but it is for the Honour of every or any great, h and powerful Kingdom, as that of Great-Britain, in a general use, so Glorious as that of the Defence of the common Liberties Europe, (and in that of their own) to make Effects proportionable the measure of their Riches and Power; and if they do more than niederates of lesser Capacity, they do but what in Justice they ght to do, and what will augment the Glory of their Reputation, the noble Ideas they give the World of their Puissance. This is fo from being a Reproach, as has been frivilously insistent on by the fion, founded upon any real Defect of the knowledge of their per Interest, that it adds a new and real Glory to a generous Na-, who are willing to give Proofs of the greatness of their Riches Power upon certain extraordinary Occasions, without fearing senseless Reproach of a plameable Distipation; for all Men will mmend as laudable a Magnificence and Liberality of Expence, when s not attended with a criminal and destructive Profusion. Power-Kingdoms do not measure and estimate the Treasure they expend the profecution of an important War by the value of the Expence, but by the Benefit and Advantages they may expect to receive in turn, or by the increase of their Glory and Reputation; as prime Persons of a beneficent Temper and Ability above the common of not rate the Presents they make so much according to their Value as the innate Generosity of their Minds, and the Conscience of having done a good natur'd and generous Action, which is ever the Man of a truly noble and elevated Soul, as the contrary always is of poor and narrow one.

Whatever stands in the way of the Designs of the Faction the necessarily hate; 'tis sufficiently known that their implacable Hattel and Animosities against the Dutch, as they know no Bounds Measure, so are never likely to have an end but in their Ruin, if the can contrive it. They will never forgive them the powerful Al france they gave the Illustrious Prince of Orange, which enabled him with the concurrence of his Friends here, to accomplish a Revolu tion, which was a mortal Blow to the Defigns of King James and his dear Brother and Confederate of France: Those great and worth Patriots, who were sensible betimes of the Storm that was ready break in upon them, to the certain Destruction of their Religion and Liberties, thought it high time to look out for the only Re medy was left them; and to make use of the Means in their Power, as the unquestionable Rights of Mankind, to oppose with Forcett Violence and Injustice of a tyrannical Oppressor; and as it was not to impossible for them to prevent to prevent the Danger that three ned them by their own Force alone, whill King James had a great and potent Army, (great numbers of which, both Officers and Sala ers, were Papists) they were compell'd to have recourse to the Prince of Orange. The Dutch, a wife and prudent People, who easily for faw their own Destruction inevitable in that of the English, readily confented to furnish him with such a Fleet and Number of theirbe Troops, as they judg'd sufficient for the accomplishment of the D fign, at a time when they were in a manner absolutely necessary Home, to defend themselves from the Insults of the common Enemy but they thought it of greater Importance to fave a great and friend Nation from Slavery, upon which their own Security intirely depend ed: They knew full well, that King James (as he was a declardh pift, and consequently their implacable Enemy, was wholly influent and govern'd by the Counfels and Maxims of France, and didw thing but in concert with her) was fully determin'd when he in inflav'd his own People, to unite his whole Force with the other for the Subversion of the Religion and Liberties of their Republic as the first and surest Step to the Reduction of the other Protestal Powers in Europe to the same miserable Condition of Slavery. The were not insensible what they were to expect from the Inclination of a Prince, who in the Debates of a Council at Whitehall, uponts Invasion already mention'd in 1672, whilft he was yet but Duked York, gave his Opinion in these few notable Words; Delenda eff. Co thage. They well enough foresaw that if the Powers of England and their Republick were reduc'd under the Domination of the two most mortal Enemies, all the rest of the Protestant Interest rope was near it, and could be no longer in a Condition to make but feeble Efforts to defend themselves against the impetuosity a Torrent it would be impossible for them to oppose. Not to insit on a Subject that all the World knows, and no honest Englishman ever forget, without being the most ungrateful of all Mankind, t wonderful and furprizing Revolution under the good Provice of God, which was the Basis and Commencement of the Safety Happiness of all Europe, was accomplish'd; our own happy untry was freed at that time from the dreadful Terrour of Popery

I Slavery, and Carthage was preserv'd.

Thus 'tis to this generous People, that we owe the Happiness of joying what is most dear and of greatest Estimation amongst Men, Lives, Estates, our Liberties, and our Religion; and as from this nous Epoch we may justly date the Abatement and Diminution of exorbitant Power of France, from the same we may compute Revival of the Resentments and Animosities of the Faction against People who so effectually contributed towards it. Heaven preserve em from ever falling into fuch a Scituation as may challenge our fistance in return; but if that Misfortune should happen to them, ere is not an honest Englishman who ought not with Joy to hazard Life and Fortune in their Defence, as much out of Policy and terest of State, as Gratitude. They who continually rack their ains to find out frightful Colours to dress them up in, who revive past Miscarriages of private Men to render them odious to our ation, and place them to the account of their whole Republick, hich are impossible sometimes to be avoided even between great d friendly Communities, (and ought either out of Charity, or for e take of the publick Tranquility, be buried in Oblivion) and who eate and foment Jealousies that tend to Division, make so many fallible Advances to the Ruin of their own Country; and I would fire such others who have the shameless Effrontry to reproach them ith Ingratitude, or want of a due Sense of the Obligations they we had to England from the Commencement of their Republick, look a little at Home, and reflect upon the Infamy of a certain lliance with France enter'd into by a Prince, who but a little before d been beholding to them for his Support, and in a good measure his Restoration; and the latter Treachery of the Tory Faction, en in Favour and Power in the Affair of their rich Smyrna Fleet, hen they thought themselves as secure in our Ports as their own, ider the Security and Protection of a fettled Peace. Things of this ature when they unfortunately happen, ought ever to be forgotten, or ere can be no foundation in Nature for the Preservation of publick ranquility, which depends absolutely upon the Faith of Treaties and right Understanding between neighbouring Kingdoms and Comon-wealths: Differences sometimes will arise between such, and Acts Violence and Injustice will often follow upon them, and it is for e Honour of a People who receive them, if they are able to make lose who offer them accountable; but when that is done, they ight no more to be thought of, and the memory of succeeding Obgations ought to cancel the Resentments of past Injuries; otherwise by reviving them, we but keep up Animolities that feldom end by in the Ruin of one or both of the People who may be concern'dige this has incessantly been the Practice of a Faction who apprehend certain miscarriage of their own wicked Designs in the Union of two Nations, whose respective Security and Happiness depend intire upon the Harmony and mutual good Offices of a fincere and invio lable Friendship. Their little Enemies here have not yet succeeded with all their wicked Artifices and base ill Usage, to exasperatethen to break that Union and Amity they are so desirous to cultivate with us; and 'tis to be hop'd never shall on our parts so far, as to animal the greatest, wisest and honestest part of our Nation, to loose the Esteem of their best Friend and Confederate, and I will add for the Reason already mention'd, Benefactor; they have once by their ge nerous and late noble Affistance, in the extremity of our Danger as Calamity, sav'd the Interest of our Country; and I heartily wish the had been as successful in spite of our and their factious Enemie by their vigorous Resolutions and Firmness to the common Cault have fav'd the Honour of it, by defeating an Union so artfully la bour'd, and at last effected with France; which as it must be of the last ill, and most pernicious Consequence to us both, will fix ania delible Mark of Infamy and Dishonour upon the faithless Conti. vers of it.

We have always been told according to the Tenor of the life grand Alliance, That a Ballance of Power by the Reduction of the exorbitant one of France, the Restitution of the Spanish Monarchy and West-Indies, a safe Barrier for the Dutch, and the just mi reasonable Satisfaction of all the respective Allies who were on cern'd in the War, were the fole Motives to recommence and continue it; that no Peace shou'd ever be concluded but upon the Conditions, nor privately or separately concerted between any the Powers, without the Confent and Advice of the whole: The who are acquainted with the nature of such Confederacies, know that they are enter'd into with all the Solemnity of mutual Or ligations, that are most facred and binding amongst Men, and a tify'd and confirm'd by the Sanction of an Oath; the publick Faith is the Complement, and as it were the Seal of the Union: This is ever to be effeem'd, and ought to be preserv'd inviolable, 'tisth' Voice of Nature in the general Sentiment and Practice of all Nat ons; without a strict and scrupulous Observation of which, there's an end of all publick Friendship and Alliances betwixt People and People; and they who have been guilty of the Violation of it, have ever been detested and branded with the blackest Marks of Infant and Dishonour. I am forry to observe, as can easily be demonstra ted from the History of all Times and Ages, that for the generalt has been observ'd and cultivated with a Fidelity and Exactness of the barbarous and Pagan Nations, to the Reproach of those profefing Christianity, tho' in it self consisting of a Moral, as the most severe, so the most pure and perfect of any that has or ever full be known to the World. e Heart and Mind of all Mankind, being of the fame Force and ficacy with the honest, vertuous Heathen, as the reveal'd Will of od, which never contradicts or acts contrary to it, is to the Chrian; the reason of the different Influence they have on Practice ms to be this; because the Law of Nature, which is, as it were, ngenial and familiar to the Temper and Genius of Mankind, makes eper and stronger Impressions on the Mind, than external positive ecepts, which for the most part are attended with something fere and rigorous, and therefore are look'd upon with a fort of dihe, and with difficulty submitted to; the Nature of Man being much bre prone to be led by what agreeably ingages and infinuates, than what exacts and commands under a Penalty. We know at preat but one Prince, and he, as he stiles himself (by a certain Highaurch Figure we call Contradiction) the most Christian King, ho makes a Sport of the facred Obligation of his Oath; who, as his Tyranny, he has elevated himself above the Reach and Power all human Laws, by his Duplicity and Treachery has flown the orld, he never had any esteem or regard for divine Ones; nor is much to be wonder'd at, whilst he suffers what in other Men is I'd Conscience to be directed, or his Ambition to be indulg'd and tter'd, by a viperous Brood of Vermin, the Post and Ruin of all inces and all Mankind, I mean the Jesuits, who acknowledge no er Power than the Pope's, whom they blasphemously exalt above that is call'd God, nor other Religion than their Interest: Yet, I have observ'd, we have of late sprung up amongst us as deadand pernicious a fort of High-Church Janisaries, who, as they our indefatigably to Subject their Country to the Domination and odel of the French Government, wou'd prostitute the Simpliciand Innocence of a great and free People to the Maxims and litation of their detestable Politicks and Religion. If any, of them but show the time when an Alliance and Confederacy with ance was either of Advantage or Honour to England, nay, when was not infinitely dishonourable to the Prince, and to the Infaand manifest Detriment to the whole Nation, as well as to the terests of all the rest of Europe, let them do the World that jute but to point it out, and we will recant all that has been faid, acknowledge them to have been in the right in all their late falures; but as it is as notorious and evident as Light at Noon. t Scandal, Difgrace, and Ignominy, and Shame that is intepable from wicked Actions, Danger, Infecurity and Ruin, with ntempt, which is always inseparable from foolish ones, have ever n the Monsters produc'd from this unnatural Conjunction, what here that remains but to conclude, that such as have hurry'd our tion into so infamous an Alliance at this time of Day, and pret Circumstances of Affairs, in Breach of the publick Faith, of emn Contracts, Infractions of the most sacred Oaths, and to the gust of all our noble Allies and Confederates, are of all Englishthe most infamous and faithless Betrayers of their own Couns, and the Liberties and Religion of all Europe besides. Tis y wonderful to confider by what Artifices they have been able to furprize a most excellent and religious Queen, in the Zenith of her Glory, Happy, Belov'd and Renown'd above all that ever wee before her, into Measures fatal to her Honour, her own Intered and that of her People: But we find by melancholy Experience that the wifest and best of Princes are liable to be deceived and impos'd on by the artful and plaufible Infinuations of cunning and defigning Knaves; and it is but too often a Misfortune that arise from an Over-Confidence and Opinion of the Fidelity, the Affect on and Capacity of those they trust in the management of public Affairs, without confulting their own Prudence and Judgment for such Men will ever lead the Prince, when they have discovered his Feeble into fuch Measures as will contribute most to satisfy the own Ambition, the accomplishment of their private Defigns, at the establishment of their own Interest and ill-got Power and For tunes, rather than study the Honour of the Prince, or Good of the People. The World may judge, whether we have not a terribe Instance of this Truth in the Case before us, I mean all the hond Part of my Countrymen, who are neither in the Secret or latered of the Conspiracy, but who, we are sure, shall suffer more than the Guilty, if by our Cowardice they long keep the Ascendant

Is it not true, that by the bleffing of God upon our Arms, and those of our Confederates, under the Conduct of the renown Duke of Marlborough, this exorbitant Power of France, that in fixty Years has been the Plague and Terror of all the Western World was reduc'd to fo low and pitiful a Condition, as to be to theld Degree contemptible? One wou'd have imagin'd, that in such a st tuation, no Terms wou'd have been refus'd to a conquering Con federacy, that bore down all before them. What then is become of the Restitution of the Spanish Monarchy and West Indies to the Emperor, the rightful Heir of them, which was the principal to tive of recommencing the last War? Where is that just, full and me fonable Satisfaction stipulated by this grand Alliance to the refer Cive Potentates ingag'd in it, who at the Expence of their Tresum and Blood of their gallant Subjects, with a Vigour and Generolity that can never be sufficiently admir'd or recommended, have contributed so long to support it? What is become of the publick Fait and Honour of the Nation so solemnly ingag'd for the Performant of the Conditions, never to treat separately, or concert any priva Measures with the common Enemy concerning any Accommodal on, but what might end in a general Peace, Iccure, lasting, glos ous, and advantageous to the whole Confederacy? Were not of victorious Troops upon the Point of forcing their way to the ro Heart of France, and imposing what fort of Peace they pleas'd !! on a cruel and ambitious Prince, or of compelling him to fly Country, (as for much the same Reasons we had serv'd a certain Brother of his) if he had a Friend, or there be a Place in the Uni verie where he cou'd hide his perjur'd Head? Was not this only infallible way of obtaining such a general Peace, as must have ended to the Honour, Security and Satisfaction of all the Print and Powers' concern'd in the War, rather than by the dilatory

e Prince latory and fidious Way of Negotiations with a Prince, whole Faith and Ho. ur they knew was never to be depended on? The shortest way to e Throne of Spain had been through the Bowels of France, and ere remain'd but an inconsiderable Town, the Work of a tew days, open a Passage, and begin their Journey thither. Is there a Man Europe in his Senses, notwithstanding all their bluster, that can leve the Usurper Duke of Anjou capable of maintaining himself his injust Possession one single Campaign, against the conquer-Troops of the Allies, when he should have icen the Forces and wers of France every where beaten, and flying before their viprious Enemies? Does not every body know, that the Spanish tion, the most mortal and irreconcileable Enemies of the French. re for above these twelve Years past been held in a miserable bjection, folely by the fear of a Power they were unable to ope? That they are weary to the last Degree both of French Maxs and French Tyranny? That they grown under the Weight of ains, which they want only the Power to shake off? That there none of the Grandees, the haughtiest and most impatient of angers of any People under the Sun, would adhere to the Uper a moment, depriv'd of the affistance of his Grandfather; but h as by their standing by him so long have lost all Hope of Parfrom their lawful Frince, and can only find their Security in tinuing their Rebellion? With what Joy, with what Transports uld that gallant Nation, who fo gloriously defended their Liberfor above two hundred Years, against the formidable Roman Leas destin'd to the Conquest of the greatest Part of the Universe, eive into their Arms and Bosoms the conquering Germans, who ne only to redeem them from French Slavery, and place the stimate Heir of their belov'd House of Austria apon the Throne his Fore fathers? Can any body believe, that in case of extinctiof the Line of their ador'd Ferdinand and I/abella, they were luc'd to the necessity of choosing another Family, that they would prefer any Prince in Christendom to one of the House of Bours or any other Frenchman, to whom, from the beginning of time, ture has implanted in their Hearts an unconquerable Aversion, m the divertity of Genius, Manners, Customs and Temper, and nich is none of the least a Rivalship of Honour? Is there not still paining amongst themselves, in case of such a necessity, more inches than one of the Illustrious Houses of Castile and Leon, who ve an unquestionable Right to the Succession of their Crown, as as Proximity of Blood can intitle? Is not the noble House of dina Celi descended in a strait Line from their Alphonzo, surm'd, El Desheredado? And has not the cruel, unchristian Poof the most Christian King put an end to the Life of a geneis Prince, who flood too much in their way, and was too visible Reproach of their Injustice and Usurpation? Was his Crime any ler than his Fidelity to his natural Prince, his Love to his Counand his Pretentions to the Crown by Proximity of Blood, in c of failure of Iffue of the August and Royal Family that ought be in Possession? What was there to hinder this glorious Profoed of the Confederates? France beaten and humbled into a Con dition, more in need of feeking Affistance for her felf than afford ing it to others; Spain incapable, if it were willing, to maintain the War alone; the Usurper only supported by the feeble Succount of a few rebellious Subjects, Traytors to their Country, who Crimes only make them desperate to defend him against the Uni versal Wishes and Defires of the Nation. Tell the World, the who art the most frontless of all High-Church Politicians, are the things true, or are they false? If they are false, convince the World of their Falsehood by something better than your bare Afferion or Denials, which have long fince loft their Credit, if they can faid to lofe their Credit who never had any, with all the fober, thin ing, honest part of Mankind; but if they are true, rack your me cenary Brains to affign any other Reason for the Practice and Me fures of your Faction you are hir'd to support, than the Introd Stion of your Pretender, and in him the Establishment of the got Power and private Fortunes of a few at the Head of it; wh as they visibly oppose the feeble Efforts of an impotent Wickedne to the Orders and Decrees of an eternal Providence, which by cret and invisible Means is again leading us into a Deliverance no to miraculous, shall in the end receive the just Reward of their crable Treachery. Reflect betimes upon the Fate in all Ages of grounded and immeasureable Ambition, which is ever attended wi Violence, Injustice and Oppression: Think upon the miserable I Ainy of all perjur'd faithless Betrayers of their Country's Hono Liberties, and Religion, and if you can before it be too late, pent.

But if we are not yet convinc'd enough, that the fole End of present Managers, and every fingle Step that has been made by the fince their Exaltation, has directly contributed to that fole End of troducing the Pretender; and more especially their Measures a Negotiations with the French, contrary to the Faith of Treat and frequent Assurances they have been able to procure from t Throne, that no Peace should be concluded, no private or separ Negotiation with the French should ever be enter'd into, or carr on, but with the Knowledge and joint Confent of the whole liance; let us further confider how well the Safety and Interest Europe and our own are provided for by them. All Men kno that the Force and Strength of the Confederacy, and confequen the happy Iffue that might reasonably have been expected from depended intirely upon the Union and good Agreement amon the Powers that compos'd it: This was a Truth so evident, be to the French and Heads of the Faction, that the Power of one, and the Defigns of the other, must unavoidably have been in'd and defeated, (if they had been permitted to have continu united) that the most shameless and scandalous Artifices and C cessions, both on the one side and the other, have been implo and granted to dissolve their Union, by detaching from the Con deracy a formidable Power, which was justly effected the Supp and Cement of it; for no Man questions, but that the French K ad the British Ministers believ'd constantly, that if England could ace be debauch'd into the Measures of an inglorious, separate Peace, ad consequently be detach'd from the rest of their Allies, that the Confederacy would foon of Course dwindle away, and in a short me be diffolv'd: This was a great Point to gain, and unhappily, o'at the Expence of the Prolititution of Honour and Conscience, acceded to their Wish; yet their Consequence, as it did not nefarily and unavoidably follow, might not have prov'd good, and maintain, would not, if it had pleas'd God to have permitted the butch to have remain'd firm to the rest of the Consederacy, who gether would, humanly speaking, have been more than sufficient have carry'd on the War, till they obtain'd the glorious End which they first enter'd into it, the Reduction of the French folence and Power, and in that the Security of the Liberties and prestant Religion and Interest of all Christendom; nor will this pear a rash or irrational Judgment to any one, who is convine'd the utter Inability of France at that time, to have continued it nch longer upon their own Funds, either of Mony, Credit or

orces. For the there be nothing more certain, than that while France in a full and flourishing Condition, the whole combin'd Pows of the Confederacy were but hardly a Match for her, yet not-shillanding her Teasures were immense, and her Forces formible, by the Numbers and Martial Genius of the People, the ent has sufficiently declar'd that the one was not infinite, or cother invincible; fince we have feen her in the Course of up. ards of a twenty Years War reduc'd so miserably low, as to be reflitated to have recourse to all the most criminal and unjustifia-Artifices of Perfidy and Collusion to sustain and cover the Rests Reputation, which as it was only founded upon the Pride and ity of the Monarch, was all along topported by the Violence of arbitrary and insupportable Tyranny; whereas on the other Hand, Confederate Powers and Princes, whose Domination is all them founded upon the folid and natural Foundation of Liber-(tho' otherwise every Way unequal) remain'd still in a notable pacity and Ability to have continu'd the War much longer, even thout the affistance of the English; and the reason of it is this; the Prince, who begins a War in every Instance unjust, only gratify his Ambition, in order to subject or oppress his Neighus, or to establish a Tyranny, is indispensably oblig'd to greater ofunous of Money to corrupt the Courts and Ministers of foreign nces, belides the necessary Expences of numerous Armies, than who being confederated against him in the Defence only of common Liberty, keep within the frugal Management of the mon Stock, in the just and necessary Disbursements of the War, thout squandering either their Honour or Treasure to purchase honest Ends, by the criminal Lavishments of Bribery and Cor-Mon. This is directly the Case before us, and those mercenary church Fools, who speak in all their Gibberish so contempyof the petty Princes, as they infolently call them of Germany

nitors: It will be a notable Consolation for us then to complain of e villany of those we tamely suffer'd to fool and betray us into wery; to talk of French Faith, infernal Faction; Renuntiations, sento's, South-Sea Visions, and affurances of Trade and Comerce; we shall do well to seek for Passages into the Moon or Euth, to look for those Advantages, for we are sure never to meet in them here; nor are we to expect any thing in this World, but hat our new imperious French and Spanish Masters (whom we ight have kept at least our Equals) shall think fit to allow us. Tell a Countrymen, tell me besotted Englishmen, you that were born to breedom, not to be paralell'd in the Universe, how will this Slaybecome you? But if you will not be sensible for the Miseries it Folly or Cowardice may betray you to, tremble at the Curses your Posterity, when they shall groan, and eat in Sweat and ans the Bread of French and Spanish Slavery.

But further, if in the War carry'd on against France, during the ole Reign of King William, if in the recommencing of it by her and Mijesty and the famous Alliance entred into in 1702, we theen always told, That one of the principal Ends of it was to m such a Ballance of Power, that for the future no ambitious ace, if he were desirous, should be able to insult or oppose his ghbours, or to disturb the Peace and Tranquility of the rest of me; where or how is that Ballance of Power to be found from present Measures or Management of Affairs, and the Establishnt of Spain and the Indies in the Possession of the Duke of An. We remember very well that foon after the Treaty of Parti-, which gave High-Church so much Offence in the Year 1699, m one Mr. Harley was Speaker of the House of Commons, the ue address'd King William, complaining that by the Grant he had lented to of Naples, Sicily and other infignificant Islands in the diterranean, and few Ports upon the Coasts of Italy to France, and made that King too great, and particularly that he had inahim to interrupt our Trade into the Mediterranean and the Leand I think in the January following the House of Lords adfidhim to the same purpose; and so zealous at that time was faction seemingly for the Honour and Interest of their Counand the Insecurity they judg'd their Commerce in from the wing Power of France, that they impeach'd the Lords Portland, wis, Orford and Halifax, as the King's Advisers to that Treaty Partition, which so much aggrandis'd the Power of France, withthe Participation of both Houses; and we know as well that St. John, Colonel Byerly and others of the Faction were the lons who made the greatest Noise, and concern'd themselves tin the management of that Impeachment. Well then, if the thing of a few Out-branches of the Monarchy of Spain, of small prtance, were a just occasion of so much Complaint against that tKing, and of lo much Prejudice to the Commerce and Inteof England at that time, one would be glad to be inform'd what in their Senses ought to think of a Majority of both les, who have at present thought fit to complement him with every Province of that whole Monarchy in Europe, with the pret Trifle of the Treasures of the West-Indies into the Bargain? W the Interest of England prejudic'd by the Concession of a frivole part to France, and is it better provided for now by the addition the whole? Or if those noble Lords I have mention'd deserved be impeached for advising the King to make that Treaty, what m these dishonourable Ones be thought to deserve, in good time, advising their Queen to conclude a separate Peace, that leaves House of France in the Possession of the intire Monarchy of Sa and the Indies for ever? Could Mr. Harley and Mr. St. John h so much Concern for the Honour and Interest of their dear Coun then, when there was, in effect, nothing to be apprehended, can my good Lord of Oxford, and my honest Lord Bolingbroke, o fent now to augment the Power of France to fuch a degree of orbitance, as not only threatens, but must inevitably destroy the wi Protestant Religion, Liberties and Interest of all Europe and own? Shameless Prevarication! What Honour or Advantages of Nation expect from the Service of Men, who can thus scandalou facrifice the publick Good to their private Interests? Time we know though it changes the Circumstance, can never alter the Nature Property of things; Opinions and even Judgments of Men change, because they may be founded upon Incertainties, but nour and Conscience are or ought to be immutable and eternally same; yet in this Instance of the Abandonment of both we are structed, that a proceeding of this kind in the space of a few Y was not a bare Compliance or Accommodation to the Unhappi of Times, which an irrelifible Necessity might in a great Mea have excus'd, but a voluntary and infamous Proftitution of the which all Mankind must condemn. What Construction can reason bly be put upon the Intrigues of a Faction, wicked enough to rate us from our Confederacy, other than the Defign of freeing French King from the Opposition of one of the most consider Members of it, in order to weaken and distipate the rest? what? For no other Reason more or less than to give him a brd ing while to recover himself, and an Opportunity to enable him a very fhort time to force their dear Pretender, and his Tool, u the Throne of England, with just as much Right and Equity a their good Help he has done his Grandson upon that of Spain. W Men undertake the Defence of what is really Just, and confeque True; or what is founded upon Principles of Nature, and co quently Rational, the Arguments to prove them are easy, plain inexhaustible; they carry with their genuine and artlets Simple a strength and force of Conviction that are irresissible; but we they stand up in the Support of what is either manifestly sales forc'd or unnatural, their Inventions are ever upon the Rac find out at best but plausible and popular Arguments, which at ver captious, and feldom carry an Evidence with them of Ford nough to perfeade; they end at most but in Appearance and Pr bility, and always leave the Question but doubtful and problemat they never throughly convince, but carry a firong Tincture of

ly with them, sufficient to puzzle and embarass the Weak and Credulous, who have not Capacity enough to distinguish the So-histry of Error or Falshood from the clear and solid Reasonings of 19th and Honesty. Whoever will but give himself the trouble to 19th a little upon what is past, will easily be satisfy'd, that it has 20th and solid into the series a part of the Nation has been deceiv'd and 20th into the Opinion of the present Measures, under the popular 20th and Appearance of the publick Good, which yet at the bot-

m visibly tend to the utter Ruin and Destruction of it.

Tis very surprising to observe, with what Nonsense and Impunce, a young pragmatical High-Church Priestling, just hopp'd, as were, unfledg'd out of his Nest of the University, shall very grave. pretend to maintain that the Danger to England and the other soing Powers of Europe, in respect of their Commerce, is much the from the Restitution of Spain and the West-Indies to an Emfor of Germany, the legitimate Heir of them, than from their Uniwith France, who has no more any Pretention of Right to them in the Cham of Tartary. I have something else to do with my me, than to trifle it away in answering or satisfying such ignorant corrupt Impertinents, if I did not see that it is a Topick has been nerally infifted on by most of them, even those of better Figure, me and Confideration in the Faction. I shall therefore pretend to popen the Weakness and manifest Falsehood of the Assertion, as agrossest and most nonsensical Piece of Absurdity that possibly has mbroach'd in England, in respect to her trading Interest, since theginning of their Modern Politicks which gave it both. France, its natural Scituation, seems to have been design'd to extend her inquests; as it is wash'd on the South by the Mediterranean, so is on the North by the Ocean and Channel that divides us, and on is sides is furnish'd with Forts and Harbours, which by Art addwthe Conveniences of Nature, have been render'd almost impreg-This gives them the Means to extend their Commerce, as as Security to their Naval Armaments, in which by the Balehand Treachery of Tory Counsels in some former Reigns, they been permitted from nothing to become equal, if not an Omatch for any one Maritime Power in Europe. By this happy mation, and the Temperament of their Climate, they abound th infinite Numbers of People, industrious, active, and of a fiemartial Temper, that equally fits them for all Conditions of Life; whilst they had any Remains of their original Freedom, of a midable Valour; and, lastly, of such an intrinsick Fund of Richthe natural Result of their Industry and Fertility of their Counas might have been thought inexhaustible, but by a despotical mice, whose Profusions in his Attempts of Oppressing his Neighhis were as immeasurable as his Ambition; both which, I mean Numbers of his People, and the Immensity of his Treasure, he drain'd to the last Degree of Exigence; the former by his con-Wars and endless Effusion of his Subjects Blood, and the other the necessary Expences of carrying them on, and infinitely more by the Extravagancies of his Luxury, and those of Bribery and Con ruption. And I must take leave here to insist a little upon what he been esteem'd the most impolitick Step of his whole Reign, I mean the detestable Extirpation of his Subjects of the Reform'd Religion as the first and most evident Advance to the Ruin both of himsel and Kingdom. I shall not infift upon the blackest Ingratitude to People who both plac'd and conserv'd him upon the Throne, again the Attempts of the Prince of Conde, in the first Civil War of hi time; but this cruel and inhuman Policy, if it deserves that Nam was the desperate Counsel of their implacable Enemies the Jesuit who are in fo diffinguished a manner the Support of High-Church France; by which as they laid the Foundation of the Ruin of the own Country, have furnish'd a laudable Example to their Brethe here, (who only differ from them in Name, but agree with them Principles and Practice, and if I should say in Religion, should do the but little if any Injustice) to effect the same in ours. By thesef rious Means he has depriv'd himself of the Assistance, Riches at Valour of above four hundred Thousand, by Imprisonment, Deat Banishment and other Methods of his Inhumanity, of the bravests diers, and most faithful Subjects in his Dominions. It has by a m dest Computation been made appear, that in the beginning of Reign there were in France fifteen hundred Thousand Souls of t Reform'd Religion, in which number I include the four hundr Thousand I have mention'd, and that there remain conceal'd abo fix hundred Thousand. This I look upon to be one of those we derful Turns of a mysterious and inscrutable Providence, by whi God frequently contrives the Destruction of Tyrants and Oppn fors of Mankind, by the very Means they propose for their Securi and Establishment. The Emperor, though a bigoted Roman Cat lick, and the other Powers of Europe both Popish and Protestant w had fuffer'd from his Infults, were too fensible of the Weaking that by this false and impolitick Step the Kingdom of France w reduc'd to, and too habile not to make their Advantage of it up occasions; and by the Impressions they have every where made on him in the whole Course of this long and bloody War, they se to have been but the Instruments of that Providence to accomply its mysterious Ends and Designs; for I will be bold to maintain t if that Number of brave and loyal People had been incourag'd a indulg'd in the Possession of their natural Rights, and the free ! ercise and Profession of a Religion that teaches all Men to be go Subjects, but none to be Slaves, as they must of Consequence ha exceedingly increas'd, it would humanly speaking been impossi for all the united Forces of Europe to have defended themselve from the Insults of so redoubtable an Enemy, much less to hi made any Impressions upon him. But to return from this short, what I thought feafonable, Digression.

Spain, as it is on three Parts surrounded with the Sea, has started fame Convenience of excellent Ports and Harbours; and by the Parts of the Indies, is sole Mistress of that inexhaustible Fund Treasure, from which all the Parts of the Universe draw their principles.

The Emperor with all his magnificent Titles, though greater w than any of his Predecessors by the Accessions already mention'd. ace the Advancement of the noble Family of the Counts of Hapsm to the Imperial Dignity, bears no manner of Proportion fingly the Power of France, but infinitely less when in Conjunction with un and the Indies; he is a very limited Prince, and subject to the ment Constitutions of the Empire of which he is the Head; and Empire it self is compos'd of several great and powerful Princes dependent of each other, and sovereign in their respective Dominis, but frequently divided, and of different Views and Interests. Government to constituted, though compos'd of robust and virous Members, yet wanting the Soul of Union, is but a Body, by Weakness inseparable from Division, always feeble and languishing; dom capable of defending itself from foreign Insults, and less to neive and profecute with Vigour and Success any great and immant Enterprise. It may indeed be granted, that if the whole Boof the German Nation, in its Latitude, were one intire People der the Conduct of a bold and enterprifing Monarch, both in Reat of their Numbers, the Strength of their Bodies, and their Eaent Valour, would be infinitely more than a Match for all the o-Powers in Europe: And this, in my Opinion, seems to be ano-Order and Decree of Providence that has not permitted fuch a whe to be united in one intire Body, as might have indangered the berty of the Christian World; but as they stand thus divided, we refrequently feen some of them liable to the Corruptions of Brithereby depriving the Head of the natural Succours and Affiace of the Members. Let it be further consider'd that the Body the Empire is an Inland Country, except on the Side of the North, ere the Maritime Powers, that are Members of it, are of small Conration; on the South, the Emperor has no strong Forts or Havens, a few inconfiderable Ones on the Coasts of Tuscany and Kingnof Naples, and not one Ship of Force of his own in any of them; thout which it is impossible to form the Delign of foreign Conths, or of disturbing the Peace of distant Princes. I the more lingly infift upon this important Circumstance, because it is of the Evidence to prove the Groffness of the Absurdity of those, who m that there is much greater Danger from the Restitution of the parchy of Spain and the Indies to the House of Austria, than from Difference between the two great contending Powers of the In pire and France in the Point in Dispute, both in respect of their So tuation, the Constitution of their Government, the Numbers and G mius of their People, and the Funds of their Riches. Let us no from these general Premises, consider and compare the Consequence that might, nay, that shall infallibly happen to Europe from the su cation and peaceable Possession of Spain and the Indies, either to the House of Austria or that of France, and leave the Issue to the D termination of the unprejudic'd Reader.

The Notion of universal Monarchy, as has been hinted, is a C mera only of Ambition; which though it hurry'd those two gr Families in the two last Centuries to attempt it, yet the ill Success both, in the pursuit, have shown the thing impracticable for any o Prince in Europe to accomplish. 'Tis true that Charles the Fifth, Prince of great Activity, Wildom and Valour, (who yet with his great Qualities, had more of the Air of the Knight-Errant the Romance, than a just and prudent Conqueror) had unquestion bly form'd the Delign of it; yet, though he was the first of his Fam who had the Honour and good Fortune at one time to wear the Imperand Spanish Crowns, the Difficulties he foresaw and met with fro the Opposition of the other Princes of Christendem, compell'd h to drop it as impracticable. This Reflection oblig'd that wife Prin upon the famous Relignation he made of the tumultuous Dignit and Honours of this World, to vacate to the more lasting and glo ous Ones of the other, to leave with the confent of the Prin Electors to his Brother Ferdinand the Empire, which though first Crown in Europe was by Reason of its Constitution of Vari of Sovereignties much inferior to that of Spain, which he left to Son Philip the Second; as being convinc'd that the united Pow even of the two Kingdoms, however potent or redoubtable co dered in themselves, by reason of their distant Scituation, were of Force sufficient for the Accomplishment of such a Design; ye is as certain that his Son Philip, who inherited all his Ambition, a few or none of his Vertues, (for notwithstanding all his Gravity Reputation of Wildom, there never was a more cruel or impolit Tyrant upon the Throne) entertain'd the same Project; till after fruitless Diffipation of an infinite Treature, the Defeat of his in cible Armada, the Revolt of the United Provinces, his Loss in Netherlands, Italy and other Members of his Dominions, and po ted with the Murder of his Son and best Friends, he put an end an inglorious Life and immeafurable Ambition together; the f Splender of which he had maintain'd in a long Reign, by all most execrable Arts of Violence and Fraud. Thus he lay'd the Fo dations, if I may speak so, of the Ruin of a great and potent! narchy he found in the height of Glory and Reputation above in the Universe; and which has fince, under the Reign of his fee Successors, dwindled into so mean a Condition, as in our Days be us'd with a Contempt only due to Slaves; whereas had thefet great and warlike Nations, commanding the Treasures of the Ind ffenti ten united and conjoin'd by their natural Scituation, it had not been the reach of humane Wildom to foresce how far they might have one in the pursuit of their ambitious Project of Universal Monarby, if possibly there were not an infurmountable Bar on the fide of haven; God having no where commission'd any of his Prophets to metel a fifth Monarchy, as they did the great ones many Years bebre they had a Being in the World. It was upon the Declention and win of the Spanish Greatness, that the Exaltation of France and the foule of Bourbon took their Beginnings, and under the Reigns of e respective Kings of that Family gave Birth to the same ambiti-Enterprize when the others had laid it down; but as it was form'd on the same wicked Principles of Violence and Oppression, it has leas'd the great and good God (in whose Hands alone is the secret ipolition of all Powers and Kingdoms upon Earth) to return them ith the same Disgrace and Disappointment, as the just Reward of infolent Presumption that dar'd to combat the Decrees of an unarchable and irrefishible Providence; This France has presum'd to mempt barely upon the Funds of its own Riches and Power, during plat Century; and in our Days we have been permitted to fee both evanity and wickedness of the Attempt, in the justice and severity the Punishment that has attended it; yet we may make this just election from what they have been able to perform by the strength their own fingle Puissance, what they may and will be capable in of undertaking in the space of a very few Years, when uniand in Conjunction with Spain, and supported by the inexhauble Treasures of the Indies.

This is what our worthy High-Church Politicians will neither fee monfider; gratify but their own ambitious Defigns, secure to um by a vile and flavish Indulgence the Possession of their ill-got ower, permit them to establish their worthless Families, though on the Ruin of the Honour, Liberties and Religion of their Counand they will never trouble themselves what shall become, either the prefent or for the future, of their own or any body's elfe; but prove past Dispute, that the whole Defign of the Faction is no her End than to put France in a Condition sooner or later to esta-In the Pretender on the Throne of great Britain, in whom alone y place all their Hope and Confidence of their Perpetuity and Effamment; for what may not such noble English Protestant Patriots the from the Gratitude and Sincerity of a Popish Prince, bred up the Maxims and known Probity of France, who shall be rederable them for the Possession of a Crown invested with a divine, hereary, indefeafible and unalienable Right? I only defire my honest grifor their famous Desertion of the Confederates; for the base ungenerous Contrivance of a separate Peace; for the private and derhand Negotiation of it without the Knowledge and Confent of reft; for the most unrighteous and scandalous Concession of in and the Indies to a Branch of the House of Bourbon, to the thonour of her Majesty, and so infinitely detrimental, nay, ruinous the Interest of the Nation, in the open Violation of the publick

Faith and folemnity of Engagements: For if France be not reduce and humbled by the Valour and good Fortune of the Confederate who fhall be once more under the necessity of uniting again for the End; or if by fuch a separate Peace with Great-Britain, or even a necessitated and constrain'd general One, she is enabled to pre Serve her Affairs in the Condition they are at present, as she will Mistress of those Funds of Treasure of the Indies that furnish to the Necessities and Luxury of the whole Universe, what is there the an ambirious Prince is not capable of when supported by them in find a Superfluity, as by a Management tolerably frugal can never beg hausted? What Security in such a Scituation for the Peace and Sec rity of Europe, from the haughty Insolence of a Man, whose Polit has no other Rule than his fingle Will, or his Ambition any Refirm of Faith or Honour? Is it not evident as the Sun at Noon, that if has time to breathe, he will in a very short space of time recruit broken shatter'd Forces to a degree of Ability once more, possibly his own time, to invade the Dominions and Liberties of his unequ Neighbours? Or at least it may be in the Power of his Grandson, the first Prince of his Family, of a daring and active Spirit, to attem it? Shall he not be able in a very few Years to fill all the Ports France and Spain, and cover the Seas with fuch numerous and por erful Fleets as will be infinitely superior to all the maritime Powe not only of Europe, but the Universe? Is there any thing moreth the fingle Barrier of the Pirenees, of which he will ever be in Poll fion, that separates the two Kingdoms, and which enables the mutually upon any important Occasion to maintain an Intercour and furnish each other with Forces and Assistance as may be though necessary for the Execution of whatever they shall think fit in or cert to undertake? If the fingle Power of France has all the Century been superior to any one Prince, nay, even to those of Europe together, will it not be infinitely more so by the Union Spain and the Indies? Have we not been lavishing away for the four and twenty Years our Blood and Treasure, to reduce the ex bitant Power of France alone? And is not that same Power, or least will it not in a very little time be infinitely more exorbitant the ever it was before by this fatal Conjunction? Where in such a C shall be found the Forces to oppose them united, when they st conspire and joyn together, as they certainly will, to compleat Conquest, and in that the Slavery, with the whole Protestant Reli on and Interest of all Europe?

What Security in such an excess and superiority of Power for Preservation of foreign Trade either to the British or Dutch, whis as it were the Soul and Life-blood of both their Constitution Can any Man out of Bedlam believe that they will not ingross whole to their own Nation, and only leave the Rests to them as the Slaves, which they cannot tell how to imploy or dispose of to the own Advantage? The Dutch, as formidable as they are in the Indies, cannot long promise themselves those Possessions they have with so much Industry and Valour acquir'd there; nor the Brit with their Fort St. George and other sew Places of small important

all not long boast of the Possession of those, though under the Adinffration of the contemptible Chevalier of that Name; nor of as nch Pepper from thence of their own, as will feason a Protestant unch of Venison, but by the good grace and condescension of their with imperious French Masters, when by our Treachery or Cowice we shall have made them so. Our Trade with spain, which ever been esteem'd the most beneficial Branch of what we had by Woollen Manufactures of all forts, by this short Union of the Kingdoms, is already fallen less by half value than it has been merly, before the French found the way to get both our Wool theirs which they have wrought up to a Perfection equal to our m, and which they can afford to undersel by the Ease of Transporion over the Mountains and the Neighbourhood of all the Corners that Kingdom: What share of it shall we then expect to have, or at profit to reap from it, when they shall no more be consider'd two, but in all Political Respects and Interests but one and the ne Kingdom? Our Commerce to the Levant, which is of as great portance, will inevitably run the same Destiny, and be either wholly or'd us by the Scituation of their Ports, or render'd fo little valuby the nearer Neighbourhood of the French, who for the same aon of less expensive Transportation will be able to undersel us. tit will never answer the Trouble and Charge of carrying it on. every same will be our Case in the whole Extent of their Westis, where they will be alone the absolute and uncontroleable Man; and if they have so much Goodness and Indulgence, as to suffer hambly to carry our Commodities to any or all of these Places, may depend upon it, that it shall not be till they have glutted the riets with the Vent of their own; and in such Case we shall be der the necessity either to sell our Goods and Manufactures to loss, lave them there to rot in our Storehouses. It will indeed be a rious and advantageous Change for Great Britain and Holland, from ower of Commanding, which they had acquir'd by the Strength Reputation of their Arms, to dwindle into that of being Comaded, and crouch like Slaves begging the Permission to trade from r new insolent Masters they once had it in their Power to have upled under their Feet. These are some, amongst an infinite numof others, of the most material and undeniable Consequences of Union of France and Spain; and I challenge the most frontless Church Politician, to demonstrate with the same Certainty, the like in all or any particular Instance can be deduc'd, or raally be suppos'd to follow, from the Restitution of them to the that Heir of the House of Austria, though at the same time Emor of Germany: From the former all that I have mention'd, and busand times more, is inseparable and unavoidable, from the latas absolutely impossible.

tis with more Pity and Compassion than Resentment, that a reads the seeble and despicable Reasonings upon this Subject the Partisans of the Faction, who pretend to maintain the Cause France against that of Germany, but more especially of such of m, who have either out of Pique or views of Interest quitted the honest Party they were formerly ingag'd in, for the Service of prevailing Faction; there is so remarkable a Difference in their mar ner of Arguing on the one fide and the other, that it is difficult conceive them to be the Productions of the same Men; thought Reason of it is obvious enough, because on the one side they please the Interests of Truth, Justice and Reason, which are ever easily d fended, and best by the plainness and simplicity of Reasoning, bon the other they ingage their Wits in the support of Falichoo Error and Absurdities, which must ever be necessarily attended the artful and laborious perplexities of Disguise and Insincerity; a to mention the more frivolous ones of what Men call Confcience which to Mercenaries, who content their Avarice at the expence their Judgment and Honour, are of no confideration in the mode High-Church Divinity. Amongst the rest, the Author of the Revi has taken much Pains to tell us of the dreadful Inconveniencies the threaten all the World from the addition of Spain and the India an Emperor of Germany; but is as filent as if he had been in Grave, upon those that must inevitably follow from their Union w a King of France. In like manner he expatiates largely upon dismal Consequences to the Dutch, both in respect of their Libe and Navigation, in Case of a Rupture and War with England, wi out taking the least Notice in the World of the Traytors, who n be the unhappy Contrivers and Occasion of such a Misfortune if should have happen'd, or who should have drawn the Guilt of the Christian Blood and Treasure that must have been expended the Profecution of it. If as that Author gravely urges by any Si lation of the first Grand Alliance, it was provided that the Monard of Spain should never be united to an Emperor of Germany; le be confider'd, that the Father being then in Possession, and the eld Son King of the Romans, and therefore presumptive Emperor, it from that thought reasonable to confer it upon the youngelt Prince Charles; and as there was at that time a very fair Profest a numerous Issue of that Imperial House, there was no Man could of an Opinion, but that it would be much more for the Peace Happiness of Europe, in order to form a just Ballance of Power, Spain and the Indies should be rather confer'd upon a younger Bra of that Family, than united with the Imperial One upon the H of any single Person of it; 'tis granted, but what then? Is it in hence reasonable to conclude, that if it should please God, as he fince done, to reduce that Illustrious Family to a fingle Person, therefore he should be debar'd the Possession of his natural and dubitable Right, only to confer it upon a Prince of an Enem House already too great, and who has no more pretention of Ri to it than any High-Churchman in England, who has contributed make him the Present of it, and from whom the most dangerous terrible ill Consequences are unavoidable? This was the Case of Family in the Division of those Powers by Charles the Fifth: It is low'd, that it was then thought inconvenient to leave those twog Nations united in the possession of one Man, and therefore the ther Ferdinand was prefer'd to the Empire, and the Son Philip wond, as has been faid, had in Partage Spain and the Indies; but was at the same time expresty stipulated, that in Case of failure of he either in the one or other Branch of the Family, that they should the remain and be united in the Male Line of the Survivors; fince ides the natural Right of that Family, it was judg'd impossible that fame Dangers should accrue to Europe from such an Union, as m one with the House of France. And if in the second Grand ince it is expresly provided, that the Crown of Spain and the he should not be united on the Head of an Emperor of Germany, was for the same Reason, because there was little or no likelihood tit should ever bappen to be so; but it cannot be suppos'd that if hould, that therefore the Prince should toose a Right indisputably his family. But supposing all that he and all such mercenary iblers of the Faction advance were true, that they fay in Disfavour Prejudice to the natural and legal Rights of the House of Austria, at can rationally be concluded from thence in favour of the House France? How do they pretend to make out that the Ballance of wer they banter us with is procur'd by fuch a Junction? Either must allow themselves to be out of their Wits, or the most mes of Mankind, or at least believe us to be so; and as we think felves to be unconcern'd in the latter part of the Character, we miliaken if they don't find themselves in an Error with respect to former. All the World knows, that in Case of failure of the Male thes of the present Imperial Family, the House of Savoy has an puttionable Right to the Crown of Spain and the Indies, accordto the ordinary Course of hereditary Kingdoms founded upon minity of Blood; and the Princes Electors in such a Case left at my, by the fundamental Laws of their Conflitution, to elect whom please, and think most worthy for the common Good, to be at Head of the Empire. What then is all this to France, which has manner of Right either to the one or the other; yet as Things been manag'd by us, is in a fair Way upon the Death of the ant Emperor without Isue, to be in possession of them both; for got the One by Fraud, so he will the Other by Violence and pation, which we all know are two divine unquestionable s of the modern High-Church Policy: Why then must France grandiz'd by so immense a Strength and Surcrease of Riches and hace, which never imploy'd what was fingly and properly her but to the certain Disturbance of the Peace and Tranquility, even total Subversion of the Liberties, the Protestant Religion interest of all Europe? In like manner, if in the seventh Artithe first Treaty of Partition, and the ninth of the Second, the provision is made to prevent the Union of the Imperial and tit may reasonably be presum'd that the wise Author of the Reor any other of his Faction, dare not have the Impudence to main that it was ever the Intention of King William, for whom ace had fo great a Veneration, or of any other Princes or Powers ctwog filted in that Treaty, that they should therefore ever be united re the Philip Possession of any one of the Family of Bourbon, who some Sect time or other may very probably happen to wear that of France at a same time, to the wonderful Commodity, no doubt, of all Europe nay, or that they should ever fall into the Hands of any Prince that Family at all; for there are none that we know of, but our Hig Church Disposers of Crowns, (who have just as much Right to so as their Father the Pope) who can reconcile the incompara Nonsense of reducing an exorbitant Power, by augmenting it with Puissance superior to its own; or who have the Art of preservin Ballance of Power, by making one Family too Potent and Formic ble for all the rest of the Princes of Europe together, which we have highling these three or four and twenty Years to bring do from that degree of Exorbitancy it was arrived at, upon the Fund its own natural Strength and Capacity; but I forget that there is be any thing impossible to those great Men who have found out admirable Secret of securing the Liberties of England, by subject her to the Power of France, or of securing a Protestant Church a

Religion under the Domination of a Popish Pretender. I know that Author to be a sensible and judicious Man; for Honesty and Integrity let him defend them as well as he can; an believe too, that no Man in England knows better than he by w Necessity our great King William was in a manner compell'd to into those Measures of the Partition Treaty. The Tory Faction, wh had along labour'd hard to embarass and perplex the whole course his auspicious Government, as well as by the foulest and most m cious Infinuations to tarnish the Glory of it, were at that time p erful enough in the House to hinder the giving the Supplies in portion to the necessities of the War, which they thought alread too tedious and expensive, so too far carry'd on for the Designs were then meditating, and at this day ripening into Execution; faw too large Steps made every Campaign towards reducing Power of France, upon which all their confidence of Success folely founded; they forelaw that the Continuance of the War like to terminate in the utter Reduction of it, and in that the lo their Hopes of ever introducing their beloved Pretender, which well enough knew it was impossible for them ever to effect wit their Affistance. This made them to compel that great King to an end to that War against his Judgment, by refusing him the M to continue it longer with Honour for the general Safety. Fr though confiderably abated both in her Power and Reputation, yet in a Condition to have carried it on a good while longer. Chi the Fourth of Spain, naturally a weak and unactive Prince, wa duc'd to so low and languishing a Condition of Health, as to de of Lite: This was at that time the Scituation of the Affairs of respective Princes concern'd in this famous Treaty of Partition. I not here undertake to determine by what Authority two or great and powerful Princes assume to themselves a Liberty of poling of the Rights and Possessions of their Neighbours wit their Participation, and principally without the Content and Con rence of the Courts and general States of a Nation; but this I pretend to maintain, that a Prince or next Heir dispoil'd and in at th

his legal and natural Rights by any fuch foreign Disposition, is his liberty to have recourse to all the Means that God and Nan, his People and Confederates shall put into his Hands, to renet and defend them; nor do the Stipulations and Agreements ween such Powers in the least bind or affect others, who are ther consulted, or so much as acquainted with them, who yes whave an equal Interest to have a watchful Eye to the common ed upon fo important and delicate a Conjuncture; and as at that the King of Spain's Death was in a short time expected, it sthought necessary to form such a Ballance of Power by such Disposition of his Estates, as should be esteemed the best and on-Espedient to prevent Disorders, and thereby secure the Peace Tranquility of the rest of Christendom. A Treaty then of Paron was enter'd into and concluded, by which the Spanish Monarwas divided; Spain, the Indies, and the Isles of the Mediteun granted to Prince Charles, the younger Brother of the ale of Austria; the Spanish Netherlands, all the Fiefs of the Emin Italy, Milan and the Kingdom of Naples to the Emperor; hand some Parts of Tuscany, and other Parts of Italy to France. was then look'd upon as the only Expedient to prevent the afusions might inevitably happen upon the Death of the King of which must have ingag'd on one side or the other all the rest, beir Interest or Inclinations might direct them; and it was fursprovided, that in case of failure of Issue of King Charles, the nde of Savoy should succeed to the Crown of Spain as next in tension by Proximity of Blood. Now if it be here acknowd, that it was not then conceiv'd convenient for the publick of Europe, that an Emperor of Germany should not be at ame time in the Possession of the Kingdoms of Spain and the in; I think we may with much reason conclude, that it never s or could be thought convenient to unite them to the Crown France, or any Branch of that Family: And I further affirm, the Spaniards, and especially the Grandees and Nobility, so ous of the Honour of their Monarchy, and who were so exasated at the dismembring of it, tho' in the most part to the Faof their below'd House of Austria, and infinitely more so at It was conceded to their mortal Enemy the French, were the People in the World that would have made a Present of the ole, or any one Province of it to them, if they had not been ay'd into it afterwards; and I am very positive, that there is Prince, Nation or People in Europe of any Confideration, (the wh and our High-Church Faction only excepted) that would rather see and contribute to procure that intire Monarchy to Emperor of Germany, even tho' without any Right, than to a of France, or any Branch of his Family, who we are fure has Tis demonstrable, that our glorious King William enter'd nd Con this Treaty with his natural Wisdom and Fore fight, as the t this I that the necessity of the Times, and the nice and critical Cirand in ulances of Affairs would admit of, and with his natural Honesty and Sincerity to defend and preserve it; and it is as demo firable, that the King of France, with his natural Prefidiousne never design'd to observe or perform one single Article of it; it is sufficiently known to all the World, that at the very same i that his Ministers were treating with those of England and I land concerning this Partition, his Emissaries in Spain, with Cardinal Portocarero and other falle Friends to their Country had corrupted, were hatching the infamous Forgery of a Willia should at once put the whole in the Possession of a Grandson France: The Event in a fhort time justify'd the Truth of all t for the King of Spain was no sooner in his Grave, but the D of Anjou was settled in the Throne. Adieu Partition, adieu Fr. Faith, farewel French Honour; and at the same time the Pre der, in the Contempt and Violation of the Treaty of Rywick, lickly acknowledg'd and declar'd King of England; and it thought enough to fram the World and banter all the Frince Europe with the laudable Cant of their High-Church Casuists stinction, of observing the Spirit, and with a very safe Consci breaking the Letter of the fame Treaty.

The Resentment then of the Affront offer'd to the Majest our glorious King and Honour of our Nation, the Justice of rev ing the Treachery of a perfidious and faithless Tyrant, the Ref tion of the Usurp'd Dominions of the lawful Heir, and the Re ction of the exorbitant Power of France, were the only just tives of recommencing a War, which by the visible Favour of upon our Arms, had led us to the very Eve of reaping the Frui all our Expence of Blood and Treasure; when all of a sudden the Name of Wonder and High-Church! France was no furthe be humbled; there had been enough done of all conscience, one may, without the Danger of Perjury, venture to sweat great deal too much in their Opinions, and for their Defigns, every honest Englishman hopes there shall be more; for if we ! all this while been fighting to reduce this excessive overgrown P er of France, why were we debar'd from finishing to great, necessary and so glorious'a Work, when we had it in our H to do fo effectually? If we have been fighting all this while for Restitution of the Spanish Monarchy to the rightful Heir of House of Austria, how came they, as it were in the twinkling an Eye, to be permitted peaceable to remain in the Hands of a furper, without any Title but that of Forgery and Violence? in the Name of Faction is this preserving the Ballance of Po when with one Dash of a Pen we give to France what we have these twelve bloody Years been forcing from her by the Edge of Sword, the less powerful and pernicious Weapon of the two, thereby made the present King ten times more capable of insla the rest of Europe, than either he or any of his Fredecessors been, since by their arbitrary and despotical Power they have duc'd to a miserable Servitude their own free and generous Peo One may justly admire with what Impudence the wretched I of mercenary Scriblers of the Faction can dare to impose t

Wretched and Infamous! which of the Confederates m this just and honourable War ever entertain'd the least Thought doing so? Tho' if they had delign'd the former, they would have much better Reasons to have urg'd for the Attempt, than he for the Defence of their Cause; but with the humble Leave of modern Politicks, may not the exorbitant Power of a faithless ant be reduc'd and brought to Limits without dethroning the g? May there not be Bounds prescrib'd to his destructive Amand thereby the Liberties of an oppress'd People restor'd, bout destroying the Kingdom? Have they not seen both these gradone in their own Country, and yet the Honour and Liberof it remain in their Intire? Will these hard Heads never learn, Kingdoms constituted upon Freedom and Consent, neither are her can be the Kings but the Peoples, who, as Freemen, are the prietors of it? We have never been told, or dream'd of it till the day, that the Confederates fought for the Conquest of France, wreduce and humble it; not to inrich themselves with her Spoils, for future Security to themselves, and recovering every one his that in the long Course of a successful Tyranny had been torn them by the laudable Arts of Treachery and Violence. Englishmen talk at this leud and extravagant rate, one would tade them already French Slaves, if we did not know them the High Church Englishmen, which in our Language are Bem of God and their Country; who, as they are debauch'd with th Principles and Maxims of Government, which we call Tyy, would easily be prevaild with for their Interest to profess French Religion too, which we call Popery.

Profecution of to commendable a Defign, and it is to be hop'd wi not be the last; --- and the other of an Order, that upon the like Occasion has furnish'd the Nation with an Example, and taue them some time or other what to do again upon the like Occasion and may it be the Fate of all Orders and Degrees of fuch amon us as carry on the same traiterous Designs: Yet whatever may the Opinion of these worthy High-Church Politicians, I will re lutely maintain against all and every of them, that it is much me just, nay more indispensably necessary for a conquering Confede cy, the greatest part of them of the reform'd Religion, upon conclusion of a just and necessary War, to retrieve a great and no Nation, (reduc'd by an usurp'd, arbitrary and tyrannical Power the Miferies of an unsupportable Slavery) to reestablish the banil reform'd Religion, and restore the Honour of a great and noble! tion, in the free Exercise of their ant ent and original Liberties on the fundamental Principles of their Constitution, than for two or three Princes and Powers, how Just and Vertuous for their Intentions and Inclinations may be both in the Defign and ecution, to take upon them to dispose of the Dominions of anot Prince's legal and unquestionable Inheritance without his Part pation and Consent; for the former is in its nature a good commendable Work, founded upon the eternal Principles of R fon and Equity, but the latter is liable to import something wh I forbear to mention, because of the Sharea glorious King ha it, whose Vertue and Memory I shall ever venerate, as much detest the Perfidy of a Tyrant that fool'd both him and all World besides; nay I hardily affirm, that till that noble King be reinstated in the Possession and Exercise of their original F dom and their banish'd Religion, and their Monarch reduc'd w in the Limits of his first Institution, that it will be utterly im fible to expect any Peace or Security to the rest of Europe longer, than till France wants the Power to disturb and inter them; for in that natural Scituation of the liberty of the Pe and limitation of the Prince, tho' they were much more for dable than ever they have been, there would be nothing of I ger to apprehend; but from the excels of Power and Ambi of an absolute Prince, whose Will alone is both the Motive Rule of all his Actions, and from the servile Obedience and mission of the Subject, the worst of Evils is to be fear'd.

We allow it to be true what the Author of the Review that we fought to put the Spanish Monarchy in the Possession the House of Austria, whilst there was a Male Branch of the being to receive and injoy it; and no Man in his senses then a have been of any other Opinion, but that Charles the Third of at least to have had the greatest part of it, viz. Spain and the dies: All this, he says, is granted; but we never fought with such Design, or with the least thought of giving the Monarch Spain into the Hands of an Emperor of Germany, for this had to slay one Monster and erect another more dangerous in his rovery notable, here we have one side of the Question very state of the same of the same of the Question very state.

A fair Enemy who for contended for Truth, would have well weighed and exaid both fides of a Controversy of this moment to all Europe our selves, and have remembred that, qui aliquid statuit parte ulita altera in justum facit; but with these honest Men it is not much what is right or what is wrong that is their business, but at is for the Interest of their Faction whether it be right or mg; for there is not one Syllable in all this Jargon of those dan-Possessions and Disorders that must ineviably follow from Possession of that Crown by any Branch of the House of Bourand especially if that Person should happen to wear that of me at the same time, which in case that Family should be reto a fingle Person must necessarily follow; and we should glad to be inform'd by the wifest of all these High-Churchmen Power under Heaven could prevent it: If therefore such care been taken by former Stipulations, that the Imperial and Spa-Crowns should never be united upon the Head of one of that which has the legal Right to them, for fear of making that make too exorbitantly great; by what new Stretch of High-Ich wonder-working Policy have we been prevail'd upon to bring go into fuch a Scituation, that we possibly very soon shall see both united upon the same Person of the House of Bourbon, all the World knows have no Right at all? For if the most on Act of Renunciation of all the Spanish Dominions for ever, tat the Treaty of the Pirenees, upon the Marriage of the pre-French King with the Infanta of Spain be good, and of any then it is most certain, that the Princes of France by that of tha mage have no more Right to that Crown than I have; but if s then c not, with what impudence do these Men dare to banter and Third of the World again with the Renunciation of the Crown of France. and the Philip Duke of Anjon? the Holy Evangelists could devise, how can any Man alive support that twelve Years ago they should be so chang'd in respect to the most mortal Enemies, as to admit one of them into the Thro if he had not been impos'd and obtruded upon them by Fra and supported in his Usurpation ever fince by Violence and fole Power of the French Arms? If that Act of Renunciation co not bind the Grand father, how can the like be suppos'd to he any greater influence upon the Grand-fon? Do we imagine t he will want High-Church Casuists, who will tell him, that the he may bind himself, he cannot Renounce for his Descendants? can any Englishman be such a Sot as to believe, that in case present Usurper, the Duke of Anjou, should survive the rest of Family, that he will ever Renounce to such a Kingdom as Fra to which he has a fort of Right, for the Kingdom of Spain, e with those of the Indies, to which he has none at all? And if will not, we defire his High-Church Friends amongst us who me him what he is, to consult their Oracle, and tell us who shall of pel him.

But to show the lend Prevarication and study'd Perfidious of the French King and the Faction, in respect of this ridiculous nunciation of the Crown and Kingdom of France by the Duke Anjou; I desire my honest Countrymen seriously to restect u what they have been made to know of late, and we knew ! enough ago, that at the very same time that he was sent to t Follettion of the Crown of Spain, it was expresly provided by Declaration of the French King, that in case the rest of the Fa ly should fail, and he should remain the sole Survivor, that in I case he should not be cut off from his Right and Pretentions to Crown of France; which Declaration was formally enregisted the Parliament of Paris. Now I think it behoves every honest I lift Man to inquire a little into this Matter, and consider the ture of this Declaration of the Grand-father, which expresly vides, that the Duke of Anjou shall by no means, or in any m ner, or by no Act of his, forfeit or lose his Right to the pare Kingdom in the case before mention'd, and compare it with notable Renunciation of the Duke of Anjon to France, by w he swears he will; if so leud and bare fac'd a Collusion in the of the Sun is not sufficient to open the Eyes and discover the tha leis Perjury of the French and Spanish Kings and the execrable Ti son of the English Faction, I know no Nation under Heaven so much deserves to be Slaves as Great Britain. Nay upon the position that the two Crowns continue in distinct Branches of Family, the Danger will nevertheless be the same to Europe, cause all the World knows that is not wilfully blind, that in ef Spain and the Indies, with all their Dependencies, as to their mies, their Finances, their Trade, their Policy and Maxims of vernment and every material Branch, are already under the fole rection and Management of the Court of France, and are effect ally ingag'd in the pursuit of the same Interests and Designs; which of our wifest High Church Traytors will let us into fuppo to th ret, when or how, or by what means they shall ever be divi-, at least till the great Bufiness of inflaving all the rest of Europe accomplished: What then are we to expect if ever the two owns shall come to be united on the Head of a single Person that Family, which is so far from being impossible, that there very great probability that it will be fo, and that in a very short too? For they who are the least acquainted with the later Maxand Policy of France, know that nothing is impracticable with who know no other Rule of Morality than their Ambition, Religion than their Interest. What then will the Addition of Crown of Spain to an Emperor of Germany make him only too bitantly formidable to all Christendom, and a King of France 6? Yes most certainly, according to the profligate Reasonings. High Church Faction, who are irreconcileable Enemies to the and most faithful and obsequious Friends to the other, tho' e inevitable Ruin and Slavery of their native Country.

at laying afide this notable Scheme of theirs, of debarring the Prince of his legal Right, and supporting the other in his inous Ulurpation; let us bring this Matter to a short and reason-Iffie: Since these Men in all their Writings and Discourses uphis Subject pretended to have nothing more at Heart than the lithing a just Ballance of Power; he that should have propos'd em to apply themselves in good earnest to have obtain'd it, by galide the Pretenders both of one Family and the other, and ing the Family of Savoy upon the Throne of Spain, who after Imperial Line are next in Blood, would have propos'd an Exmt, (which tho' there had been some Injustice in it to the t of Austria, yet there was none to that of France) much more nal and practicable than this at present; but which we are they would never have consented to, the never so much for publick Good, for a reason which with them has something of invincible, and that is, because they knew very well, that er the Emperor or the House of Savoy would ever have asor incouraged them to have established their Pretender on Inrone of Great Britain, which they are as certain that their and grateful Friends of the Flouse of Bourbon will. And here, the Subject of the Duke of Savoy, one cannot sufficiently ador be surprized at his Conduct in the Steps he has made since been detach'd from the Confederacy, especially such as are lung acquainted either with the Genius of his Family, or the al Qualities, the Wisdom, the Valour and the Ambition of In: Tis certain that there is but few Princes, if any in Christwho better understand their Interest and the Means to puryet what I am going to offer in relation to the Empire and will convince us, that he has in his late Proceedings gone the Rules of all Policy, and has given us a memorable Inthat the most irregular Ambition is better contented with a at Advantage, tho' inconfiderable, than with the Views of Is distant, tho' without Proportion greater; and I am firmly opinion, that we shall see him, as a Punishment for his T 4 weakness, and that in a very little time, just such another King of Sicily as he is of Cyprus; for let any Man confider what Viewsthe present Duke of Savoy had upon the Crown of Spain in respect of the Family of the Emperor, and those he has in regard to that o France. By the infamous Forgery of Portscarero's Will the Houle of Savoy is cut off from all Pretentions to the Succession, excep in case of failure of Issue Male of the present Duke of Anjou, o any other Branch of the Bourbon Family, that by the same An of Fraud or Violence may be foisted into the Throne after him The Duke of Anjon is young, he has already three Children, wi questionless marry again if he lives, and probabiy may have ma ny more. There is still a Child Dauphin in France, and was Brother, the Duke of Berry, who if he had liv'd might be suppos' to have many too. These seem'd all to be so many insuperable Obstacles, while they have a Being to the Succession of the Fami ly of Savey to Spain, as hardly leave the least Ground to hope ever arriving at it himself or any of his Family after him, une the Hand of God, that has appear'd too terribly of late against the Family of France, shall please to finish what he has begun, which is folely in the Hand of his Providence. On the other fide, il present Emperor, tho' young, is the last of the Male Line of it Imperial Family, has yet no Child, and 'tis uncertain whether ev he shall or no; in case of his Death, and failure of Issue Males Duke of Savoy is the immediate Heir in Right of Blood. This b ing so, let it be then consider'd whether a Wise, Valiant and At bitious Prince ought not at least to have attach'd himself to t Interests of an Emperor, who gives him so near and short a Pr spect of the Monarchy of Spain, (especially since he had content ed him in all his Demands in Italy) rather than to that of a Ki of France, whose yet numerous and growing Progeny throws h at a distance from it next to infinite; on one side there seems be but a fingle Step left him to make into the most powerful Thro of the Universe, in the other so many as seem unsurmontal But to return from this small Digression I thought seasonable u on the surprizing Measures this Prince has of late taken: I hope will appear from what has been said, and from the Reasons I ha alledg'd, which without Arrogance the Adversary will hardly able to answer or confute, that either from the Union of the perial and Spanish Crowns upon one Head, or from their contin ing separate in two Branches of the House of Austria, if there h remain'd more, it is absolutely impossible that the same Dang and Inconveniences should threaten the Feace and Liberties of rope, (as well from the distant Scituation of their Deminions from the mix'd and limited Constitution of the Empire compo of different Independent Sovereigns, who frequently have differ Views and Interests, want of Ports of and Shipping, and from ther Important Considerations dream'd of by the Faction) t shall certainly accrue to it, if they are allow'd to continue in I Possession, tho' of two distinct Branches, of the House of Fra but more unavoidably when both in the Hands of any one Price of it, who may be at the same time at the Head of the two greatest and most powerful People in Christendom, separated only by one great Wall of Mountains of which they will always either ingly or jointly be the Masters, abounding in a multitude of Subjects, abounding with the most commodious Ports in the Ocean, and supported by the inexhaustible Treasures of the Indies; and whether it is possible there should be any manner of proportion, a fear of an Exorbitancy of Power from the Junction of the Monarchy of Spain with the House of Austria as with that of France, consider'd under their respective Circumstances, I leave to every modest and reasonable High-Churchman, if there be any such, to consider, and to all my other sensible and honest Countrymen, to

But further; 'tis certain that all Trade, and especially foreign commerce, depends absolutely upon the Power of a maritime Peole, who only can be capable of carrying it on to any great Extent Profit or Reputation; and I think in this respect it is evident to demonstration that our Commerce would have been infinitely etter secur'd and provided for by cultivating a strice Friendship nd Alliance with the Emperor if he were posses'd of Spain and he Indies, who it is evident, for want of Shipping of his own, ould never be in a Condition to carry it on to any great Degree inself, or to give any Disturbance or Interruption to us who can, han by leaving them in any Branch of the House of France, whose percet it will be eternally to disturb and interrupt it; for in a parcular manner the English and the Dutch, who are the two greattrading People in the World, would by the former means be the he Masters of all that is most valuable of it in the Earth, and are only what share of it they please to the French, and other untime Powers to glean after them; whereas if the French are after'd to remain Masters of Spain, there is no Man who does not t, that in the space of a very few Years they must become infiitely more powerful at Sea than ever they have been fince they were Nation; and as an Infinity of Riches well manag'd will make iem in proportion powerful, we are but too well acquainted with Ambition of their Princes, the Maxims of their Policy, and Genius of their People, not to know that in respect of Trade by will not fail to ingross to themselves all that is worth ingrosng, and leave only just so much to their gracious English Benefafors as they shall not know how to imploy or make use of themives. Complaints and Reproaches, the feeble Consolation of Fools ad the Impotent, will then have no effect upon a Prince, who nows not what Gratitude, publick Faith, or royal Promiles are; will despise and laugh at our simple Credulity, but never redress te Grievance, or fuffer us to be in a Condition to do it our felves; cause his Force and Power at Sea must necessarily in a little time infinitely superiour not only to ours, but the Dutch and all the ther Maritime Potentates together. This is an undeniable Conquence, for the Riches of the Indies joyn'd to those of their own puntries, will soon enable them to build what numbers of Ships they please: The Ports of France and Spain shall be crowded with Armado's that will be invincible to any Power under Heaven; the Seas shall swarm and be cover'd with Armaments, that shall command without control in every Corner of the vast Extent of them; the English and Dutch Flags shall strike every where to the trium. phant sun of France; we shall be forc'd to cringe and beg for a share of Trade we once had it in our Power to command: The Riches, the Honour, the Reputation that resulted to us from it shall be for ever lost; and what is, or ought to be infinitely deare, the Religion and Liberty of a People accustom'd to give Laws and to command, shall run the the same Fate; yet this shall unavoidably be the case from the Scituation our persidious High Church Fastion have reduc'd us to, by the satal Addition of Spain and the India.

In a Word, the Issue and Result of Things that must necessarily have fucceeded from the union and continuance of that Crown in the Houle of Austria, even upon the Head of an Emperor of Germany, mult of necessity have all turn'd to the Honour and Advantage of these two potent maritime Powers; for if the Emperor had been once Master and in peaceable Possession of Spain and the Indies, he must have been oblig'd folely for it to the affiftance and concurrence of the Confede racy; and particularly, the two maritime Powers, the English and the Dutch, without which it must ever have been impossible to se cure to himself the Possession of them, or to have defended them from the Infults of the French; from whence we may draw an unanswerable Argument, that as he could never have pretended to recover them, or to preserve them when recover'd, but by keeping up an inviolable Friendship and Alliance with them; so would he never have been able to have employ'd the Strength and Riches that would have accru'd to him by that Possession, to the Disturbance or Dilad vantage of the one or the other. I purposely wave the Obligations of acknowledgment and ingratitude for so important a Service, because they are are not always of that weight with Princes as they ough to be, and turn my Thoughts only to the fide of Interest which is the principal Motive and Measure of all publick Affairs between contending Powers; and in this Respect I maintain that the Emperor could never have had it in his Power, if he should have been willing, to have disturbed the Peace and Tranquility of Christendom; but the particularly, the English and Dutch must have been the sole Master of all the most important Trade in the Universe. This must neces farily have follow'd from the nature of his Obligations, founded purely upon Interest and the preservation of his State; for that Prince who cannot conquer for or by himfelf, will never be able for or by him felf to preferve what has been folely conquer'd for him by the affistance of his Allies. This is what I call an eternal and indispensable Obligation founded upon Interest of State; fince the Assistance of the same Allies will ever be as absolutely necessary to the preservation of his Conquests, as it was at first to make them; and this Conside sation must as certainly have oblig'd or compell'd him to have cultithe Friendship and Alliance which he finds always necessary for rith

his cwn Security a for as by the natural Scituation of his Empire in Germany, it is absolutely impossible for him ever to be strong enough Shipping, either for the Security of Spain, or carrying on the rade of the Indies, he will ever be under the necessity of obliging nd keeping a firm and constant Correspondence and Amity with hole friendly maritime Powers that can; which as the English and putch are those only, it must unavoidably follow that they alone hould have reap'd the greatest Fruit and Benefit of all the Trade that epends upon his Dominions, which in effect is the best and most va-uble, and to us the most beneficial of the whole World, since he by no Means, or ever can be in a Capacity to manage and carry it aby his own Subjects of either of his Dominions; and this I think as plain as the Sun: For Port Makon and Gibraltar in the Medimanean, which we have conquer'd, would not only have been left all security in our Hands, but Cadiz, and others in Spain, and that others in any part of his more distant Dominions, which the Confederates might have thought reasonable to demand, would withstall doubt have been to too; not only for the Security and Inlargeont of their Traffick, but for the Reimbursement of those immense spences they may have been at for the Recovery of them. By this cans, in a short time, the English and Dutch would have been inmnify'd; their Wealth and Treasure been increas'd to infinite; the mour and Reputation of their Nations perpetuated; France humed; all Europe without Fears, Peaceable and Undisturb'd; the Prinsthat compose it, in Ease, Plenty and Security; the Emperor freed om all Apprehensions of further Danger from its old Enemy; Happy. sure, Contented; no fign or reason of Disgust or Discontent in instendom, but in Lewis the Fourteenth, his Grandson in Spain, their ne Tool the Pretender, the Pope, the Jesuits, the Faction and the ar dear -- High Church of England! This, my Countrymen, and have been the happy and glorious Condition of our Nation, the been permitted to have continu'd with her natural Honesty Firmness to her Confederates, and not constrain'd by these perous Traytors to an infamous Defertion, in violation of the publick th, who have tarnished the Glory and Reputation of a People, as Hous for the honest Plainness and Integrity of their Manners, as Power and Valour.

On the other Hand, with regard to France, we have daily and only been amus'd and triff'd with by them, with the wonderful ments of a secure, lasting and general Peace, to our own Advance and Satisfaction, and that of our Confederates, which yet at last dwindled into an infamous separate one, in which neither our les, nor any honest Englishman, sinds either Satisfaction, Honour, Security. But suppose the Nation could be prevail'd upon to be that this Peace should be attended with those Mountains of the sknows what Blessings they presend to fool and cajole them into Opinion of, where is the Guarranty? Where the Security for Performance? We know it is very natural to Men in Distress to very liberal of Promises, and of Returns of Gratitude and Aconceptions of the security for promises, and of Returns of Gratitude and Aconceptions.

as well in the Cafe before, as that we have to do with a Prince a munificent and profuse of his Words, as of his Money, to purchase Treachery which could only fave him from the Destruction was ready to overwhelm him; but we know too, that we have to de with a Prince who knows no Law but that of his Will, nor other Measure of right or wrong but that of his Interest; who esteem himself above the Obligations of all Laws divine or humane; who has broke all the most solemn Engagements he has ever enter'd into in the face of the Sun, and laugh'd at the Reproaches have been made him for his Perfidy; who never observ'd a Treaty longer that it was confistent with his Designs, and never fail'd to violate it who either he found it his Interest, or had the Power to do so; who make it a Principle of his Religion, to keep no Faith with fuch as he pleas'd to brand with the name of Hereticks; and who is neverlike to depart from those laudable Maxims, whilst he is influenc'd an directed by his High-Church Janisaries, the Fesuits, a Brood of Ver min that are born the Pest and Bane of all Religion, and Liberties all Mankind but their own: And lastly, a Prince who by his last rest, his Inclinations, his Maxims and Religion is the most implaced Enemy that Great Britain has, because she has ever hitherto been the only invincible Obstacle to all the injust and violent Efforts of h Ambition. This is then the Man whose Faith, whose Probity, who Gratitude and whole Generolity we must rely upon, for the perform ance of Promises and the execution of Treaties: Can we whole knows to have been always his most dangerous Enemies, be suppos'da of a sudden to interpose to preserve him from Ruin out of Kindnes when we have been in all times labouring, especially above the twenty Years with our Confederates, to reduce and humble him Or is it not as visible as the Sun, that it is only a Faction in the N tion who have shown him this Favour, folely to carry on both h and their own private Defigns? Or can he be reasonably suppos'de gratifie our Nation he hates out of a bare Sense of a Vertue of Grat tude he never knew? A Tyrant and Oppreffor may indeed be my nificent, but he can never be grateful; for there is a Purity and I cellence in that amiable Vertue that are incompatible with the last cerity and Ordures of an immeasurable Ambition: The Concession he has made, are not to remunerate and secure, but to amuse as fool the Nation whilft he supports the Authority and Reputation a Faction, who under the appearance of the publick Good which they affect, have been all along taking Measures in concert with his to betray it into his Hands: He knows full well, that if they are a thus supported, both his and their Designs must prove in the El abortive; neither even in this Respect can he be properly said to grateful to them, but barely in view of his own Interests; for when ever he shall find the Treason, which has so far answer'd his End unfuccessful, he will hate and despise the Traytors: They will the find, when they have gone so great a length towards betraying the Country, that all his fair Promises and large Concessions, if Men w not open their Eyes before, shall vanish into Smoke, and we be k to the agreeable reflection of having been the Sots and Bubbles them both.

For I think nothing can be more visible, than that this Intercourse and Traffick of Friendship with a Prince, whose Interest and Princiles both of Policy and Religion are as distant as Light and Darkes, as Truth and Error, especially in such a nice and delicate Junture of Affairs, can be understood no otherwise than as a concerted communication of Wickedness between him and an infernal Highburch Faction at home, to bring about the Establishment of the retender; this is that mystery of Iniquity they have been both so og a hatching: The Faction will enable him to give them their reditary Pretender, and he will for a while content their Avarice ad Ambition, at the expence of the Religion, the Liberties and Hoour of our common Country. But fay his good Friends, we have mething more than bare Words and Promites; we have more reand folid Security to depend on. What? Better Security than the ared Royal Word of one of your Lord's Anointed, of your dear ablute Arbitrary Monarch, with a divine Commission to be the greatest illain of the Kingdom at whose Head he is? Why surely you forgyour selves. But Raillery a part, for at present I am mighty seous: 'Tis true, that he has at length, after a world of scandalous ergiversation, consented to the Demolition of this terrible Dunkirk; hat then? Why he is creeding another Port and Harbour in the eighbourhood of it, that will have the very same dangerous Effects on us as the former. There is no Magick that I know of in ames; and whether it be faid, Dunkirk or Mardyke, or for the Hopur of the Faction the Devil should put it into his Head to call it a...d or B...-ke, it imports but little; the Consequences will be the same, and equally fatal and pernicious to the Honour, the terest, the Commerce and Navigation of the Kingdom. Was there er such an infamous piece of Prevarication on the side of France, or than impudent piece of State, Mummery on the fide of High-Church thion? They have prevail'd upon the Nation to fuffer him like is to erect Mardyke upon the Ruins of Dunkirk, and yet banter us th the Rendition of Dunkirk, for the Security of the performance his Promises. Well then, to indulge these wise Ones a little in er Villany, he has given us and demolish'd Dunkirk; he may teus too what other strong Places we may demand on the Fronis of the Netherlands; he may give us others upon the Coasts of ance and Spain; he may add to thole of Gibraltar, and Port Mahon; confign us what elfe we shall think fit to ask in the most valuable its of America; but I humbly defire to ask of any High-Churchan, whether we might not have had all this and all the rest too, before this time of day, after another and much more honour-le Manner, if their Treachery had not interpos'd to put a stop to Confederates, when they were upon the Point of granting to their ench Friend, and not demanding and begging Conditions? But hat of all this fine stuff? How long can we propose to our selves to ep what he has in a certain Juncture of Affairs been necessitated to ant? The great Cry against the last War was, the Inability the Nawas under, both in respect of Men and Money, to carry it on any ger; yet all these distant Places cannot be maintain'd but by an infinite Expence of both, which the Commodities and Emolument of them will in no proportion counterballance; but if they did, fill demand what Security have we that they shall continue longer in our Hands than he shall be pleas'd to leave them there, which w may be well enough affur'd, shall be no longer than he shall thin consistent with the Condition of his own Affairs, or till he has Power to force them from us, if we are not civil enough to furrender them upon Demand? Let us not flatter our selves with our maritime Power, the Strength, the Force, the Number of our Ships, or the Valour of our People; all their things were, and some of them all are, but they are not Immortal: Our Riches, our Credit, our Repu tation, are no longer real Things; they are but imaginary and mee chimerical Fantoms: We have contess'd and shamefully discovered the Nakedness of our Mother, and a Curse hangs over us for it; w have expos'd the Weakness and Poverty of our Country, as too unab to Support our Affairs at home with Glory, and yet we must preten by the Power of our Arms, to transplant Colonies, and numerous Garrifons, and to secure so many important Forts, as are or may have been given us only as fo many Baits to draw us into the Ruin is pro paring for us: We flatter our selves in vain, we are only in a Dream of Power; we complain we are poor, and we may depend upon it we shall be in a very short time much poorer, whilst our dear good Friend of France shall grow every Day richer with the Treasury the Indies, which with just as much Prudence as Reason we have put into his Hands: He will speedily be enabled to cover the Se with such numbers of Ships, as shall be able to beat us, the Dute and the leffer Powers of Europe out of it, if we were willing or dar to exert our selves in Defence of what we think our own; forth time will come, if things continue in this Train, when we shall ne ther have Ships to equip, nor Sailors to man and fight, or Mone to pay them: Happy Britain! Perjur'd Faction!

These, my honest Countrymen, are no vain or groundless Fears, a fantastick Dreams of a Man eaten up with the Spleen, or imbitter with Passion or Prejudice: The Man who writes this, the good Go be thanked, is in perfect Health, with a full tafte of his Liberty; a honest well hearted Englishman, who roundly loves his Country, an will cheerfully loofe his Life in the Defence of the Religion, the U berties and, Honour of it, in opposition to all French and High-Churc Traytors, who are drudging hard in concert for the utter Subverso of them all; these are real Dangers that are imminent; they are no in the Clouds or so far off, we shall find them march with wide an hafty Steps to our doors; they will foon be feen and felt as the are already heard, and may be easily understood; the Contequence are unavoidable; France great, and Britain little: If French Powe preponderate and weigh down in one Scale, the British must of the cessity kick up in the other; there is no Equilibrium either Fram must fall, or Britain must fall; and methinks an Englishman, who has it in his Power to turn the Scale, should not hesitate a Moment which way to incline the Ballance. We are wonderfully proud of Gi-raltar and Port Mahon, though we conquer'd them with our Blood, and flatter our selves with we know not what Advantages and Secuity to our Trade, and we know not how long; these with our words in our Hands we took from Spain, and shall loose them gain by the pimportain Pimp of High-Church Treachery; for hold hem we shall not much longer than till we have repair'd their orifications, that we may deliver them in the Hands of our French andlords, stiff, stanch and tenantable, who will not fail to deand them at the Expiration of a certain Leafe; and either diffrain force us out of Possession by a Writ of Ejectment deliver'd by the fouth of their Trains of Artillery: Where is then our Remedy? We all find our selves egregiously tool'd and bubbl'd by these Persidiall find our selves egregiously tool'd and bubbl'd by these Persidi-is, and take it together with the Scorn and Contempt of all the fold into the Bargain for our Pains: For whenever the French and aniards have a Mind to those or any other Places at that or any eater Distance, they will become Masters of them in spite of all our igh-Church blustring, before that we may know that they are to uch as befieg'd, unless the irreproachable Integrity of French Faith ture us in the Possession, which we know is a facred and never ling Security. Can we expect the Denuntiation of a fair War, to epare for the Defence of our Places, from a Prince who has alhys made it more like a Thief that robs for Money, than a great generous Captain who fights for Honour or Conquest? Is there Man in England, even a High Churchman, who does not know the has possess'd himself of more Towns, and desposs'd his weaker ighbours of more strong Places by Bribery and Corruption, than Number and Valour of his Troops, and many of them in the turity of a profound Peace, and under the Protection of the most mn Engagements? Look well upon this distant, though a tain Scene of Wrotchedness, and tell me Britons, tell me honest Briton is it not better dye and loofe ten thousand thousand Lives, in valiant defending our dearest Country's Religion, Liberties and Honour, the be reduc'd to this inglorious wretched State of Slavery, the Sport Frenchmen, themselves but Slaves, till we infranchis'd them an made them Masters? Poor Britain! Desolate Island! Yet this sha be thy Case, the Glory once of Freedom, and be for ever; wheth in that fad Day of wondrous Woe shalt thou apply for Succou Friends thou haft none but those perfidious false ones thy Folly h impower'd to inslave thee; the Dutch, thy best and noblest, can help thee; forlook, betray'd, deserted by their Treachery, they sa the common Fate of Europe, Slaves like thee. I don't know w Sentiments may possess the Hearts of High-Church Englishmen, ito the Reflection of this melancholy and not far diftant Scene of Mi ries, which they are the unhappy Occasion and Contrivers of; I know there is not one honest Englishman of the old Stamp, w truly loves his Country, Religion or his Liberty, who will not, at least 1 am fure who ought not, to shed the last drop of his Blo and Fortune to prevent it. It is not difficult, even for humane W dom, to foresee a distant Evil, and avoid the Danger, which all t Power and Means of humane Wildom may prove too weak to medy, when once arriv'd; yet I hope we are not all yet so frant or corrupt, so destitute of old English Valour, or so far degenera from the Vertue and Merit of our Ancestors, as tamely to submit Necks to the insupportable Yoak of French Popery and Arbita Power. What these Men mean by their infamous Indulgence Complaisance to French Greatness, is very easy to divine, and Ih been oblig'd more than once to repeat; but that Englishmen of Profession, should be so far debauch'd, as not only to consent but to be the only Contrivers and Establishers of a Grandeur, must inevitably, early or late, terminate in the Slavery of themsel and Country, fince they cannot but be sensible, that whilst they aggrandizing the Power of a Prince, who by the Principles of Religion and Interest, is their most mortal Enemy, they are pro

ing Chains for themselves and their Posterity, is what at present irpasses all degrees of Wonder and Surprise, and difficultly shall and Belief hereafter.

I shall take notice but of one wise Foolery more of this notable other of the Review, who whilst in another Interest was us'd to k better Sense and more to the purpose, in relation to the Dutch, pon Supposition of a War with England, if they should have stood at, and not at length came in with the Measures of the Ministers, herein he floridly descants upon the dreadful Consequences that of necessarily have attended the Dutch from a Rupture and War ith England. This is one of the merriest Turns of all this witty igh Church Farce which they have yet shown the World: We have ifely publish'd to it, that the extream Poverty of our Nation was e Reason why we were no longer able to furnish the necessary Exences, to the further Profecution of the War against France, and twe must pretend to bully a great and noble People, in better ondition than our selves, into our Measures, and threaten them ish'a War, if they had good Sense and Vertue enough to have reidit. Now if these stubborn refractory Dutch, who though they dlargely fuffer'd, never acknowledged themselves undone, or if ey were, had the Grace and Prudence to conceal it, had not conated to be either wheedl'd or menac'd out of their Integrity or terest of their Common wealth and common Cause of Europe, here had we or any body else the Means to compel them? We low that we are poisoned with French Politicks; we have been told tiwe were infeebled with the Loss of too much Blood; that we ere exhausted of our Treasure; that we were reduc'd to so low d miserable a Condition, that we were no longer able to carry on War against the French; where, in the Name of High-Church onfense, or how should we have conjur'd up the Spirits of Men d Money, to have carry'd it on against these unmannerly Dutch, ho should not have had so much complaisance for the Faction, as inslave their Country, after the laudable Example that had been en them of doing to to their own? Did the Nation want Money fight against the French, the most perfidious and implacable of Enemies, and could she all of a sudden find it to fight against e Datch, the truest, noblest, and most faithful of her Friends? all the whole Kingdom want Money to carry on a War against pery, Slavery and Arbitrary Power, which necessarily implies Subversion of our native Liberties and establish'd Religion; and ll a Corrupt and Treacherous Faction in it discover new Mines of ealth to profecute one, to the Suppression of a renown'd Republick, lich next our selves are the principal Rampart and Support of all e Protestant Interest and Protestant Religion of all Christendom? hat Nonsense! What Contradiction! What ridiculous Mummery! Ambition! Oh Treachery! Oh Faction! Oh High Church Fanalim! Whither would you lead us?

But if these unhappy Measures of the Faction had been the Ocsion of a Rupture between two friendly and confederate Powers, hich it is only the Interest of the Devil, the French and High-Church to disunite, who would have been to blame? At whose Door show the Guilt of Treachery, and the Effusion of so much Christian Bloo as must necessarily have been shed, been thrown? Theirs who be tray their riends, and fight on behalf of their common Enemy, at theirs who were defirous to have continu'd generously combain the wicked Ambition of that common Enemy, by a firm and fleat Attachment to their best Friends? We know the Dutch, as th are a Great and Wealthy, so are they a Wife and Valiant People they have a true Taste of Liberty, equal to the most celebrated Co mon-wealths of Antiquity; they know their own Interests, a those of their Friends and Confederates, and the Means of pursui them; they have just Notions of the Extent and Latitude of Riches and Power of their Republick, and Wildom and Courage imploy them in the Profecution of their own and the publick Goo nor can they in any Instance be suppos'd to be ignorant of the fairs of any of their Neighbours; and from a jost Opinion and ? mate of their own and others, and comparing them, a Wife, la cious and Penetrating People may form a Judgment of the Real ableness of any Enterprise they shall think adviseable to ingage at least as far as lyes within the Reach and Compass of an imp fect limited human Reason to pretend to: They very well knew Consequences of a Rupture and War with England; and theref to prevent them, were at length confrain'd to come into the ! fures of England, and gave that to the fatal Necessity of the Tin which was intirely against their Judgment and Interest: We h feen them, with all the Respect and Deference Men can be cap of, sedulously endeavouring to cultivate a good Understanding Amity between her Majesty and themselves, as well knowing, tupon their strict Union the Welfare and Happiness of all Europe in depend: We have feen them, with humble and respectful Mem als, clearing themselves from the unjust Reproaches thrown on the by her and their Enemies, offering Satisfactions where they m with Reason and Justice be demanded; either excusing their of duct, by the necessity of Affairs where it might feem to dispease offend, or justifying it by the Force of their Reasonings when did not; in short, we have seen them doing every thing a true faithful Ally could be defir'd to do to avoid a Rupture, that was absolutely inconsistent with the Interest of their own Republick, the common Cause and Good of all Europe: One would have gin'd, that a People in fuch Dispositions, and such a Scituation, m reasonably have expected a better Treatment; and if it were a upon that Occasion, whether a few upstart ambitious Englishme Power were mad, or the whole Body of the Common-wealth the United Provinces were Fools? I think it would not take up m of a sensible Man's time to determine to which side of the Quel to incline; for as the Dutch were by no means reduc'd to the cessity of having recourse to their Counsels, neither were they us any to be directed by their Opinions. The Fate of their renow Republick depends, under God, folely upon their own Prude and Valour, and not on the Sentiments of a British Faction that lou basely betray'd the Honour of their own; and as it was founded iginally upon Liberty, did not stand in need to be supported by the pinion of foreign mercenary Slaves, or fuch as defire to be fo. But is fort of Journey-men Politicians, who (when they have neither and enough, or Capacity of their own to fet up with, are fain to udge for Bread with the Tools and Materials of the more cunning dabler Knave) judge of the Power of a Great and Potent Comm wealth, according to the Visions of their own corrupt and nder Imaginations, and will allow it no more Extent or Force in what is confishent with the Nature of the Design they are ine'd in, or the narrow idea that a Mean and groveling Fancy is ca-ble of conceiving, will allow of; for it is impossible for Men to m noble and elevated Sentiments of any thing; who can fall fo low the vile and fervile Condition of being Mercenary, or stoop to the imptions of Bribery; and therefore it was something too forward larour'd strongly of Impudence in our Hirelings, by a hafty Anipation of the Issue of Things, which was not in their Power or powledge, to pretend to threaten so Wile, Rich and Powerful a pole, or to bully them with the Apprehensions of a War from de, who by all the Obligations of Honour and Interest ought to at them with all the good Offices of Humanity and Friendship. tif Great Britain had thought fit to have begun and broke with m; if in favour of France, the, or I mean the Faction, had forc'd War upon them, no Body questions but the World would have a them made Efforts suitable to the Riches and Power, and worthe Honour of their Republick.

It whilst these generous People were giving the World the no-A Proofs of their Vertue, in adhering to the Interest of their injur'd ythe Emperor, and of their Fidelity to the Honour of their Alme and Engagements, there was nothing in the Mouths of the tion, but Clamours against the Obstinacy of the Dutch, the Neity of a Rupture and War with the Dutch; and the Plenipotentistold them plainly at last, that if they did not immediately come. othe Measures,, as they call'd them, of England, that they should themselves oblig'd to joyn their Forces with the French to comthem; and in such a Case as a War, to hear their Hirelings talk a Success purely future, and of the Imagination only, with as th certainty is if they had the Victory already in their Pockets. would incline one to believe, either that they were Fools or fomey worse themselves, and took all the rest of their honester untrymen to be so too. This in Effect is the Tragedy of Great tain and Helland, with the merry Conceits of High-Church Har-uins. What terrible and unavoidable Destruction, in the Opinion the Author of the Review, must have overwhelm'd the poor un-tenate Dutch, when they should have seen the Ocean cover'd with to the invincible Armada's of Great Britain, France and Spain united they were wery Mention of such an execuable Union is and Spain united to the control of honest Englishman, who loves his Religion, Country or Liberty, d) to destroy them? What Corner of the Earth will they fly to? Or what Powers in Europe can succour and detend them from these united Powers of England, France and Spain; and to help them out and make fun Work of it, I will add those of Europia, new Atlantis, and Brazil? If this very honest and ingenuous Author will give m leave, or if he won't I'll take it, to tell him freely, that thele it very miserable People in his Opinion, in spite of all his Noise an Nonfense, and invincible Armada's, will be, and in respect of the Trade and Navigation shall continue in the very same Scituation if not much better than they are at this present Writing; but Case of the worst, I have an old Friend at Amsterdam, who wil tell them a Place they have to retire to when they can no longe live with Honour and Liberty where they are, I mean my Frien Corvere, upwards of Eighty .... Come, my Friends, let us co tinue the War, and spend the last Penny of our Fortunes, and Dro of our Blood, in the Profecution of it; and if we are to be ove power'd, let us lay our Lands under Water, retire to our Ships, and go to the East-Indies, that it may be faid, there once liv'd a Peop who chose rather to loose their Country than their Liberty....... Blessings light on thy Soul for it, old Vertue, for 'twas a noble On May'lt thou live many Years to chew upon the Glory of it, and f thy native Country safe, and all theirs and our Enemies confounde Fall down you High-Church Slaves, and worship this noble Spin of Freedom; and in this, as in many other things, imitate the D vils who are compell'd to adore a Brightness they never can posse or imitate, ye hourly blaspheme. But to proceed; the Dutch, fa our wise Author, will be prohibited the Trade of the Baltick; the shall be depriv'd of the Corn from Dantzick, which is the princip Support of their People; and the Sound shall be shut up, and the the Lord have Mercy upon them poor unhappy People; for ift King of Denmark will not do it of himself, the English and Fra will compel him to it whether he will or no. Quickly faid, o once Friend Daniel, but not so quickly done. Let him and the r of them consider, that that King, as contemptibly as they think him, is in a firm Alliance with the Datch, and must eternally fi it his Interest to continue so; and that the Czar of Musicovy! enter'd into the same; and in such a Prospect of Affairs, if the profound Politicians would have been pleas'd to have thrown an a few Minutes of those Intervals they were in their Senses, it wo not have been amis to have consider'd, how to have secur'd the beneficial Branches of their own Trade thither, rather than of in rupting that of their more powerful Neighbours and Concurrent it; nay, whether the Dutch, exasperated by ill Usage, might not he been provok'd to have ingross'd the whole of it to themselves Prejudice and Exclusion of such, who without Reason or Juli had render'd themselves their new Enemies: And if I be not me mistaken, this and other important Considerations of Trassick, they would have oblig'd the Dutch without all doubt, maturely eiters. have consider'd before they came to a Rupture with England, wi no Man in his Wits ever believ'd they defign'd, if they could w he Safety and Honour of their Common wealth, have avoided it; would it as certainly have oblig'd the English as maturely to have onfider'd how they precipitated their Nation into a War with the putch, out of which it would have been difficult to conceive how her might have extricated themselves either with their Glory or dvantage: But if fuch a Misfortune had happen'd, I am fure it night have with much more Truth and Justice been said, than was ormerly upon another Occasion urg'd by the Adversary, that such War would have been the War of the Faction, and not of the rince or Nation.

But as these Gentlemen are very notable at asking Questions, then they want Reasons to prove or defend their Positions, I will take leave in my turn to ask them one or two: Whether if, umanly speaking, there was any thing to hinder the renown'd Prince Eugene (had he not been basely betray'd and forsiken by e Orders and Intrigues of the Faction) from penetrating the last ampaign he made into the very Bowels of France, and giving Win-Quarters to his victorious Troops in Champaign and Picardy; which, if they know any thing of the matter are, especially the tter, the most abounding in Corn and Cattle, besides other things ery agreeable to old So diers after the Fatigues of the Field, of any rovinces in the Kingdom? And in that case, whether there was by thing to hinder him from raising Contributions even from the ry City of Paris, and all other Places on this fide the Loire? In the a Scituation of their Affairs, I think it may be pretty reasonle to conclude, That the French would have been but in an uncky fort of Condition to have such formidable Fleets to have actin Conjunction with their new English Friends, to have drub'd e Dutch, deprive them of Bread to eat with their falt Fish, in their Trade, spoil their Navigation, bully the King of Denark, shut up the sound, and the Lord knows what Fanaticisms sides. 'Tis indeed time squander'd away to take notice of the le Ravings of a People, who seem to have as little Sense in their eads as Probity in their Hearts; who do not think like other Men, t feem to be of a new and different Species of Mankind; yet if ey would but for once take the Advice of a fair Enemy, (for I ofers my felf to be one to them all, as far as my Religion will mit, and my Love to my Country justify me) I have a very od one to give them: There is a little Island, which I rememongst the Cyclades and yclep'd of Yore Anticira, abounding with fort of Medicinal Drug call'd Hellebore, which Physitians affirm te of sovereign Use in certain Distempers of the Brain, and tor cir further Consolation and Incouragement, is at present under Dominion and Grace of Mahomet, a Saint of high Renown, rraffick, id in fingular Estimation with a very particular modern Friend of maturely eirs; now if they would be but pleas'd to pack up their crazy, allow Senses, their French Politicks, their English Treachery, their could we dious Sincerity, and their no Religion, and transplant into that mous Island, and leave this more happy one in the Handa of honester

nefter Englishmen, who know the Value of Liberty, and want ne ther Vertue or Courage to defend it, I will ingage upon the fair and Word of an honest Whig, and give them good Lenden and 4n ferdam Security into the Bargain, which is ioniething better the they can give from their dear and good City of Paris, that neith their dear Friends Abel, Dyer, the reverend Author of the Condin or Daviel de Foe, or any other Scoundrel of the Faction shall en fend them word betwirt this and Dooms day, that we shall en quarrel with our great and good Friends the Dutch, or agree wi our worst and most perfidious Enemies the French, otherwise th by the Intercourse of a sate, lasting and honourable Peace, which we defign to give, and not receive from them; that we shall ever fert or betray our noble Confederates, whilst the publick Faithan Honour of our Nation shall stand ingag'd to support them; that we shall ever joyn our Protestant Powers with the Popish ones of Fran and Spain, to the inflaving of our own Country, or the Extirpation of the Protestant Religion and Interest of all Europe; that we w ever suffer the Monarchy of Spain and the Indies to remain int Possession of any Branch of their dear House of Bourbon; that w will ever enter into any fecret Negotiations with our Enemies, the Prejudice, or without the Knowledge and Confent of our Co federate Friends, contrary to the folemn Engagements of our Tre ties with them; but that we will convince the World, that at t Conclusion of a fuccessful and triumphant War, which they will for us to recommence, the Infamy of a separate Peace was the rel of a corrupt and traiterous Faction, rather than of the Inclinate or Inability of a generous Nation to carry on and finish with fame Glory and Reputation of Sincerity they shall begin it: A fo our very good and dear High-Church Messiures we comme you heartily to the Favour and Protection of Mahomet, who wou have instructed you in a Moral, till such Christians as you tag him how to violate it, that teaches more Fidelity, and command a nicer Observation of the publick Faith, than you know how practife whilst you pretended to be Christians; or if that Voya feems too tedious, and you would rather flay further to torm us at home, there may possibly in a very short time be found a me infallible Cure of the Growth of our cwn Country for your Fr zy, which, in the Language of the vulgar, are commonly know by the Name of Axes and Halters, which never fail of their Effe trobatum eft, Laud, Strafford, Gregg.

But to return: If the Nation had really labour'd under those extre Difficulties that were pretended, if she had been really reduc'd to low and languishing a Condition, as to have been under an absolute Inability to have carry'd on the War one Campaign or two more think it might reasonably have become a wite and honest Ministro have sav'd at least the Appearances; it in effect we had be weary or unable any longer to furnish the Expences, might were have come out of the War with something a better Grace whis we were no longer able to carry on? If we were reduc'd so lower may reasonably suppose, that both our Friends and our comme nemy were not in a much better Condition, and the former could ot have been so unreasonable as to have expected impossibilities om us, any more than they were in a Condition to perform them nemselves. We had shamefully pretended the Weakness and Poverof the Nation, at a time when one would think it had been the nerest of prudent Managers for their own sakes to have conceal'd em; but as that was evidently false in Fact, it is as evident, that ch groundless and scandalous Pretence was rather the Cover of a wate Treachery, than the Refult of the real Exigence of the Naon: Had these things at least been fairly represented by the usuand proper Methods upon the like Occasions to the Confedenes, they would then have possibly been oblig'd to have concert-Measures the best they could for their common Good, and have repted such Terms of a general Peace as the Necessity of the imes, the Circumstances of Asfairs, and the Power of the Enemy weld have suffer'd them to have pretended to; by such a fair Proeding the Honour of our Country would have been provided for, in Confederates could have had no reason to complain, and the mmon Calamity would have compell'd us all to have submitted a cruel Necessity we had it no longer in our power to resist. le were ingag'd by the Sanction of the most solemn Treaties neer to enter separately into private Negotiations with the common nemy; to avoid giving any Ground of Jealousy and Distrust to the fof the Confederacy; or providing for our private Advantage in rejudice of the Publick: We were ingag'd never to enter into essures of a separate Peace, without the Knowledge and Conat of the whole Confederacy, neither any general Peace to be pacluded, but by the Advice and Concurrence of all the Princes d Powers concern'd in the Alliance; nor was there ever an end be put to the War, but upon the Restitution of the Monarchy of ain to the House of Austria, that by the means of a secure, lastgand honourable Peace, the respective Liberties, Religions and terests of Europe might effectually have been provided for in time come. Have all these Obligations we had so solemnly laid our les under, been observ'd, nay have they not in every particular stance been scandalously contraven'd, to the Dishonour of our Nam, the Dissolution of the whole Confederacy, and manifest Admage folely of the common Enemy? Did we ever by any Messasor Memorials (till the Game of Treachery was actually play'd) monstrate to our Confederates our real Incapacity to carry on the ar any longer? Had we not manag'd a fearet Correspondence ith the common Enemy, without the Participation or Knowledge our Allies, till they were but too fully convine'd of a Truth they ere of a long while unwilling to believe, from every Part but from hence they ought most reasonably to have expected it? Did not these Propositions from a broken and dispirited Enemy, which could of justly be expected from a Conqueror in the midst of Triumplis, Id the greatest Prosperity of his good Fortune; and which our ble Allies (as mean and despicable as their Condition and Generosity was represented by the Faction) with a noble Disdain reject. ed, as neither becoming the Circumstances of the contending Fow ers, or any way advantageous, or honourable and fatisfactory to an one of them? Has it not been the Occasion of an infamous sepa rate Peace, and a shameful Desertion of a Confederacy which w ought to have dy'd supporting, since it was only for the Suppress on of the common Enemy, and in the glorious Cause of the Defend and Preservation of the whole Protestant Religion and Interest of all Europe, against the exorbitant Power and Ambition of a Tyran who never had any thing more at Heart than the utter Subvertion and Extirpation of them all? And was it not in a foul way of lo ing the occasion of a War between two friendly Protestant Nation upon whose Union and Agreement the whole Fate of Europe ablo lutely depends? What is it that our cruellest Enemies could have defir'd more, than by these fatal Measures to ingage us to have beaten out one another's Brains, only the more easily to find the own Account, and to reap the Harvest of our Folly and Madness! separate Peace we know they had for many Months in their Por kets, which the generous Faction that gave it, for Reasons very we known to the World, were long both asham'd and dar'd not t proclaim; they poorly and basely torsook and betray'd, and thereby ruin'd a Confederacy, folely enter'd into for the Good and Satetyo Europe by the Humiliation of the common Enemies, and which had Force fufficient, without the Cause of Treachery among themselves, by their Vertue and Valour to do the Work of Glor and Liberty effectually without us. Tell us then, High-Churchman thou who art skill'd in all the Arts of Treason and Mazes of my sterious Wickedness, why have all these things been thus managed Can any Man besides in his Senses and Integrity interpret this t be the Voice of a great and valiant People, afferting the Religion Honour, Literties and Interest of their Nation, and not the in trigues of a wretched Faction, who to content the Appetites of curled Ambition, have basely betray'd them all into the Hands of their most mortal Enemy?

The pitiful Cavils against the Dutch for not performing the Que ta of their Ingagements, or less whilst it was pretended that w had done a great deal more than we were oblig'd to, (from which captious Injustice they have so sufficiently vindicated themselve and prov'd the Malice of the Aspersion from the Falseness of the Fact) are not worth the taking notice of. Frugality is always con mendable, but what occasion for a more affected Managementi this Ministry than was suppos'd to be practis'd by the former, their Ends were equally the same? It could not be only on the pretence to carry on a War in Conjuction with their Allies wit greater Parsimony, which in effect they never had the least Though to continue; for we very well know, that at the very fame tim that they were laying Taxes upon the Nation, with a pretence t carry on the War and to finish their Quota's, as they call'd it, an no more, they had form'd the Plan of their fecret Negotiation and never defign'd a Farthing of it to be imploy'd in that Service furthe

: Service furthe ther than the Payment of their national Troops, and that (the vent has sufficiently testify'd) not with an Intention to fight neier; for if the foreign had been continu'd and paid upon the same ot as formerly, there would have been no need at that time of ly to have been fending your Bolingbrokes and your Priors upon feet Errands to the Court of France. This we think is imploying the blick Money of the Nation to the private Intrigues and Defigns of faction with a witness, and which shall e'er long be severely acented for with a vengeance. A Ministry that manages with a pruat Economy the publick Money of their Country deserves all manrof Commendation, which was the constant and undeniable Praice of the former; but a Ministry, that under the pretence of a ore than ordinary Frugality, starves the Honour and Interest of the anon, and betrays the common Cause of Religion and Liberty they erend to maintain into the bargain, deserves to be ---- I leave chonest English Reader to make what Conclusion he pleases, and determine to whom it belongs. In former Campaigns, if there ere great and unusual Sums granted, there were beyond Proportiwonderful and furprizing Victories and Successes in return obn'd, that more than counterpallanc'd the Expence; in these last there as as great or greater rais'd than could reasonably have been expectfrom a People so miserably exhausted, as we have been representby the wife Managers, and nothing at all done for them of that, mean, for which they were suppos'd to be given; the Expences, strue, were equal, but the Effects were very different; for great ms granted, we had greater Things perform'd, and the Enemy ery where beaten; for greater Sums fince, nothing at all, and the emy every where either laughing at us for Fools, or despising us Knaves; and a Nation's Money is but wretchedly manag'd when sat the Loss of her Honour and Reputation. This seems to every in to look more like want of Honesty in the Managers, than of oney in the Nation: From the Triumphs of former Campaigns, tre was reflected upon us a noble Stock of Glory and Renown, teminently distinguish'd and made us rever'd by the Nations round out us; from the Management and Operations of the last nothing Infamy, Dishonour and Contempt. We continu'd indeed to load the People with new Taxes, and keep up the Hopes of the infederates, and we very finely fool'd the one, and bubbl'd the er; we kept an Army in the Bowels of their Country to molest tembarass them, when we should have had them upon the Fronis to have infulted the Enemy. Most learned Men of my Acquamtte feem to be of an Opinion, that to keep an Army in the Field, was the custom of old, to fight, and yet give them positive Ors secretly not to fight, is a great deal worse than having no Arat all; this we think with much Justice may in plain old Engbe call'd the betraying a Cause, and imploying our Troops to the vice of our worst Enemies, and the Ruin of the Interests of our Friends. How long has the English Soldiery of fo high a Reputation in the orld been accustom'd to be thus prostituted? And what do these Men merit, who after so base and infamous a manner have propher the Majesty of their Sovereign, the Honour of their Nation, Bravery of their Troops, to the villain Purpoles of Treachery and private Ambition? And if a Practice of this Kind is capable of a gravation, it receives an ample one from the Circumstances of the Time and Manner of it. To amuse the Confederates with fall Hopes, and put the Nation to the Expence of an Army, when the were at the same moment meditating an under-hand Negotiation in order to conclude a private and separate Peace with the commo Enemy, is no more than a State-Farce. Wickedness is ever fertil in Expedients and Disguises to cover the natural shocking Deform ty of it; and a Villany is no fooner contriv'd for publick Mischie but immediately all the vile Arts of Falsehood, Duplicity and Di fimulation are invented to drefs it up in the popular and plaufibl Appearances of Truth and the publick Good; for Treachery ca never long be carry'd on, but by the wretched Crafts of Collulio and mean Prevarications: What Occasion else for Plenipotentiarie and one of them a Priest, (whose Business it was not, but who Word and Character he ought at least to have esteem'd Sacred) give repeated Affurances to the general Congress, that there we no fuch thing as any private Negotiations with the Enemy? The there was not the least Intention to carry on, or conclude a sep rate Peace without the Confent and Participation of the Allies, by to amuse and deceive them? What for a General of an English A my to declare, that the Queen his Mistress was under no private le gazements with France, or would be without their Knowledge but to lull asleep and cajole an Assembly of too much Experient and Penetration to be so frivolously impos'd on? Why lead h gallant eager Britains to the Frontiers of a broken Enemy, bear the Confederate Generals in Hand that he would share with them the Toils, the Hazards and Glory of the War, and at the very Eve a Battle, that in all human probability would have crown'd their V lour with Success, and procur'd an advantageous, lasting and h nourable Peace, which might have for ever secur'd the Interest the Protestant Religion and Happiness of all Christendom, decla that he did not come thither to fight? What can be faid in Excu or Defence of so infamous a Management, but that it was the so Delign of the Authors of it to betray their Friends and support the Enemies, from whom alone they could ever propose to themselve to expect their Pretender, and in him their own Security? A Pr ceeding in all its Circumstances so unfair and faithless, has only t Mien of a study'd and concerted Purpose to deceive, till the ve moment that the Treachery should be ripe for Execution, when the knew it must prove most fatally pernicious to the Interests of the Confederates, and most to the Favour and Advantage of the con mon Enemy; that a Ruin fudden and unforeseen might in the hun of the Confusion be found without a Remedy. What can this gre unfortunate Man's best Friends say in his Excuse? Was he suppos to be in the Mustery of Iniquity, or was he not? If he was, that to make him a Sharer and Accomplice in the Guilt, and brand hi with the Odium of a Treachery, all the World have thought him capable of; it he was not, how ought he to have referred the Inplence of a Faction that dar'd to make an infamous Tool of a Perbu of the first Quality in the Nation, or put him upon the Level with such a Scoundrel as Sacheverel, for their private Ends to act

he inglorious Part of a vile Deceiver, or something worse, which

What then was the Purchase of all this shameless Treachery? Peace. There's no honest Man in the Kingdom who did not ing and heartily wish for such a Peace as would have been confent with the Safety of Europe, and particular Honour and Adantage of his own Country; but there is not an honest Man in it ho would not have contributed all he had to have continu'd the ar a Year or two longer, rather than have confented to huddle o such a one, as could not been obtain'd but with the Infamy and thonour of his Country, and which at the same time left the rest Europe insecure, and her self expos'd to the Insults and Violenof a perfidious Enemy, abandon'd of her Friends, and funk to elowest Degree in her Reputation, which is ever one of the best ipports, and noblest Ingredients in the Character of a great and liant People. Such a Peace can never be thought to be glorious. fing or advantageous to the Nation, tho' it may be an admirable e, and absolutely necessary for the Establishment of the Power d private Fortunes of the Faction that contriv'd it: For in all other spects it is false in every Article; for instead of Glory, it restects e Infamy of Breach of Honour and the publick Faith, in fo foul a anner as we were never justly chargeable with before; for the uration of it, 'tis evident, it shall last no longer than the Tyrant, whose Favour it was made, shall want the Power to infringe it, hich as we (with as much Honesty as Prudence have manag'd fairs) shall be but a very little while; and for the Advantages, it pears plainly from what has been faid, and what already appears, at there are none at all that can answer the thousandth Part of e Blood and Treasure have been spent to acquire them, even such but in appearance they seem at present to be; nor can we pretend injoy them, despicable as they are, longer than it shall be the calure of the common Oppressor to permit us. One would defire be inform'd, whether there was not all the reason in the World believe that we might have been fure of a much more glorious, ling and advantageous general Peace, if we had continu'd firm the Honour of our Ingagements to our Confederates, in the Procution of a War, which was begun and carry'd on with such a won-Ifal Train of Success, under the Conduct of the late wife and ho-Ministry, and our renown'd General, than we have by a scanious separate one under the present? All the Difference lies in the engns and Interest of the Faction; for such a one as the former as altogether incompatible with the Safety of the Heads of it, and s laterests of their Pretender; and I leave it to my honest Countrymen to judge what we are in reality to expect from the Admin Aration of such Men, who can profittute the Honour, Security as Religion of the Nation, to the vile Confiderations of their priva Fortunes. We faw our noble Confederates long after struggling overcome the Difficulties of an infamous Treachery, and willing goroufly to carry on the War without us, till they might force fro their Enemy fuch a general Peace, as should fully answer their B pence and Expectations of the honourable Ends for which they enter into it; and which could never be happily terminated, but in the tire Reduction of the exorbitant Power of France, the Expulsion the Usurper out of Spain, and the Restitution of that Monarchy the House of Austria. This was so far from being impossible with out our Assistance, in the miserable Condition France had been duc'd to, that it is next to impossible that it should not have been a complish'd by the Bleffing of God upon the vigorous and genero Efforts of the Confederates, in the Pursuit of fo glorious a Canle the Subversion of Tyranny and Injustice, and the Security and Est blishment of their common Liberty and the Protestant Religion, it had not been prevented by the detestable Intervention of the F ction; for 'tis visible, that the Insolence of the French was found folely upon the Advantages they had obtain'd the entuing Campaig and that their Hopes of greater, and indeed of all their Ends, a their Rise from the Strength and Power of their same good Frien in England; yet all this is in effect no more than the Bluster of all rant reduc'd to the last Extremity, the last Flash of the Candle to goes out with a Stink: However, I wou'd delire my honest Count men to think a little and reflect, what Ufage their Country and Re gion are to expect from a Prince, who had the Infolence to bully and all Europe, when he was in so miserable a Condition that the World knows he was reduc'd to, when he shall be permitted recruit his broken Spirit and Forces, and with his Grandson be the peaceable Possession of Spain and the Indies, and his Tool of Pretender upon our own.

The Scriblers of the Faction have made a mighty Noise about wonderful Advantages we have reap'd from those Parts of No America have been granted to us by this notable Peace; thele deed are Notions befitting the wicked Contrivers of our Misform and late Difgraces, but unworthy any wife and honest Englishm who would have either prevented, or would still redress them the Hazard of his Life and Fortune if he could: What are all the scandalous Concessions in that distant Part of the World, but a b Restitution of what had been by the French usurp'd from us befor Is it not plain, that if they had been worth preserving, they m of course have fall'n into our Hands, by the Terms of such a gene Peace as we have fo many Years been fighting for? Would they have been redeliver'd to any Body that should have been fent to mand them? Or what were more glorious, should we not have be able, by the superior Power of our Fleets, to have forc'd them out their Hands, when they should no longer have been preserv'd by the usual Succours and Affistance from France, which first rob'd us dmin

Would not this have been a more honourable Way of meving their Possession, than by the scandalous Concessions of an nemy, whom we had reduc'd to the Necessity of derending his own ingdoms, rather than being able to keep from others what with the belong'd to them, and only his by the Villain Arts of Treaery and Usurpation; or rather than recovering them on the shame-Terms of a separate Peace, to the eternal Dishonour of the English ame and Nation ? What then was the Meaning of all this wretched gon of High-Church Policy? And where the Necessity to reduce to Execution in fo happy and flourishing a Conjuncture, as the Afis of Europe and our own were in less than four Years ago? Was e Nation in reality unable to have carried on the War a Year or olonger? No fuch matter: Were the People who bore the heavy other of it unwilling? Nothing of that neither; though they ere weary, they were not spent: The Nation were both able and illing, but the Faction who had ingross'd the Power were neither e One or the Other; not able, because they were soon sensible that ey wanted the Credit to command the Wealth that was remaining, which was more than sufficient for the Purpose; not willing, cause it was as absolutely inconfishent with their private Interests Deligns. Nor is there any thing in Nature can be more maniby evident, than that all this Management terminates in the one ePoint of the Introduction of the Pretender, in whom alone they a propose to find the Security of their Treason, and we hope in me Body else who has better Pretensions, shall meet with the ju-Punishment of it; for there is not the meanest Capacity in Ennd, except those of High Church, whose Business it is to maintain contrary, that does not foresee that the Accession of the Monarchy spain to the House of Bourbon will in a very little time enable em, not only to revoke and resume, by the same Measures of Fraud dviolence, whatever he has by the necessity of his Affairs been mpell'd to surrender abroad, as the Price of our Treachery, and its to fool and deceive the People into the Notion of a Security never intended, but to employ them in the End to conquer and lave us at home; and as he has foisted his Grandson without any ght or Title, contrary to all Justice and Equity, against all divine ahumane Laws, in contempt of the facred Obligations of the most emn Oaths, on the Throne of Spain, to do us the same Honour, to mone of his own Religion and Maxims upon ours, in the Person his dear Brother and the Faction's dear Friend the Pretender, who sjust as good a Pretension as the former.

granted and impos'd on her, than to have receiv'd from her. 1 ha not here pretend to infift upon all the Particulars of them as the Preliminaries, as they were pleas'd to call it, of a general Peace, h cause they have been in every body's Hands who were curious of tisfying themselves; and the unreasonable Insolence of them been to amply expos'd by so many others, as heartily are in the in Interests of, and love their Country: I shall therefore only touch, in that briefly, upon so much of them, and in such mamier, as the feem most pertinent to the Defign of this Work, which is to he that the whole Train and Management of Affairs fince the Demilie of the last glorious Ministry terminate solely in the private Delig of the Faction, which labours nothing less than the Subvertion of t Laws, Liberties and establish'd Religion of our Country. It has ways been observ'd hitherto, that Wars carryed on by Ambitiona Defire of Conquest between great contending Powers, after an in nite Expence of Blood and Treasure, have been amicably adjusted fuch a Peace in way of Negotiations, as the most Powerful ha thought fit to grant, and the Weaker were forc'd to receive; a possibly so much out of a Sense of the Injustice already done, or Defire of Peace in the former, as from an Inability with Convey ence of continuing the War any longer; and in the latter, from t Inequality of Force and the necessity of submitting to a superi Power they were no longer in a Capacity to oppose; but I think has seldom or never been known, till our times, that an ambition Prince, forc'd by the Arms of his Enemies from all his unjust Wi pations upon them, and reduc'd to the Necessity of defending own Dominions, and utterly unable to do even that; who for the twelve Years past has never fought but has been beaten, nor h had a strong Place besieg'd, but what has been taken in the Sight his enfeebled and dispirited Armies, though never so superior Numbers, has yet had the Infolence to presume to give Laws his Conquerors, and to make his fole Will the Measure of the Pe of others Kingdoms, when it was wholly in the Option of his & emies, whether they should have pleas'd to have left him Master his own; or to infift upon more haughty and advantageous Cond tions, when he was humbled to the last Necessity, than he did to Years ago, when he was still in a flourishing and much better C dition. Yet this peremptorily, and in every Instance, is the Case fore us, as will be manifest past Scruple or Contradiction to eve impartial Person who shall examine the difference of the Prelimi ries humbly offer'd by France for the Foundation of a Treaty for general Peace at Gertruydenbergh in the Year 1709, and those have tily obtruded on the Confederates at Utrecht in 1712, together w the very different Circumstances and Scituation of the Affairs of respective contending Powers.

We shall consider them separately, and begin with those offer'd Utrecht, after they had been concerted and made publick at Lond which, because they are but Seven, I shall lay them down at lar and only touch at some of those at Gerruydenbergh, as are most p tinent to my present Purpose, which is to show, that the Different the French Measures is wholly derived and founded upon the Difence of the English Ministry's; and to avoid Prolixity, shall refer ole to the whole of them who may have the Curiofity to inform emselves further.

HE French King will acknowledge the Queen of Great Britain in that Quality, as also the Succession of that Crown

fording to the present Establishment.

II. That he will freely and bona fide consent to the taking all just reasonable Measures for hindring that the Crowns of France and may never be united on the Head of the fame Prince, his May being persuaded that this Excess of Power would be contrary the Good and Quiet of Europe.

III. The King's Intention is, that all the Parties ingag'd in this fent War, without excepting any of them, may find their reasohe Satisfaction in the Treaty of Peace which shall be made; that mmerce may be establish'd and maintain'd for the future, to the hyantage of Great Britain, of Holland, and of the other Nations hich have been accustomed to exercise Commerce.

IV. As the King will likewise maintain exactly the Observation the Peace when it shall be concluded, and the Object the King profes to himself being to secure the Frontiers of his Kingdom, thout disturbing in any manner whatever the neighbouring States, promises to agree by the Treaty wnich shall be made, that the wh shall be put into the Possession of the fortified Places which libemention'd in the Netherlands, to serve hereafter for a Barrier, ich may secure the Quiet of the Republick of Holland against any terprise on the part of France.

V. The King confents likewise, that a secure and convenient Barshould be found for the Empire and the House of Austria.

VI. Notwithstanding Dunkirk cost the King very great Sums, as to acquire as to fortify it, and that it is further necessary to be very confiderable Expence for razing the Works; His Majesty is ling however to ingage to cause them to be demolish'd immediratter the Conclusion of the Peace, on Condition that for the tilications of that Place, a proper Equivalent that may content be given him; and as England cannot furnish that Equivalent, Discussion of it shall be refer'd to the Conferences to be held for Negotiations of the Peace.

VII. When the Conferences for the Negotiations of the Peace be form'd, all the Pretentions of the Princes and States ingag'd he present War shall therein be discus'd bond side, and amicably, nothing shall be omitted to regulate and terminate them to the isfaction of all the Parties.

One cannot better express the Reflections these unseasonable Pa posals are lyable to, than in the Words of the excellent Memorial his Excellency the Baron de Bothmar, done at London the 28th

November, oth of December the same Year.

The Sentiments of his Electoral Highness on the Peace, and of its Negotiations are, That the Allies have need not only of point Declarations, but likewise of real Securities, especially having too with an Enemy whose Methods of acting are well known; this theorem Preliminaries provided for, by obliging France to give a previously some places of Security; in these there are neither a real Security, nor any clear and distinct Declaration; all is couch in indefinite general Terms, which in reality express nothing, and which Years might be spent in Negotiating. 'Tis left to be conder'd which is the surest Way to put a speedy End to the War, which there by previously insisting on such Conditions from France, it nothing may remain to be done in a general Assembly, but to get them the Form of a Treaty; or to open that Assembly upon Artic that are captious and obscure, which leave an open Field for France to put in Practice her usual Intrigues and Chicanes.

Let every honest Englishman make what Judgment he thinks upon these Articles, they have been the Subject of many wife a judicious Reflections of such as have always approv'd themseletrue Lovers of their Country: I shall only insist here something me at large, and particularly on the first of them, as what more image diately concerns the Honour and Majesty of the Crown of Gr Britain. The French King then will vouchfafe to acknowledge Queen of Great Britain as such. A very Princely and Royal Boun One would be glad to know what Answer, either a French or He Churchman would be pleas'd to give to the Question that might ask'd, what her Majesty has been for these thirteen Years past, and the Consent and Acknowledgment of a French King are necessary confirm Her our Sovereign? Is there e'er a Prince in Christendom fides, who has disputed or call'd in Question her Title? Or if the be, have we any thing to do but to let him know we despile hi What a contemptible Scituation are we betray'd into? Are we fr born Englishmen? Or are we become already what we shall be i very little time, French Slaves? If he has not esteem'd and ackno ledg'd her Majesty Queen of Great Britain all this while, there m be some body else, who in his Opinion has a better Title to be are we fuch Sots then, as not yet to fee that this is but a Complem he has been compell'd to make by the necessity of his Affairs, wh he waits only for an Opportunity to abuse a Goodness, which unhappily for her felf and Kingdoms fav'd him from Ruin, thereby enabled him to force the Pretender upon her Throne? B shall we be made the Jest and Sport of all the Earth; the Dupees, Fools, the Bubbles of France and Faction? What Englishman need trouble himself, or care whether Monsieur acknowledges her int Quality or no? The Infolence of the Proposition supposes a De in her Title; how cught such a Nation as we have hitherto alw been esteem'd, resent so gross, so impudent an Indignity? The perial Crown of Great Britain depend upon the Breath and Pleas ne of a King of France? Or is it not absolutely independent of all wer under Heaven, but God and the Nation? We know very well; the defires nothing more than supply us with Roitelets, but he is to learn that we know how to prevent and revenge too the Inence; we have known the time when our valiant Ancestors have en Kings to France, notwithstanding all the Disparity of Power Dominions; but we have never heard that we ever received any m her, and by the Grace of the good God never will, as much as dear High Church are labouring in concert with him to conreir. As our Crown is successive in certain Families under poe Conditions and Limitations, by the original Consent of the ple, we are very well contented, and think our felves happy it ald continue fo, whilst the respective Princes perform the Conos, and answer the honest and glorious Ends of their Institution; what have we to do in this Cafe with France, or France with us? were of necessity, and she should think fit to refuse to acknowgeour Kings thus legally constituted, we know very well how compel her, or at least we did a little while ago; and it now all andden the knows not how to acknowledge our Kings, we may ace e're long to have One who will find the Way to make her our Kings, which, if I am not mistaken, is a Way something thonograble and Glorious to assert both our Title, our Power Independence, than fneskingly cringing and begging in a Preliary for a Confirmation of them, from an enfeebled and baffled ant, who at the best has but a very scurvy and crazy One to own. This is an Infolence that must move and fire the Blood Resentments of all honest and gallant Englishmen, except such ytors as preach up the hereditary unalienable Right of Specefpreferably to a legal Parliamentary one, founded on the Conof a tree and willing People; or who prefer the fingle Claim of Pretender in vertue of that hereditary Right, before the Rightnd Lawful One of our Legislature, added to the hereditary Title er Majesty; nor is it much to be wonder'd at, if the French King, out this Day, has so many good Friends in England for another pose, should be graciously pleas'd to acknowledge her Majesty's eto her Crown, as a Favour and Concession of his, when we whe hugs in his Bosom a Tool that he believes has a more unlionable One to it by his Birth, and who he would place upon Threne to Morrow, notwithstanding all his insidious Acknowments, if he were able. 'Tis but a very poor and slender Secuthe Nation has for its Peace and Tranquility, when it has nogout the present Inability of a faithless Tyrant to disturb them; have not vet forgot the perjur'd War he play'd us, in Affront to late glorious King and the Nation upon the like Occasion, when Conclusion of the Peace of Ryswick, he in the most solemn ner acknowledged him fo'e Rightful and Lawful King of England, with the same Breath proclaim'd the Pretender, and acknowdhim too as such, through all the Extent of his Dominions Affront we have fufficiently reveng'd, though he still continues hardn'd beyond Egyptian Hardness, and so we might had we no been infamously betray'd this latter; and unless good Heaven pleas'd to be kinder to us than we have been to our selves, we a but little lest us, but to bewail the Omission of it in Slavery, a just Punishment for our Treachery or Cowardice.

As to the reft, it is evident, that the whole Meaning of them only igeneral and dubious, they feem purpolely to be couch'd in Strain of Expression only to amuse and deceive; if the French Kin is of Opinion, as he professes in the Second, that the Excels of Po er arising from the Union of the two Crowns upon the Head of a one Prince of his Family, would be contrary to the Good and Qui of Europe, who doubts it? All the World is of that Opinion as w as he; for one would be glad to know, whether in case of the tinction of that Branch of the Family in France, the two Crow will not unavoidably happen to be the Partage of the Surviv of that of Spain? I have already faid fomething of the Abi dity and Invalidity of Renunciations, whether made at Madrid the Pirenees: The Sword we have put and leave in the Hands the Grandson, let the Knot be never so strongly ty'd, will at Stroke easily cut it afunder after the laudable Example of the Gra father; and if the Contrivers of this execrable Ballance of Pow had not thought themselves the only wife Men, and all the ref the Princes of Christendom and their Ministers Fools, they wo never have dar'd to have fham'd so gross and shameless a piece Nonfense upon the World as a Renunciation for the Peace and berties of Europe. The Provision made for the Duke of Sau Family to succeed in case of failure of the Anjou Line, to pres the Union of the two Crowns upon the Head of a Prince of t of Bourbon, is equally absurd and ridiculous; that Prince is too and Penetrating to be fool'd with fuch a leud Piece of Collul which very probably has been the Occasion of his taking his Measures, as judging it better to accept of something, since he himself cut off from the Expectation of the whole of his Prete fions; for besides, as has been already observ'd, that humanely so ing, there is not the least glimple of Probability, that either he any of his Family shall ever succeed from the Prospect of a nu rous Issue of the present Usurper, it may be worth while to inquie how, upon a Supposition of the Extinction of that Line, even in fmall space of twenty Years, or by what Means or Power ha they can ever expect to be call'd to, or establish'd on that Thro it is absolutely impossible for him to effect it solely by his own for and it is as likely that the Spanish Nation, if they are supposed to left to their own Choice, will more incline to the Family of Emperor, if there be One of them alive, who has the immed Right, than to any of the Family of Savoy, who have only acq teral and more distant One: If then the Latter can never pretent support the Right given him by vertue of this provisional Renut tion, what other Power in Christendom will be able if any of the were inclinable to afift him? For I hardily maintain, that in less ten Years time, the Crowns of France and Spain continuing in

Bourbon Family, they shall be elevated to such an Excess of exorbitant Power, that both the Emperor, the Princes of Germany, the Dutch and the English, shall be so far unequal and unable to assist the Duke of Savoy's Pretentions if Occasion should offer, or to prevent the wo Crowns from being united upon the one jurviving Head of the Bourbon Family if that should happen, that it will be impossible for hem to defend their own from the Violences of a Family, in whose Power they have put it to destroy themselves; and if they should be ble to defend themselves for a while, it will be more owing to the Jourage and Bravery of free People struggling for their Liberries, han to the Wisdom and Discretion of their Princes; which it they et, and in time make use of, might enable them to give, and not ceive Laws from their common Enemy; but it is a thousand times nore probable, may even more certain, that whoever lives the little me I have mention'd, shall see the Emperor, the Princes of Gernany, the Dutch and the English, as much the Slaves of that haughty nd insolent Family, as the miserable French and Spaniards. We all then see and feel, when it is too late, the rare Effects of perjur'd rinces and their Renunciations, and curse the Authors of them, and ur selves for being their Fools and Bubbles: What shall become of the fair Promises and Affurances of the French and Spanish Kings? I will be something of the latest to complain, when the Yeak is ready about our Necks, or to make fruitless Reproaches to the rjur'd Deceivers, when we are sweating under the Drudgery of lives; there will be nothing then left for the free, the valiant, the merous English Nation, but to put in practice the laudable divine offrine of absolute Passive Obedience to our Tyrannical French lasters, when we shall be no longer able to resist their Infolence; this is the fole End for which this villainous Doctrine in their unmited Sense has been calculated, and to industriously propagated nongst us, by these High-Church Betrayers of God and their ountry. Tell me Countrymen, tell me honest Britains, are there of yet many a hundred thousand gallant Fellows amongst us, who re prefer the G'ory of a noble Death, in the Defence of the Relion and Liberty of their dear Country, before the Infamy of a vile dignominious Slavery, and an idolatious Superstition? Our noconfederates but too plainly foresee all this, and therefore long ter us kept their Arms in their Hands, to prevent their common win in which ours is imply'd; for it is much more easy to forenat Thro and obviate, than remedy or redrefs a Misfortine when it is own Fo ppen'd; and fince if the two Crowns are ever united, it may be pos'd to possible to separate them, or if they continue as they are, as imwily of fible to prevent the Slavery of Europe, but by another bloody e immed ar, the Success of which may not be only dubious but adverse only acq e fasest questionless, as well as the most Politick, had been resor pretend ely to indeavour to prevent the fatal Mischief, which from the al Renun escituation or the other must necessarily follow, and in the End minde in their general Ruin, which they may never again have it it in less their Power to prevent. auing in X

If it were in earnest the French King's Intentions as is profess'd in the Third, that all the respective Parties ingag'd in the War should find their reasonable Satisfaction, and that the Nations accustomed to Traffick should be allow'd an equal Liberty and Advantage of Commerce, where is the Security offer'd them, that they shall with. out Disturbance or Interruption, enjoy either the one or the other longer than he shall think fit to permit them? What the Ministers of France, or the present ones of England, may in their Opinion think to be just and reasonable Satisfaction, may be thought very wide of the Matter, in the Account of the Princes and Powers concern'd; nor do we very well conceive who made or receiv'd either the one or the other, as Judges and Arbiters of the Interests and Pretentions of fo. vereign and independent States and Princes they have nothing to do with. This is a confummate Piece of Arrogance that would herer have enter'd into the Heads of any, but such as form and carry on private Deligns to the Prejudice of the Publick, and who think they have Favour and Power enough in a certain Conjuncture to execute them; though all the World was a little while ago convinc'd, that the One had no longer the Means to defend their Master's own Territories, but by the vile Arts of faithless Negotiations; or the other their ill got Tower and Establishment, but by the more infamous Ones of betraying their Country. To wifer and abler Heads it will ever feem more rational and expedient to preferve the Means of the Nations Safety in their own Hands, than to trust to the delulory Promifes and Assurances of a perjur'd Prince, too well known for the perpetual Violation of the most Solemn and Sacred Obligations whilst their Swords are true to them, it were much easier to reduce the French King to their own Terms of Security, than by their la discretion to leave him the Power to violate it by the Formality of Ingagements he never intended to observe; or to expect their Sais faction and Commerce, from the servile sycophant Ministers of one Court, or the perfidious Trayters of the other. If that King will exactly maintain the Observation of the Peace, and the Dutch shall have such a Barrier given them, as shall secure them against any in terprise on the part of France, as in the Fourth; and if a funtable Barrier shall be form'd for the Empire and the House of Austria, 2 in the Fifth; if the Fortifications of Dunkirk were to have been De molished immediately after the Conclusion of the Peace, provided fuch an Equivalent were given as may have contented him; and if it the Conferences nothing should be omitted to regulate and terminat all things to the Satisfaction of all the Parties, as in the Last; Wh was not all this express'd and promis'd only in such general and equi vocate Terms, as import no positive Meaning that can be depended upon? Why if the French King were as fincere as he professes, wer not the rest of the Places that were to have form'd these Barrier actually put into the Hands of the respective Confederates, as a underiable Caution for the Performance of Ingagements? Must end ry thing be confented to on their Parts, and they have no real secu rity, or nothing but fine Promifes on his? has be under the Necessity of commencing a new One to compel im to keep his Word, or punish him if he break it, and thus gain o more than what they might have had in their Power to prevent recure? Or why if he had been in a Mind to convince the World at he were in good earnest weary at last of the Effusion of the briffian Blood of his own and other Princes Subjects, were they ot propos'd and offer'd at least to have been put into their Hands at e first Overture of the Conferences as a good substantial prelimimy Security? Why defer'd to the Conclusion of the Peace, when knew there wou'd have no body, been left with Power enough compel him to make good what had been so liberally and speci-My promis'd on his part? Or why not offer'd till the Moment that conquering Army, if it had not been basely betray'd, was upon e Point of entring into the very Heart of his Dominions? Strong aces given up, good Garrisons of our own in them, and good Arlery, speak very good Sense and very good Security too; and the ince who delivers them, and afterwards falfifies the Honour of Royal Word and Ingigements, is confiderably in a worse Condin than he was, by the Loss and Forfeiture of such Places; but a ench Marquiss, a Marshal of France, and a pastry High-Church bot, may happen to prove a Parcel of falle, and perficious, and evaricating Knaves, who may think themselves overpaid by the your of their Master, what they have lost on the side of Honour or putation in his Service. If a Confederacy are to be bubbl'd by tha Masterworkman, and such Tools, (the loss of whose Credit his own may be of little Weight or Confideration with a Prince, his Perfidy and Double-dealing grown into a Proverb) let them te the bleffed Effects of fuch a Cajolery for their pains. The World sbeen but too long and too often abus'd by the infamous Duplicity such flavish Ministers, to suffer themselves any further to be imid on and deceived by them; and fince the Confederates have had Misfortune to be further divided and at length diffolv'd, (which he principal Drift and Masterpiece of the French Policy and Dexmy to effect) they probably have establish'd for ever the Sword in Hands of their common Enemy, to cut their own Throats and ave their Posterity, and will have Reason and Leisure enough to pent their Folly when it is too late in their Fetters; but if they continued in their noble and generous Resolutions to carry on the r, and dy'd in the Defence of their Liberty, and should at length te been oppress'd by a Fatality they could neither foresee or rethey would have done their Duty like gallant Men, and been hout Reproach; and it would to their eternal Honour be faid of m, that they were a People whose Vertue and Valour were wores, wer at least of a better Destiny. We owe something to the present, Barrier we owe more to our Memory, and the Honour of a dearer Pos. as at ity; and it is a thousand times more preferable in Freemen to dyc Must evo wely, than live with Infamy. By the fair Example of our Vertue eal tecu Valour, in the Defence of our Religion and Liberties, we leave een mon Children something of Glorious and Immortal for their Imitathis War , by our Cowardice or Treachery, only Chains and Intamy; yet X 3

this is our Case; if we suffer our selves to be further amus'd anding sufficiently
These are the haughty and unseasonable Propositions of the Im King, as the Preliminaries of a general Peace, at a time when was reduc'd to the very lowest ebb of Fortune; let us now compathem with such of those as he offer'd at Gertruydenbergh, 28th May, 1709, when he was in a much better Condition to have supported the War some time longer, as are to our present Purpose, at leave the rest to the Consideration of such Readers as are disposed satisfy their Curiosity, and then proceed further to examine into Reasons of such a Disparity, where it will appear by the Third.

III. That in Confideration and Confequence of the faid go Peace and fincere Union of all the Parties mentioned in the threef Articles, the most Christian King shall from this time acknowled Publickly and Authentickly, as also afterwards in the Treaties Peace to be made, King Charles the Third, in Quality of King Spain, the Indies, Naples and Sicily, and generally of all the Term ries dependent and comprehended under the Name of the Monard of Spain, in what part of the World soever scituated, (except what to be given to the Crown of Portugal and the Duke of Savoy, pur ant to the Treaties between the High Allies, and the Barrier in t Netherlands, which the faid King Charles the Third is to put it the Hands of the Lords the States General of the United Province agreeably to the Tenor of the Grand Alliance in the Year 1701; cept also what shall be hereafter mentioned touching the upper Qu ter of Gelderland; and also except the Agreements yet to be ma with the faid King Charles the Third, without excepting any thi more) together with the Rights which the late King Charles Second did possess or ought to have possess'd, as well tor himself his Heirs and Successors, according to the Will of Philip the Four and the Compacts establish'd and receiv'd in the most Serene Ho of Austria.

IV. And forasmuch as the Duke of Anjou is at present in Possession of a great part of the Kingdom of Spain. of the Coast of Tuscany, Indies, and part of the Netherlands; 'Tis reciprocally agreed, I for the sure Execution of the said Articles, and of the Treaties Peace to be made, the said Treaties shall be finished within the To of two Months, to begin from the first Day of the ensuing Month June, if possible; during which time, his most Christian Mass shall so order it, that the Kingdom of Sicily shall be put in to the stellar of his Catholick Majesty Charles the Third. And the stellar of the said Treaties the Third. And the said the said the said Treaties the Third.

puke of Anjou shall depart in full Safety and Freedom out of the imits of the Kingdom of Spain with his Confort, the Princes his hildren, their Espects, and generally all Persons who are willing to ollow them; and if before the said Term expire, the said Duke of mou do not consent to the Execution of the present Agreement, the host Christian King and the stipulating Princes and States shall, by oncert, take proper Measures that it may have intire Esfect, and that I Europe may, by the full Personmance of the said Treaties of Peace, reedily enjoy perfect Tranquility.

V. To facilitate the Establishment of that Tranquility, his most hristian Majesty, shall within the Term of the two Months, withnew the Troops and Officers he now has in Spain, as also those he as in the Kingdom of Sicily, as well as in the other Countries and territories depending on the said Monarchy in Europe, and from the alies as soon as possible; promising on the Faith and Honour of a sing not to send thence forward to the Duke of Anjou (if he refuse to acquiesce with this) or to his Adherents any Succour, where of Troops, Artillery, Ammunition or Money, directly or indi-

Now let any honest Englishman reflect seriously upon the Dis rence, both of the Manner and Substance of these two Schemes Preliminaries for a general Peace, and inform himself if he can wh may have been the reason of it, when he has compar'd the Circum stance of the Affairs of the French King, in relation to the Times which they were both offer'd; and if he cannot find out such and as will satisfy him, I will venture to furnish him with such a plain and undeniable one, as shall sufficiently convince him both of the and how infamously our own Nation has been betray'd. In the latter Preliminaries, here are not only distinct and positive Declar tions of the French King's Intentions of what was to be done, by unexceptionable Securities of something more Weight than his ba Royal bona fide Ones for the Performance of what should be don so that if he had thought fit to have receded from the Preliminaries Peace then offer'd, the Loss of so many strong Places would be been the Punishment of his Perfidy; and though it is true that should have parted with little but what were Usurpations from She and the Empire, yet as they might, by a long possession, been said be his, however unjustly acquir'd, yet he so far by a Rendition them should have weaken'd his own Frontiers, as would have le him naked, and expos'd to the Efforts of his powerful Enemies. these we find the true Stile and Language of a Prince, which we a tacite Confession of his Inability to have defended himself mu longer; he found his invincible Armies, as he boafted them, eve where beaten and flying before a conquering Enemy he had lo been accustomed to insult and despise; he saw them beaten out Germany and the Netherlands by a rapidity of Victories and Succe that made the Man begin to think that he was something less the Immortal; he faw his Towns, esteem'd impregnable, taken in fight of his Royal Armies, for the most part superior in Number with a Swiftness of good Fortune equal to that of Cafar's; to con and to fee, was in a manner to conquer; he faw his baffled and pirited Troops every where giving Ground, and showing their Bad to their victorious Enemies; from making Inroads and Conque upon his feebler Neighbours, he found himself under the necell of detending his own Frontiers, and utterly unable to do event from the Fury of a Torrent, that was upon the Point to break upon and overwhelm him; the haughty Ucalegon faw his own Ho next in Danger, and thought it high time to prevent the nearer proach and Violence of a Flame, that in a very short time must be reduc'd him to Ashes; necessity only open'd the Eyes of a Man who Ambition and an insupportable Vanity had blinded through the lo Course of a prosperous Tyranny, and taught him Wisdom whole ever been a Slave to Pride and Vain-glory; what Nature usua teaches every other Man, in him was Fate; and he wifely, if all who is compell'd can be faid to be wife, confented to lop off Out-branches of the Tree to preserve the Trunk intire; and thou the Places he was to part with were not only confiderable in the

ives, but of the last Consequence and Importance for the Security the Body of his State, yet he found himself under the Necesy of offering them to the Confederates at that time, as fuch Terms a general Peace, which were fit for a haughty Prince, mortify'd his humble Condition to offer, and they in the Prosperity of their

The Motions of Fear are ever accompany'd with Confraint, and the oncessions it makes, as they are always faithless, are seldom of lonr Duration than the Passion that excites them lasts. This is evident in epresent case; the Apprehension of a present Danger compell'd the rench King to make large Proposals, which possibly he never offer'd ith any other Defign than barely to amuse; and the Prospect of a dden Alteration in the posture of Affairs, with relation to the Conderacy, from the Power and Intrigues of the English Faction, we ere found too furely to have suspended the Execution of them: his is what they call, and what he well understands, Duplicity; to in time in nice and delicate Conjunctures, is to gain a great Point; strue, we do not pretend to penetrate into the secret Recesses of e Hearts of Princes, but the frivolous Delays and trifling Expediis devis'd to spin out the time of those Negotiations, have conac'd the World fince more than enough, that Proposals so glorious the Confederates and disadvantageous to France, were made raer to gain time and deceive, than out of any real Concern for the ace and Tranquility of Europe, or to avoid the further Effusion of milian Blood. He had his private Views, and a certain immedi-Prospect of a Change in the Affairs of Europe to his Advantage, d depended for Relief from a Nation, which of all Mankind had agreatest Interest in his Humiliation: He found a General at the ad of victorious Troops, to whom he was unequal, and who, shout Complement and less Flattery, may truly be said to be inscible while they had the Honour to have him at their Head; but was but too sensible how far his usual Arts of Bribery and Corption had advanced towards the Disgrace of a Man fated to his Deuction; he knew the Nation in general was full of Vigour and no-Resolution to carry on the War against him, but he knew too rewas a fatal High-Church Faction that was not Proof against Corption, too powerfully in his and the Interest of their dear Pretender; law the Administration of Affairs in the Hands of Men of Wifm, Capacity and Integrity, equal to the Difficulty of the Times. Circumstances of the War, Men of Honour, and true Lovers of ir Country, who knew the Value of Native Liberty, and wanted ther Vertue or Courage to defend it against French Popery and Slay, but he knew too a detestable Faction, which for the Unhappis of the Nation had the Address to surprize and abuse their Sovego, in a fair Way to supplant and undermine them; he faw a Parment of incorruptible English Freemen in Being, compos d of Memt of the old rugged English Stamp, accustom'd to make France mble, who were neither fervile enough to complement their own Ince with their Liberties, nor base enough to betray them to a fogn one; who as they were truly sensible of the Blessings of their

Fore-fathers, were resolv'd to transinit them intire to their Pester, but he had but too much certainty of their speedy Dissolution the Ruin of their own Country and Security of his: These were deasons, my honest Countrymen, that gave Birth to the Insolence the Propositions of the present scandalous Peace, which no hone and gallant Englishman can reslect on with but with the unmounted Marks of Resentment, Contempt and Indignation; and it is by the never-failing Arts of Bribery and Corruption he purchas'd from the Faction, tho' at best but a short Reprieve from Ruin, he never country to the present the proposition of the purchas's from the purchas's fr

have been able to have obtain'd by his Arms.

But if we further consider the Substance of these Prelimitari we shall find them as conformable to the Exigencies of the Prin who offer'd them, and humble as his Stile and Language. Herew no chaffering for the Establishment of the Monarchy of Spaining Branch of the House of Bourbon, but a plain and positive Declar on, that if the Duke of Anjou could not be brought by fair me to consent to the Preliminaries within the time prefix'd, that the France her felf should concert the proper Measures with the rest the Confederates to force and compel him to it by the Way of Am and Sicily, Sardinia, and other Places in the Mediteranean to bein mediately furrender'd as Caution for the Performance of the re No Talk of continuing in the Possession of the Spanish West Indies any Part of them; but by the Confession of the French King him the Union of those two Crowns and Powers upon the Head of a one Prince of his House absolutely inconsistent with the Peacea Safety of Europe, and in the Opinion of all the Princes and Power of it besides ingag'd in the War, of the same dangerous and permi ous Consequence from the Possession of them by any two dillin Branches of that Family: No huckstring for an Equivalent fort important Fortress of Dunkirk, such as might content the French Kin who fince England, as was then pretended, could not furnish the Equivalent, was pleas'd afterwards to notify that he would humb condescend to accept of Tournay and Life, with their Dependence which had cost us to much Blood and Treasure to reduce them, in la of it; time has sufficiently convinc'd ue since of the Collusion of the Article as well as all the rest, for England, I mean the Faction, furnish'd that Equivalent in the scandalous Peace they have made a given, which is worth to them more than a hundred of their Da kirk, which every Man of Sense very well understands at this time Day, (especially since the Lords were told by them, when they do red to know what was the Equivalent that the French King infill on) that he had it already in his Hands, by which nothing could understood but their under hand Peace. No dreaming of putting into the Hands of the English till the Conclusion of a general Pea that fine Bubble was referved to purchase the Infamy of a separa one with his good new High-Church Allies; but in good old Engl Dunkirk to be demolish'd without the Banter of any Equivalent, a the whole Fortifications to be raz'd and Harbour fill'd up within certain prefix'd time, and that folely at the Expences of the Fre

it if we now turn our Eyes upon their latter Proposals for the of a general Peace offer'd on the Part of France at Utrecke, we instead of the former thirty nine positive and ample Articles, only hort infolent ones, which if we consider either the Manner or lance of them, feem to be of a new and unknown fort of Policy; appear at the first View without the trouble of Reflection, to be mperious Decisions of a Prince still in a Condition to give Laws erest of Mankind, rather than of one reduc'd to the humble are of receiving fuch as a conquering Enemy might have thought have impos'd on him; at the time he was no longer able to nd his own Dominions, he infolently demands the Grant of the flions of others, which must again enable him to disturb the of Europe, and cause greater Disorders and Confusions in it he has ever yet been able to do: We have been now prevail d to take his Royal Word, that the Crowns of Spain and France never be united upon one Head; we are now civilly and humbe contented that they shall for ever remain in the Possession of Princes of the same Family, tho' it has cost England near ons, and the rest of the Confederates in proportion, to deprive resent Usurper and his Heirs of it for ever; England to be sull'd with the dry Conquests she had formerly made in North Ameand the rest of the Confederates to be satisfy'd with what they atch, by way of Concession and Permission to Trade at the good e and Courtefy of their common Enemy; we to be foo'd off the Demolition of Dunkirk as the Reward and dishonourable Purof Treachery, but not a Syllable of Security for the Dutch, or imperor and the other Princes of Germany, but what is flightly datin such doubtful, ambiguous and general Terms as conclude ing. What then could be the reasonable Foundation of such a dence, and the surprizing Difference of these Propositions from of Gertruydenburg? All the World knows that he was infinitea worse Condition since, than he was at that time; for even in Campaign while that Negotiation was on Foot, our glorious ral at the Head of his Invincible Troops, gain'd the memorable e of Blaregnies, which to consider all the Circumstances of it, of more Renown than that ever famous one of Blenheim. Nevas there a more noble Instance how far the English Courage and ry, whilst united to those of their Allies, were capable of adng to overcome Difficulties, which it was thought next to imple for human Force to furmount; the Reduction of the Imporfortress of Mons was an immediate Consequence of that memo-Overthrow. In the former and subsequent Campaign, under the luct of the same renown'd General, Oftend, Nieuport, Tournay, y, Lifle, Aire, St. Venant, Bethune, forcing of Lines thought e French impracticable without the Loss of a Man, which shew'd accllence and Address of the Commander, were the uninterd Subjects of the Triumphs of the Confederate Valour and good ne; Bouchain taken in the fight of an Army superiour in numbers, and the great Eugene, if he had not been basely betray'd in fair way, by the Reduction of Quesnoy and Landrecy, of penetran into the Heart of France. One might reasonably have expected, the a Prince thus over-whelm'd with such a continual Train of Disage and unable longer to defend himself, should rather have thought buying his Sasety by a Peace of larger Concessions than even those General denders, when it is visible to all the World that he was tyond comparison in a worse Condition than he was three Years fore; yet by a most rare and admirable Turn of English High-Char Policy, we have seen the Man, every where beaten, dispirited a consounded, insisting on Conditions, or rather prescribing Comman more besitting a Conqueror in the height of Triumphs and Pros ritv.

This is fo wonderful a Stretch of something more than Confiden in a Scituation like his, which as it has surprized the present w Astonishment, will puzzle all future Ages to give it Credit, itc be not taken to transmit the Mystery down to them with the W der. The Immortal Man, in the Year 1709, found himself oppred and finking, when charitable English High-Church held out a fuce rable Hand to fave a Friend, on whom alone depended all their Hopes of their below'd Pretender, and her own Defigns of Effable ing her Grandeur upon the Ruin and Slavery of her native Co try; what he never could have pretended to arrive at by the Eff of his enfeed'd Troops, he found the Means to accomplish by his ver-failing Arts of Bribery and Treachery; he knew the fatal Di ons and Diforders that inseparably follow them, which were at time introduc'd amongst us by his detestable Incendiary Sachen and his Fellow-Labourers in the Iniquity, and knew but took how to improve them to his Advantage; he faw a great and val People, who whilst united were his most formidable Enemies, thro into unnatural Heats and Animofities against each other by those Wretches, whose Interest, Conscience and Profession of all Mank oblig'd them most to cultivate a peaceable and harmonious Unity Agreement amongst them. The nimble Poison spread till it bear too general, and what brought Langeishment and Death to us, ded to him new Life and Confidence of Hope; time ripen dthe posthume till it broke in Ruin; the Symptoms of the approaching of what there was remaining of Firm, of Brave, or Vertuous in Nation was at Hand; he was but too well fecur'd of the lud Disgrace of a renown'd and fortunate General, who had so made him tremble; of the wifest, ablest and most faithful Mini that ever stood immoveably in the way of all his Designs; of all liament, whole Vertue and Love to their Country's Interest and nour were inviolable. Successful Treachery! What more did he w or could defire to compleat our Slavery, or his own Establishme A supple modest General to succeed a rugged fighting one; 10 lead on his vallant Britains to Battle, but lose their antient Honou Retreat; not to support and strengthen our best and noblest Frie and Allies, but basely to desert them in the Day of Action and P y'd, id

Conquest; a Ministry obsequious to his purpose to inslave their ountry; and a generous High-Church Majority of a Parliament at outran his eagerest Hopes and Wishes; these were the bleffed wits of our late fanctify'd High-Church Doctrines. Behold the Exication of the Riddle! We have been fighting these twelve Years It like Fools or Madmen, to dethrone an Ulurper, and establish a allance of Power that might for ever have secur'd the Peace of grope with our own, and a Faction of Knaves have unravel'd as it ere in an Instant what had been so long labour'd with the Expence 6 much noble Blood and Treasure. Three or four Millions curi-My imploy'd in the way of a certain secret Service, amongst a cern fort of People who may be necessary to carry on the Work of arkness, will do more as it were in the twinkling of an Eye, than Hundred in the boisterous Way of Honour in twelve Campaigns. who four Year ago should have affirmed, that we should have en England in Alliance with France, the English to have been the hof the Confederates that should have treated of and concluded a parate Peace, without the Participation and Consent of their Allies, breach of the publick Faith, or English Protestant Troops to have ed with French Popish ones (with which the States were menac'd case of their Non-compliance) to fight against the Protestant Dutch, mover and truffian Forces, for the Establishment of Popery, Slay, and the Subversion of the whole Protestant Religion and Intetof Europe as well as their own, would very likely have been to Bedlam or a worse Place, and in the Opinion of most ho-Men in their Senses, would have been thought to have deserv'd to; yet we have liv'd to fee the Time when the most part of this enzy has had its Effect, and to be threatn'd with the rest, and the dable Contrivers of it exalted to the highest and noble Posts of nour and Profit in the Nation; but the times that have chang'd are chang'd, may again be chang'd, for there is nothing certain permanent in this World; Men at best are but short sighted; to knows what may happen? We live in an Age of Wonders; wifest Man amongst us cannot tell, but that within less than the ce of twelve Months, from the Day of the Date of this separate ace, he may fee the Pope, the Kings of France and Spain, the Great gol and the Grand Signior, in a merry Fit forget themselves, (I am e if there be any High-Church amongst them it is probable enough) combine together to establish the Protestant Religion in their pective Dominions, instead of their belov'd Superstitions and Mathe fud netanism; for I will maintain, that speaking after the manner of nad food a, that is of such as are or ought to be reasonable Creatures, ful Miail One is full as likely, as probable, and rational as the Other. s; of al One may with great Ease read the difference of the Genius and rest and I aracters of the Ministers in the difference of the French Kingsdid he w positions, and the Humour and Temper of the People of the pretablishm time from what it was a few Years ago. fusion and Disturbance of all the World.

'Tis certainly the most surprizing thing in Nature, to see the Heads of this notable Fastion presuming to banter all Europe their own Nation, with the ridiculous Expedient of preferving Ballance of Power, and providing for the general Security in present Scituation of Affairs, by the insupportable Absurdity of French or Spanish Renunciation. We have feen all Europe twice for daloufly impos'd on and deceiv'd by that shameless Artifice, and the same perjur'd Prince, the first time I mean at the Treaty of Pirenees, and the second in that of the Partition; and yet our w drous wife and honest Directors would prevail upon them tobe same Fools and Sots for the third time. Was there ever fince beginning of Nations, or was it possible for humane Wisdom to vife a more folemn and binding Obligation, than that the pre French King laid himself under, upon his Marriage with the Daugh of Spain, in the former of these? Was ever Renunciation conce or finish'd with greater Precautions, or more solemn Pomp of most facred Oaths for the Performance, than that he made upon holy Evangelists, to the whole Monarchy of Spain, for himself, every succeeding Branch of his Family for ever? Yet we have of what little Force those thinspun Cobwebs were to restrain the perial Horner, as foon as the Opportunity offer'd, and he faw it the Interest of his Family to break through them. How comes pass, that he and his Ministers are become so much wifer now they were at the time of that famous Treaty? 'Tis true, that A dents and Circumstances may vary and change, but the Nature Essence of Things never can, but by a Power altogether inf There was no Notion then of a Dispute whether a Prince who mally renounc'd all his own Right and Title for himself, which ver was any other than what was founded upon that Marriage not in an Ability to renounce for the Princelings, his Descend yet in his Loyns; none of which have fince ever had a better, in fing that Renunciation to have been valid, than that of a support ous Will, which, according to the Constitution of that or any free Kingdom, without the Consent of their Cortez, even if it genuine, could confer no more Right than the Story of Belland Dragon: There was no Fear or Apprehension then of an infa Distinction betwixt the Spirit and Letter of a Treaty; Hell ha then been rak'd so deep for so detestable a Piece of Sophistry, to over Perjury and Prevarication; that was a refin'd Piece of W nels, referv'd for the Discovery of the incomparable High-Cl Cafuifts of these more colightned times. The honest Spaniards then in their Integrity, though in their Declention: They know Genius of a captious Family, that would not fail to catch at an portunity to establish their Grandeur upon the Ruins of theirs of an ambitious One, that would boggle at no Means to accom both the one and the other: They were then true Lovers of Country, jealous of the Henour of their Monarchy, and believe

had sufficiently provided and secur'd the Succession of their Crown to their beloved House of Austria, by a Treaty of Renunciation sworn o and ratified by all the most solemn Obligations that are esteem'd acred and binding amongst Men: They very well foresaw the Ruin of their own Monarchy, and the Slavery of all the rest of Europe, inseparable from the Possession of their Crown by a Prince of the House of Bourbon; and they therefore thought they had taken all the Precautions that could fall within the compass of humane Reason, brengthned by the Authority of a facred Sanction to prevent it. The Christian Religion, of all the Morals made known to Men, does by he Purity of its Doctrines, and the Simplicity and Integrity of its ivine Precepts, best provide for the Security and Happiness of Manind, both in this World and the next; yet as the best Things are able to the most dangerous Corruptions, the greatest and most terble Mischiefs that have in all Ages afflicted the World since it has en known in it have been brought about by the Artifices of ricked Men, who have dar'd to abuse and prophane the Divinity of as a Pretext to the most base and execrable Purposes; yet the Amtion of Preferment, a servile Casuist of the Sorbonne, Slave to the ourt, and a nimble Jesuit the Pillar of Popery, who have the Hos of making the God they swear by, can with the same spiritual egerdemain diffolve all the Obligations of his most holy Laws, to

The other famous Instance of the Blessing and inviolable Security this precious Cant of Stare-Renunciations, is of a later Date, and Il fresh in our Memories, I mean that in the Treaty of Partition, herein it was expresly stipulated, that the whole Monarchy of Spain hose Out-branches of it granted to France by that Greaty already entioned excepted) should be for ever left in the Possession, and nfirm'd to the House of Austria; which though it was made with esame Pomp and Solemnity as the former, was with the same eradiousness on the Part of France, as easily violated; for King harles was no sooner in his Grave, but we saw a Grandson of the ench King, only with the ridiculous Title of a forg'd Will, foifted on the Throne; by which we are taught, how feeble is the Influce even of the true Religion in the Hearts of Princes, when they enot touch'd with a veritable Sense of it, if put in the Scale against eviolent Impulses of an immeasurable Ambition. Every voluntary, olation of a facred Oath is a Perjury; yet there are certain Cirmstances which may in some Cases extenuate, and in others agavate the Guilt; and there is one of such a Nature in the Breach this latter, which, if possible, renders it infinitely more odious and amous than the former, because it is evident from the Event, that was defign'd it should be broke the very moment it was making; bich, if I mistake not, is a fort of damning a Man's self in cold ood, and with the terrible formality of Reflection; which Cirmstance, however considerable in it self, had been observ'd and known thy few, and would have still been industriously concealed, if this tridiculous Expedient of another Renunciation had not discover'd and that is the Declaration already mentioned; wherein, notwithstanding the formal Renunciation of the French King and his Family of the Monarchy of Spain, in Justice to the rightful Heirof the House of Austria, it is yet expresly provided (when in Breach of his former Oath he had plac'd a Grandson upon that Throne) that the faid Duke of Anjou his Grandson should by no Means forfeit or lose his Right to the Crown of France, in case he should hap pen to be the sole Survivor of his Family. This, I think, is a palpable Demonstration of the Duplicity and Frevarication of the Man; he of fet and study'd Purpose fool'd all Europe with the specious Formaling of a Renunciation to the Spanish Monarchy, for himself and his De scendants for ever, yet as soon as the Occasion offer'd, not only places his Grandson on that Throne, but at the same time enregillers in the Parliament of Paris as formal a Declaration, that the fait Grandson, in the Case above mention'd, shall by no means forteit his Right and Title to the Kingdom of France; and yet now the World is to be bubbl'd again with the Renunciation of this Grandson to his paternal Inheritance, as a sufficient Security for the Peace and Trans quility of Europe. This Declaration then is as folemn an Intalin fuch a Circumstance as could be made, of one of the noblest King doms in the Universe; and yet if the Duke of Anjou can by one Dash of a Pen dissolve and invalidate so formal an Act of Settlemen by a Renunciation as he has pretended to do, one would be gladte know from any modern High-Church Conjurer, what there shallb to hinder the same Doke of Anjou from cutting that Renunciation to pieces with the very Sword they have put into his Hands, as for as the Occasion of doing to shall offer? It has been prov'd already that it will not be in the Power of all the Princes in Christendom to prevent him and for thole that are l'rotestant of them, 'twill be notable Security, when they shall have nothing but the Conscience of a Popish Prince of the House of Bourbon, so famously distingu shed for their Integrity, and which hangs at the Girdle of a Pop and every Rafeaily Jesuit to absolve, to depend on. This is their memorable Instance, and I hope will be so, of French Faith, an French Sincerity. In the Year 1669, here is a formal Renunciation for ever of the House of France, to all Pretensions to the Crown spain; and in the Year 1700, we see nevertheless a Grandson France upon the Throne of Spain, in open Breach and Contempts all Laws, Divine and Humane, without any Title but that of For gery supported by the long Sword. In one Year it is formally pu wided, that no Son of France shall ever inherit the Crown of Spain Why? Because by the French King's own Consession, the Junction of that Crown to his Family would render it too exorbitant ! preserve a just Ballance of Power; in the very next succeeding, the is not only a Prince of France upon that Throne, but it is exprel provided, that in the Case already mentioned, that is of sole Sur voiship, he shall by no Means whatever forfeit his Right to his p ternal Inheritance, but enjoy them both. Why? Even to preserve very same Ballance of Power. Detestable! This we think is blown bot and cold, renouncing and unrenouncing with the same Breat with a Wirness; a Riddle of new High Church Divinity, unknow all the blockhead Politicians of this and all former Ages, which o mortal Brain but their own would have dreamt of, or pretend to mavel. The Emperor, who has a legal and natural Right, must debar'd of it, though it has been demonstrated he can do no Harm ithit, for fear of growing too exorbitantly great, thereby for sooth provide for the Security of the rest of Europe, by a just Ballance of ower; and yet a Grandson of France, who has no more Right to than my Lord Oxford, who knows all things but himself and ountry's Honour and Interest, must be plac'd in the peaceable Posfion of the whole Monarchy of Spain, from whence in a fhort time Slavery of all Europe shall inevitably follow, and this with the pudent Pretence of fecuring the same Ballance of Power. This is the way of forming and preferving it, as nothing but the Devil or futs could have invented, and sanctify'd High Church ratify and hirm, Good God! What will these abandon'd Wretches have the

pudence to prescribe to us to believe at last?

If the Emperor, by the Possession of the Crown of Spain, willbeme too dangerously great, he and his Imperial Consort are both ing, and possibly may have Children; suppose he has a Son, what At least the French could not tell, when woffer'd him the Injustice, whether he might have any or no; that Son be debar'd of his natural Right to the Succession of that narchy? Shall the Will of a feeble crazy Prince as Charles the ond, supposing it to have been genuine, (much less the forged of a raically Priest and a few Traytors) be pleaded in Bar of a ht establish'd by the Consent and Laws of Nations? In that Case Son to the prefent Emperor, the great Question, Who ought to efucceeded to that Monarchy, had been decided; the Laws of Na-, and the Voice of Mankind are in favour of the lawful Heir; for the most violent of our Adversaries allow, that if the late Emor had liv'd, and his Brother King Charles the Third continu'd he Throne of Spain, the War that we and the Confederates were e ingag'd in to dispossess the Usurper, Duke of Anjon, was both and necessary to establish and confirm him in it; if then the Death he Emperor unexpectedly intervening, King Charles the Third ing of Spain, was call'd to the Succession of the Empire, by what ion or Policy is he to loofe the Right of his Family to the Sucon of that Monarchy, in Case he have a Son to whom it might lign'd for the Security and Satisfaction of the Princes and Powers urope; especially if it should be esteem'd unreasonable or danus to leave it in the Hands of One who may be at the same time he Possession of the Imperial One? For we have been told by , that no Man in his Senses could doubt, but that the Monarchy pain was the indubitable Right of the House of Austria, whilst ewas a Branch of it distinct from an Emperor to enjoy it. Was en the Right of King Charles the Third, when he was but Broto an Emperor, and shall it not be as unquestionably the Right he Son of King Charles the Third, if he should happen to have now he is Emperor? why, as has been mention'd, was not the Duke of Savoy, as ne Heir, call'd to the Poffession of it? Why was not that great Nation left, with the Consent of their Cortez, to proceed freely to a no Disposition of their Crown, who have the only Right under He ven, in case of Extinction of the Line in possession, to do it? Wh might it not have been put under the Administration of a Regen or Viceroy, with their Confent, as has frequently been done by oth Nations upon the like Occasions, till it should have been known wh ther the Emperor should have had any Children or no ? Nay inde why not any thing rather than leave it in the Possession of a Prin of the House of France who has no Right at all? For the most and cious of his Partisans of the High Church Strain, fiace Filmer, la not dar'd to affirm, that Fraud, or Violence, or Usurpation, con any Right; and all the World are very fure that the Duke of An his no other; and either we have not been all this while in our & fes, or a Confederate War has been carried on their twelve Ye past principally to tear this Usurpation from the French, and tod blish the Rights of the House of Austria. All and every of the Schemes I have but just mention'd are founded upon Reason a Nature, and were each of them an infallible Expedient to have cur'd and preserv'd that Ballance of Power, which all sober thinki Men intended and heartily wish'd for, and which our hot hed brainless Enthusiass of High-Church can never be able to convin the World shall ever be procur'd by theirs; and therefore let wifest of them if he can affign any tollerable Reason, why after a an Expence and Effusion of Blood and Treasure, it should all of all den he thought requisite to leave the Duke of Anjon peaceably in Possession of it, except the Interest of themselves and their Pretent which we can by no Mean's accept for sterling; for I believe th can be no Englishman such a Sot, as not to fee that in the End shall from free be made a Slave, though he may have the gr Consolation of being the last made so. But supposing for once notable Renunciation to be good and valid to all Intents and Pur fes in relation to himself, and that the Duke of Anjou should h himself bound and oblig'd by the Religion of his Oath, which we fure his Grandfather never did, what Security have we that Descendants shall always continue in the same Honesty of & ments? What, that even his next immediate Successor, shall banter the World again after the fair Example of his Family, though his Father might renounce his own Pretentions to the Cro of France, yet that it was not in his Power to do the same in judice of the Right of his Heirs? What then is to be done in case of a single Survivor of that Family, who shall necessarily Possession of both Crowns together? For it has been prov'd that the is no Power, nor all the Powers of Europe combin'd together, be able to compel him to quit either the one or the other. It is a monstrable therefore, that this High Church Scheme, to prefer Ballance of Power, erected only on the fandy Foundation of at culous Renunciation, can in the End terminate in nothing but Establishment of the Monarchy of all Europe in the House of Peut as ner

Confederacy, (except by the legal Way, that is, by the Confent Choice of the Spanish Nation, which have put it out of their Powto do it now) in such case we should be secure to have all the inces of Germany, the English, the Dutch, the Dane, and even the ede himself if he were desired, to be the Guarantees of what Treashould be stipulated between them for the Preservation of a just llance of Power; whereas if the Crown of Spain is suffer'd to conue in the Possession of the Duke of Anjou and his Descendants. heher fingly, or in Conjunction with that of France, who shall be Guarantees for the Performance and Observation either of this tof Renunciation, or any other Treaty that shall be made whatfoer? All the Powers of any Consideration in Europe, except Swehave been long actually at War against France, and to dethrone Usurper of Spain, and therefore cannot be supposed to become ution for the Faith of either of them, or if they were proper and lling, it has been demonstrated that they can never be able to difarge that Office: In such case then, I see none left, nor I believe body else who has better Eyes, but the Pope, French and Spanish prour and High-Church Probity, which no body, who is not palby bewitch'd, can deny to be unexceptionable Guarantees for the curity of the Protestant Religion and Interest of Europe, and in a of particular manner of the Establish'd Church of England; all sich, out of a most tender and conscientious Regard doubtless for Glory of God and the Honour of the Nations, these Wretches ve betray'd, by their infamous Renunciation Projects into Popery d Slavery.

A Wickedness conceiv'd in Fraud, and nourish'd by Treachery, can ver be supported but by the Arts of Falshood and Infincerity. I berethere is no honest Englishman can fail to be surprized to see this mal Decree of Renunciation usher'd into the World with the of impudent Lye that Hell or High-Church cou'd invent. One ou'd be glad to know, supposing that the Duke of Anjou's Usurpan confer'd a Right to the Spanish Monarchy, with what Front he pretend to the Titles inseparable from the House of Austria, hilft there is a Branch of that Family to wear 'em? By what Right assumes the Titles of Archduke of Austria, of Duke of Burgundy, abant and Milan, of Count of Hapsburgh, the Source of the present perial Family, of Flanders and Tirol, &c. These, all the World ows are the Peculiars of the Imperial Crown, and can no more in lice be pretended to by the Duke of Anjon as King of Spain, than ble of the Grand Signior, or the Great Mogol; yet it may be alw'd that he who against all the Rules of Reason and Equity has u-P'd the Substance, may in like manner usurp too the Shadow of thes. But there is a further View in this piece of Arrogance and Inflice; 'tis good to accustom ones felf to Titles when we have 'em

not, that they may fit about us with a better Grace when we have for I believe there's no Man in Europe, who is acquainted with the Affairs of it, and the constant Designs of the French for more than an Age past, who does not believe that in case of the Death of the present Emperor without Isue Male, the French. however in this Con juncture they may fool the Duke of Bavaria with the prospect the Imperial Crown, defign nothing more certainly than to implo all their Power and Artifice to cram a Prince of their own Bion upon that Throne, with as much suffice and Right as they have an other upon that of Spain, and are about to lay the same Obligation upon us by placing their Pretender upon this of Great Britain, which will within a very short time be the necessary consequence of this Hor Peace. But an Evil is better and more eafily prevented, than rem dy'd when befaln us, and God be thanked that we are neither d stitute of the Means, nor want Vertue and Courage to employ 'a when we are reduc'd to the necessity by these Traytors to ma use of em. We are then formally told in the Preamble of this ne table Renunciation, That whereas one of the chief Intentions of the Treaties of Peace now depending between the Crowns of France Spain and England, is the Preservation of the Ballance of Powers Europe, in fuch manner that too many being united together, it desir'd Ballance and Equality may not be lost, to the Advantage one of 'em, and to the Peril and indangering of the rest; and fort tacilitating of a General Peace which may be firm and durable, was propos'd and infifted on by England, and agreed to on mypa and that of the King my Grandfather, that to avoid in all futu times the Union of this Monarchy with that of France, and that may not happen in any case, reciprocal Renunciations shou'd be ma on my part, and that of my Posterity, to any possibility of succeeding to the Monarchy of France, and on the part of those Princes and their Descendants, present and to come, to any possession to this M narchy, &c .- But at the same time, that for the above mention reason Care is taken that the Monarchy of France is never to be joya to that of Spain, we must steadily pursue the fundamental and of stant Maxim from which we are not in any case to depart, viz. Preservation of the Ballance of Power; therefore the Inconvent cies are likewise to be avoided that wou'd arise, if upon failure my Issue this Monarchy shou'd again devolve to the House of A firia, which by the Addition of so considerable a Dominion to t of the Empire and Hereditary Countries, wou'd become very midable; which Confideration was thought sufficient in former tin for difmembring the Hereditary Dominions of the House of Aust from the Body of the Spanish Monarchy: It being for this Purp flipulated and agreed by England with me and the King my Grat father, that upon failure of me and my Issue, this Monarchy shall to the House of Savoy, which being descended from the Infanta Ba Catharina, Daughter to King Philip the Second, and ving never departed from that Claim, has an evident and know Right, Oc.

from what has already been faid upon the Subject of the Duke of mion's Pretentions to the Monarchy of Spain, and the Nonfense and walidity of Renunciations for the general Security of Europe, or e particular Safety of Great Britain, it appears to a Demonstration, at neither any Ballance of Power, nor any lasting, honourable d advantageous Peace, general or particular, can ever be establish'd depended on, whilst the Monarchy of Spain continues in the Posfion of any Prince of the House of Bourbon. It might indeed be low'd, as mention'd in this noble Preamble, to have been one of the niet Intentions of the Treaties of Peace then depending between the nowns of France, Spain and England, by this means to pretend to cure a Ballance of Power; but we are as fure that it was never in eletentions of all the other great and formidable Powers of Enpe engag'd in the War, and without whom it ought never to have en thought on, fince they were all equally concern'd as much to are prevented such a Diabolical Ballance of Power, as it might are been the Interest of France, Spain, and the Faction in England have it effected. We readily allow that one of the chief Intentis of renewing the War was to procure this Ballance and Equality Powers; but we utterly deny that it was ever propos'd by the finces ingag'd in it to be obtain'd by adding the Monarchy of Spain that of France, but diametrically the contrary, by depriving the louse of Bourbon of it, to restore it to the rightful Heirs of the oule of Austria. I shall therefore only take notice of one or two ings mention'd in this Preamble, which have not as yet or but ightly been touch'd upon, and conclude this Head. We are told en in it that this profound Expedient of Reciprocal Renunciations prevent the too exorbitant Greatness of any one Family, to the eriland Prejudice of the rest, and for the facilitating a General Peace thich may be firm and durable, was proposed and insisted on by Enand. Unhappy England! if that were not as impudently false as Ithe rest; because if true, it would restect the Scandal of an indeble lafamy upon a noble Nation, in all Ages famous for the honest lainness and Simplicity of her Manners; whereas nothing of that ind, had not her Integrity been basely prostituted by a prevailing action, ought to have been offer'd, much less concluded, but in the peneral Affemblies of the Congress at Utrecht, with the Unanimous fonsent and Approbation of the Plenipotentiaries of the respective rinces and Powers concern'd in the War: Yet even this is not to be aderstood but after a certain manner; for if by England they mean er Majesty, whom a miserable and persidious Faction have had the tal Power to abuse and impose on to depart from her own and ingdom's true Interest, I leave it to her High Church Friends to paintain and prove the Truth of it; or to free her by some quaint Pillinction of their new Chimerical Divinity, from the Dishonour they ave basely involv'd her in, of the Breach of her Royal Word and he Publick Faith; for we very well remember the time, and that ut very lately too, when England in this sense was of quite diffeent, nay of Sentiments directly contrary: But if by England is to be aderstood the general Power and Consent of the Nation in the whole

Legislature, as always it is in all publick Negociations, we do main. tain and will die maintaining that it is absolutely false, and the World we hope will always do a great, valiant and honest People the justice to distinguish between the Act of the whole Nation, and the wicked Intrigues of a wretched Faction in it, and not impute to the one what is purely the refult of the Treachery of the other; for no body either heard or dream'd of any fuch thing till about two Year ago, of suffering the Crown of Spain to continue on the Head of a Prince of the House of Bourbon to preserve a Ballance of Power, and in that the Security and Tranquility of Europe. But we have something better Weight and Authority than the Word of a Duke of Anjou, of the Declaration of an English Ministry, to assure us that the principal Motive of commencing the last War, was not only to deprive the pro fent Usurper of the Crown of Spain, but to prevent for the future that it shou'd ever fall into the possession of any Branch of that Family ly, as wou'd early or late unavoidably terminate in the Ruin and Sla very of Europe, I mean the famous Treaty of the last Grand Alla ance, which in express Terms affures us, That the Usurpation of the Spanish Monarchy by the French King for the Duke of Anjou, was the principal Cause and Reason of Recommencing the War,it being ma nifest past dispute, that as the French have made their utmost Effort ever fince the Pirenean Treaty, notwithstanding their King's solem Renunciation, to unite the Monarchies of France and Spain, fow cannot but look upon that Union as the principal Cement of the joint Interest and Ambition, as the only infallible Means of accomplish ing the Slavery of Europe in the Establishment of the Universal Mo narchy in the House of Bourbon, notwithstanding the same frivolou Artifice of the Renunciation of the Grandson.

This has been the Voice of the Nation for above these ten Year past, and the constant Language from the Throne, at the Meetings every Parliament fince that time, to the opening of the very last se fion of the last; if it has been concerted between the Ministers France and England, that a Renunciation shou'd pass as an Expedien sufficient for the Conclusion of a separate Peace, and the Foundation of a Ballance of Power, it is a Peace of the Ministry, to whom w very well know it was absolutely necessary, but not of the National which we are as certain it is in the last degree infamous and dille nourable; and as it is without any Security for the Observation of but French Probity, is utterly destructive of the publick Faith, which the Nation whilst it was in Reputation of Integrity gave the Allie that there shou'd never be an end put to the War, but by the Expu spain, and the Re-establishment of it in the rightful Heirs of the House of Austria; that no private Negotiations shou'd be carry'd or much less separate Peace concluded, without the Consent and Partic pation of the whole Confederacy; but the War to be maintain'd an supported by their joint Force and Concurrence, till they shou'd of tain from the Enemy a general, safe, lasting, and honourable Pead in which all the Princes and Powers concern'd might find their ju and reasonable Satisfaction and Security, under the Protection of a mi

Agreeable to his her Majesty, through the whole course of the War, has given reeated Assurances of transacting all things with the Consent and nowledge of the Allies; yet we have feen an excellent Princess preail'd upon by a treacherous Faction, to go into the Measures of a eace with France and Spain, the most mortal Enemies both of her ad the Kingdom; nor can this separate Treaty and Peace, upon the not of a ridiculous Renunciation carry'd on by the Ministry, be ok'd upon otherwise than as directly contrary to the Orders (her sajesty declar'd to the House of Lords in answer to their Address) which she had given to her Plenipotentiaries at Utrecht, to concert Ithings in Conjunction with her Allies; as likewise contrary to the lighth Article of the Grand Alliance, which expresly obliges all the confederates not to treat unless jointly, and with the common Conent and Advice of all the Parties concern'd; her Majesty having in er Speech the very last Session of the last Parliament declar'd, that the wou'd enter with them into the strictest Engagements for ontinuing the Alliance, in order to obtain a General Peace that shou'd e secure and lasting. So by her Message to the Lords, June 17. 111. she propos'd to joyn with e'em in the obtaining such a Peace, ad to guaranty and support the same. If then her Majesty delar'd her Dislike of a separate Peace, and which was acknowledg'd y that House of Lords to be both foolish and knavish, as what rould be of the last ill Consequence to this Kingdom, by preventing he Guaranty of the Allies, so absolutely necessary for their mutual ccurity, and wou'd leave both them and us expos'd to the Power France; if the House of Lords at that time, to use their own Vords in their famous Protest, unanimously concur'd in expressing heir utmost Resentments at the Terms offer'd to her and her Allies y the Plenipotentiaries of France, and her Majesty graciously acepted that Address, and rewarded the Zeal and Duty of it by the turn of her hearty Thanks, how came it to pais that the very me shou'd be immediately after thought good for us or the Ales, which were then receiv'd by their House and all the Allies. with all the Marks of Scorn and Contempt, fince there had been othing superadded to em but the trivial Expedient of a precarious enunciation, which leaves things in the same, or rather manifestly 12 worse condition than they were before, and which at best was ut the result of a private Negotiation of the Ministers of England ad France, in open Violation of publick Engagements on the fide the former. This merry High Church Conceit of general Security the laudable Expedient of a Renunciation without a sufficient Guaanty, which has been prov'd is impossible to find for it, is so evidently a Amusement only of the Ministry to carry on their secret deligns, nd fo diametrically oppositee to the publick Interest and Honour of he Nation, that no Englishman who is not in the Secret of the Treahery can be ignorant of, or give his Approbation of it, who has not of resolv'd to renounce his Reason, his Religion, the Interest ad Liberties of his Country. Reflection of 'my honest Protestant Countrymen. The Duke of Anjon swears to the Observation and Performance of it, by the so spels contain'd in the Roman Missal, with his Right Hand upon it; not if that Religious Prince had sworn upon the holy Evangelists, see rate from the Trumpery of the Missal, as his Grandsather did to the of the Pirenees, it would at least have had the appearance of a more solution. And of greater Sincerity; for they who are a quainted with the scandalous Equivocations of the Church of Roman Will easily be satisfied, that a supple knavish Casust of the Society Jesus, has only to tell him, that he swore by the Missal, and not be the Gospels contain'd in it, and the Work of Conscience is over; so swear upon the Roman Missal, is just of the same force, and so swear upon the Roman Missal, is just of the same force, and so shinding, as to swear upon the renown'd and divine History a Thumb.

When the Nation has recover'd out of the Frenzy with which they have so long been infatuated, and shook off the stupid limit ons of this fatal High-Church Lethargy, what shall be the Confusion of these Men, for having so basely contributed to the Dishonourd their Country? Or what shall be the Reward of such Traytors, wh for the Ends of their private Ambition and Fortunes have in fo great Measure renvers'd the goodly Fabrick reestablish'd by the late glot ous Ministry, upon the folid Foundations of its ancient and natural Principles of Government, and supported by them by a scrupilou Maintenance of the publick Faith and Honour of the Nation? Dil astrous Change! We have seen with our own Eyes the miraculou Deliverance of our Selves and Country from Popery, Slavery and Arbitrary Power, by the Bleffing of God upon the Vertue and Va lour of our glorious and immortal Deliverer, King William: W have feen a great and valiant Nation, cheerfully expending the Blood and Treasure, to carry on a War, through the whole Course his Reign, against the common Enemy of the Protestant Religion Interest and Liberty of all Europe and the first Steps made by towards reducing an exorbitant Power that must have been in thort time too formidable to have been refisted: We have seen ou selves forc'd to commence a second War, by the perfidious Violation of the most solemn Engagements, by a Tyrant whom no Obligati ons, Divine or Humane, are of force to restrain; we have seen push'd on with a Vigour and Courage, under the Conduct of the to nown'd Duke of Marlborough, and bleft with such a wonderful Trail of furprising Successes, as will hardly find Belief with future Ages we have feen the civil Affairs and Interests of the State, by the rat Wisdom and Abilities of the late faithful Ministry, in such a noble and flourishing a Scituation, as render'd us both the Envy and Ad miration of all the neighbouring Nations that were our Friends, and the Terror of such as were our Enemies; we have seen the Majelly of England in the Person of an excellent and religious Queen, lord and even ador'd, by her happy grateful Subjects, courted as the De light and Soul of the Confederates, and dreaded by the common Di flurber of Europe's Peace and Happiness; we have seen the Honouro the English Arms carried to a higher Pitch of Reputation, than in uke o

For by a terrible Fatality in humane irs, we have lived to see that miraculous Revolution, to which we all the Bleffings we enjoy, branded with the odious Characters dition and Rebellion, and the precious Memory of the glorious or of it, under God, traduc'd, and even had in Execration by ingrateful Wretches, who without it would at this Day been ning under the heavy Bondage of Popery and Slavery: We have to see an End put to a War, commenc'd for the glorious Cause iberty, under the Conduct and Administration of our late forte and faithful General and Ministry, by the infamous Methods erjury and Defertion of the present Ones: We have liv'd to see lilustrious Queen defeated and rob'd of all the blooming Glories auspicious and happy Reign by Traytors, who prostitute the our of England in the Person of their Sovereign to their Ambiand the imperial Majesty of their Queen to the Elevation of private Fortunes: We have liv'd to see the Civil State involv'd ch disastrous Confusions, by Men of Principles and Maxims abely destructive of our Constitution, as have render'd us both the loach of our Friends and Triumph of our Enemies: We have to see the English Valour, all famous and admir'd as it has been, me the Scorn and By-word among the Nations: We have liv'd e the establish'd Word of God expos'd to all the Ravages and usiastick Violences of a High-Church Bigotry, and in a fair way eing once again over-run and lost in Popish Superstition; our te and foreign Commerce depending on the Courtely of our al Enemies, and our Credit and Reputation funk to the lowest te of Contempt: Confusions in Councils and publick Affair, pulls, and Jealousies, and Fears amongst the People; Discontents, eds, Animolities, and Want of common Charity amongst the est Friends and Relations, are the blessed Fruits and Productiof the present Times and Change of Principles; instead of Or-Stability and Firmness, Love, Charity, Union Honour and Retion abroad, which were the palpable Bleffings naturally flowfrom the Wisdom, Vertue and Principles of the former, (for as the Principles are, such will the Men be who are influenced hem, and such the Effects that naturally flow from them.) facrifice all to their Ambition; and so they gain their Ends, mut not though it be upon the certain Ruin and Destruction of the Region, Liberty and Honour of their Prince and Country.

Thus far these Men have succeeded in the Contrivance and Pa gress of a fortunate Wickedness; how far much farther they h yet be permitted to push it on, is only in the Hands of an info table Providence. All Changes in a State, I mean fuch as are tempted by private Persons, and yet strike at the Foundation in Subversion of the fundamental Laws of an ancient Governme have generally two Fountains from which they derive, Ambin and Discontent; for either they take their Rife from the form in Men, who aspiring to the principal Posts of Honour and Profit, they may think due to their Merit, leave no Means unattemp which they think will carry them to their End, and feldom fail arrive at them when they have Credit and Address enough to surp and impose upon the Weakness and Credulity of the Prince, Amon many others, 'tis but to flatter him upon the Point of Prerogati and flily to infinuate, that the People-incroach upon it, and all more Liberty to themselves than the Laws allow, and their Worl half done. There are doubtless Charms in Ambition, which Men have Vertue enough to relift; and in Princes, at the Heado Government constituted as ours, a Jealoufy of their legal Power one Hand, and the Defire of augmenting it on the other, often them upon Measures of securing it, and the People to oppose the in the Defence of their Liberties; and this Contest is generally m fatal to the Prince, than the People; for Numbers Supported by favour and countenance of the Laws, will ever prevail against a sin Person with his feeble Train of Sicophants and Flatterers; and have Instances enough of our own, that whilst the Dispute last, Prince can never be faid to be truly fafe, or the People truly has This dangerous firetching of the Prerogative is but too often atte ed with a Perswasion in the Prince, that he has something above People and the Laws, than which there can be no one thing m fatally dangerous to both; for from hence, in a Constitution ours, founded upon Liberty and Prerogative, unavoidably follow visions, Heats and Animosities, which always center in the Mis tunes of the Publick, frequently in the Ruin of the Prince, and ways in the Destruction of evil Councellors. Or, Secondly, they ceed from the Intrigues and Artifices of a discontented Party and against the Tenour of the Laws, which is properly called faction and which when they have Credit and Power enough amongst People to gain sufficient Numbers, are frequently attended with lawful Tumults, Seditions, and if not timely prevented, finishin bellion, and but rarely fail to terminate in the Punishment and De of the Conspirators; for when the first Heats and Frenzy of the? ple are evaporated, which for the most part happens upon the Check they meet with, their Suppression soon and easily follows: Vigour of the ancient Constitution returns and exerts it self by the tural Spirit of its first Principles, and the deluded People as a and naturally return to the Respect and Obedience indispensably matt

the Laws; for however their Minds and Imaginations may be ometimes overheated and debauch'd from their Duty or true Inteeff, by the artful Infinuations of cunning and defigning Knaves. inder the affected Cover of Religion and the publick Good, yet in heir cooler Sense and Intervals of their Frenzy, they never loose the Reverence due to their native Country, and the venerable Authority f the legal Magistrate; and the Majesty and Equity of the Laws. which constitute the Happiness of a free People, will in the end obain the Ascendant and Superiority over the illegal Violences and lage of the Faction, unless it happen to be fomented and supported ya foreign Power too formidable to refift; for in that Case, there nothing to be expected, without something very like Miracle, but he atter Change and Subversion of the State: And as all Attempts of his Nature by a Faction, are against the known fundamental Laws. have they always in the highest degree criminal, and point directly othe greatest of all Evils that can happen in a State, Rebellion; nor it possible long to support them otherwise, than by the Means suitble to their Commencements, that is, by Violence and the long word. Now when this Evil happens in a Nation from either of hele two Causes, the principal Remedy, next under the good Provieace of God, is folely in the Hands and Vertue of the remainder of he People, who are yet uncorrupt and in their Integrity; and though he Prince should be at the Head, and promote and encourage the Deligns of the Factious, which has not feldom been known to hapen, the general Revolt of the greatest and honestest Part of a Nation; Defence of their Religion and Liberties, is so far from deserving obe call'd Rebellion, that it is Duty, and includes all that is great, noble and commendable amongst Men; for the Blessings of the rue Religion, and the native Liberties of a free People, are of a alse so infinitely above all other Considerations of civil Life whatbever, that the necessity of defending and preferring them, either fom the Incroachments of a tyrannical Prince, or the Efforts of nexecrable Faction, both acting against the fundamental Laws, not aly carries an Excuse more than sufficient to justify the Practice, but amps the indelible Character of Honour and Immorality upon thoie, tho dare to hazard their Blood and Fortunes in the Pursuit and ervice of so glorious a Cause: The former, I mean the Exercise of tyrannical Power in Attempts upon our Religion and Liberty, has ften, and even in our own Memory, been the Fate and Cafe both fthe Prince and Kingdom; the latter, that is the wicked Deligns fa Faction to Subvert the same Religion, Laws, Liberties and Goerament, by the affishance of a foreign Power, in favour of an exluded and abjur'd Pretender, (fuckl'd with Maxims of Tyranny and arbitrary Power, and bred up in Popish Superstition) is the Case at resent before us; and which all good and honest Englishmen hope nd will contribute to have attended with the common Fate of luch, etestable Wickedness. Mischiefs of this kind often happen in a State fom the Quarter from whence they are or ought least to be expected. one would wonder, that in any Profession there should be found En-Ushmen who have any Sense or Knowledge of the inestimable Bles-

fings of a Constitution, that distinguishes them from all the rest of Mankind, or any Gratitude for the glorious Author of a Revolution that has fettl'd and confirm'd them to us, who should take pains to betray the Religion and Liberty of their Country into the Hands of Popish Tyrant, their most implacable Enemy, and those of a Popish abjur'd Pretender, if I may speak so, their most implacable Friend but one must rise to something above Wonder when we are convince that all the Disorders and Confusions that at present perplex and as flict our unhappy Country, are principally attributable to the Wice kedness and Villany of a corrupt and mercenary High-Church Pries hood, who of all Mankind are oblig'd by the strictest and most bind ing Obligations of Profession, Honour, Conscience, nay, and ever of their Idol Interest, to be the most strenuous and vigorous Affer ters and Defenders of them both; yet I am forry to fay, but mul maintain it, that this is a melancholy Truth, so incontestably eviden in Fact, that there is not any room for any honest Man in his Seafer to make the least Doubt of it; for the' they may not have been the first Projectors in this Work of Iniquity, they have been made the wretched Tools to carry on and accomplish it, and as in Wickednes as in Treason there are no Accessaries, they are equally guilty of the

Infamy, and equally deserve the Punishment due to it.

There is no one thing in Nature that makes deeper Impression on the Minds of Men, than what we call Religion, whether it b true or false; infinite are the Instances of this Truth in respecto the latter in all the History of Paganism, which is not of this plan to enquire. And we are more fully convinc'd of the irrefifible Force and Influence of the Christian, which is the only true an most pure of all Religions; there is a certain visible Divinity in that inspires an awful Veneration and Reverence into the Heartso the most stupid and brutal; and whatever Marks of Indifferences Difrespect may appear in the Conduct and Behaviour of some forto Men, I constantly maintain it to be rather a ridiculous Affectation or a certain Vanity proceeding from Self-love, and a Singularity of Opinion, than of any real and well-grounded Perswasion. 'Tistre indeed, that there are many things contain'd in it of too sublime nature for humane Reason to dive into in this World, and are doubt less reserved to be the Entertainment of our refin'd and glorify'd a pacities in the next, and it is for the Honour of the Christian Relig on it shou'd be so; for otherwise it might, like all others, be though to be the pure Invention of humane Craft and Contrivance. It mu too be acknowledged that as in those Parts of it which are attain able by Study and Meditation, few men give themselves the Trouble of a ferious and delicate Application, necessary for the Discovery and Knowledge of their Truths; there are yet fewer who in their Pr etice come up to the Excellency of the Precepts that are intellig ble to the meanest Understanding. The Reason of which in tol feems to proceed from the general Corruption of humane Natur which evidently inclines Men rather to what is evil than what good, and they are difficultly brought to a toilsome Search after su rigid Truths, (though it leads 'em directly to the only one real and elt of

A Dis. fation of this refin'd Nature and Excellence is equally adapted capable of producing the greatest Good and the greatest Evil to ikind, with this Difference, that the Good which derives from gion flows from its native genuine Purity as an Effect from its ie, but the Evil only by Accident and Abuse; for the natural and parable Refults of it, when rightly understood and practis'd, are e of Mind, Tranquility of Conscience, Union, Concord, Forance, Brotherly Love, and Universal Charity; when ill, and pered to wicked Purposes, for which God never intended it, and ked Men too commonly profittute it, Fears and Terrors both of d and Conscience, Divisions, Discord, Hatred, Animolities, Ma-Revenge, with a brutal favage Spirit of Persecution. Thus in Hands and Management of a truly pious and religious Person, he Protession calls him to the Administration of its sacred Mysteit is always a healing Ballam of wondrous Efficacy, that equally ides for the particular internal Peace of the Christian, and the ick Happiness and Tranquility of the Subject; but in the Hands corrupt and mercenary one, who is wicked enough to prophane Purity of it, to cover the criminal Defigns of private Interest and pition, it is infinitely more dangerous than a Sword in the Hands fool or Madman, who at worst can only affect the Body with tuitous Mischief, but the other may carry a more certain Evil to soul, both in respect to their private and publick Capacities, as abers either of the Church or State, by exposing them to all the Consequences of wild and ungovernable Passions, which nad produce Disorders and Contusions both in the one and the one 'Tis to these latter fort, who are pleas'd to distinguish themby the glorious Character of the Priesthood, of Church-men of Clergy-men, are owing all the cruel Misfortunes and Calaes that at present turmoil and confound these once and lately hap-Nations. Whatever there is of Malice, of Hatred, of Revenge, effecution, and whatever else ought to be had in Execuation 2gft Christians, to the Dishonour of the establish'd Church; whatthere is of Fears, of Jealousies, Disgusts, Animosities, and whatelse there is of fatal and dangerous amongst Fellow-subjects to Petriment of the Common-wealth, are purely the Result of the ted Artifices and shameless Hypocrify of those, whole Interest Duty of all Men living oblige them most to cultivate and main-Vaity, Peace, Love and Charity amongst both. Account these Men shall one Day give, and who know they must who wrest and pervert the simple genuine Precepts of their divergence. Religion, whose Ends are Peace and Purity, to soment and countries to be tried and continue Doctrines, which can have no other View or Intent that create eternal Discord and Confusions in a Nation; and what nishment for disturbing the publick Tranquility and Happines, their Country, by silling it by their impious Glosses and Prevarions with Tumults, Divisions, and such terrible Convulsions, as thing but the Skill of a Physician infinitely wise, and the Han a Being infinitely powerful, can calm and resettle, I leave to the felves, before it be too late, feriously to reflect.

If the Dignity of the Object about which they are conversant, the End to which they tend, are what distinguish and give they rence to all Arts and Sciences; 'tis without doubt, that the Pr fion of the Christian Religion, whose Object is the only infinite fupream Being, and the End the eternal Good and Happing Mankind, is of all others the most glorious and most honou when executed with that Purity of Intentions and Integrity of ners that are fuitable to the Excellency of its Nature and Tende and there is as little doubt to be made, that those Persons who peculiar Distinction are fet apart and destin'd to the Administration the adorable Mysteries, and the Dispensation of the admirable Grines of the Christian Religion, who fill and come up to the nity of their Character, in all the laudable Inflances of Piety, I ing, fair Example, good Nature, good Manners, Humility, nefs. Brotherly Love, and what is the Complement and Performance of them all, universal Charity, shall never fail to obtain, and dele too, the Respect, the Love and Admiration of all the honest and tuous part of Mankind; whatever there may be of Praile, of mation, of Honour, is but a fort of Tribute due to their Verta Merit; nay, even the Vicious and Profligate, at least in their Intervals, are by the secret irresistible Power of Truth compel admire and venerate in them those Excellencies they want the to imitate. All Men are naturally made of the same Mold, y Men are not equally corrupt; in some, Temperament and Com on; in some, natural Knowledge; in others, Reason improv Philosophy; and in Christianity, a peculiar and internal Grace above, inftruct them to restrain, and in a great Measure to com the Violence and Impetuofity of their Passions, and thereby pre them from falling into those groffer and more enormous Crime are the Reproach of humane Nature, and the Scandal of the U an Religion: For the best of Men are subject, and in a great ! too, to the Tyranny of an imperious and irrefiftible Corruption is the Merit of the Character of a good Clergyman, at all inco tible with the Frailties and Imperfections of Humane Nature, he imploys all the Powers of his Heart and Mind feriously to bat and overcome them; for there never was nor ever fall Man, who can or shall boast himself to be intirely exempt from to pretend otherwise, is but to add the Guilt of a scandalous crify to that of the natural Corruption of a Man's Inclinations AL

On the other Hand, the Clergyman who forgets the Importance of his Character, and the Purity of his holy Profession; if he aban. dons himself, like the generality of common Men, to the Brutality of his Passions; if his Heart is not really touch'd with the veritable Influence of his divine Religion; if he does not act upon Principles of Conscience; if he is wanting in a true Love of the Honour and Interest of his Country; if he be corrupt and mercenary, and, in views of Preferment, advances the Deligns and Intrigues of private Persons, preferably to the publick Good of his Fellow Subjects, or the general one of Mankind; if he is without Conscience, without Piety, unlearn'd, or of evil Example; if he is morose, ill-natur'd void of Humility, Meekness, Brotherly Love and common Charity which are the glorious distinguishing Characters of his Religion, and ought to be of his Profession; if instead of being the Messenger of Peace, he is a Disturber of the publick Tranquility; if instead of Order and good Agreement, he is a Sower of Sedition, of Divile ons, and the Confusions that always attend them, and are directly opposite to the Design, and expresly forbidden by the whole To nor of his Religion; 'tis manifest, that either he has none at all, o what is worse, that he is impious enough to abuse it in a scandalou Prophanation of it to the wicked Furposes it never was intended If the Tree be known by its Fruit, and we are taught that his Ser vants we are whose Works we do, we need not be puzzl'd to de termine whose Servants such Men are, nor to conclude that as the are the most wicked, so are they questionless the most despicable and contemptible of all Mankind. All Men naturally hate and de spise an abandon'd and profligate Person of any Profession, what he appears so in the naked Colours of a leud and unrestrain'd li centionsness; nor is the Varnish of an affected or hypocritical San city (when out of a sense of Shame or Modesty, or point of late rest, he is willing to hide or disguise the Detormity of it) such ent to skreen him from the Penetration of the more Discerning But in the Men of Profession, who out of Principles of Conscience more than to fave Appearances, are oblig'd by all the Cautions Sincerity and Circumspection to avoid the Scandal; the Character is infinitely more odious and contemptible than amongst any other Sort of Profession of Men; for in them, as Blots are more was cuous and remarkable, they are more easily and readily expose and such a scandalous Prostitution exasperates other Men to publi those Miscarriages and Failings, which good Nature and Discretion might have been apt to pardon in a more prudent and regular Co duct; for 'tis a leud Imposition on Mankind; and as in all Me there is a certain Delicacy of Honour in Judgment that hates to deceiv'd or impos'd on, they catch at every Opportunity to expo and be reveng'd on the Impostor: Hypocrify is detestable in

Jen, but in none so much as in Clergymen; and when in them a nysterious fort of Gravity and Austerity of Manners, and a ridicuous affected Grimace of outward Sanctity, ut rp the Place of real nety and Devotion, the World is not only eafily provok'd to pass he leverest Censure upon all the Actions of their Lives, but it is with a secret Pleasure and Satisfaction that they find it in their Power pexpose the Scandal of them. The Church of God has in all Ages, nd every honest Man hopes ever will, be bles'd with an Increase ftruly Pious, Learned and Religious Pastors; but it is evident past oubt, that ever fince the first innocent Ages of Christianity, the umber of the Iditerate, Ungodly, and Irreligious, has by far exeded that of the former; and I am forry that we have a melanholy Instance of this Truth too evidently manifest in our own unappy Time and Country. There have been from the Beginning Christianity, and ever will be to the End of it, great numbers of s Professors who content themselves with a certain Form of Godnels, but who seem to deny the Power of it; and we are told by Authority it is not lawful for us to dispute, that in the latter ges the Church shall abound with false Prophets and false Teahers, who by their Doctrines shall abuse and mislead the People no Error: It the Verity of Predictions, especially those of the rangelical Dispensation, be best justify'd by the Event and Accomlimment of them, we may venture rationally to conclude that the nd of Things is not tar off; for never any Age abounded with ch numbers of false Teachers and false Doctrines as this disastrous he in which we live; and it is folely to Men of this Character of Profession, are owing all the Confusions that at present harass r own unhappy Country, and perplex and embarass the Assairs of I the rest of Europe; 'tis by wickedly abusing the Power their totellion gives them over the Minds of the Weak and Credulous, hich ever implies the Gross of the People, and basely prostitung the adorable Truths of the most pure Religion to Purposes by were never defign'd, that they teach and propagate such Dorines and Principles for Truths warranted upon the facred Authoty of the Holy Scriptures, which in Effect have no more Sanction Foundation on them than the Alcoran. The People, I mean the teaker and more Credulous, are apt to swallow and take every ing for Oracle that is deliver'd to them from an Authority they we been taught from their Infancy to venerate, without any better cason than that of the Power and Influence of Education; and as ey are generally incapable of examining into the Reason and Nare of Things, the Authority of the Men of the Profession is with em in place of Conviction. To bring the People into this blind pinion of a Power inseparably attach'd by a divine Commission to er Character, and in consequence of their Belief, to a servile Obeience to all their Dictates and Prescriptions, was one of the eareft, boldeft, and subtilest Strokes of the Priesthood; nor was there ver broach'd in the Church, a Doctrine of so dangerous and uniersal Mischief to the temporal and eternal Happiness of Mankind sthat of implicit Faith, the fertile Mother of all the pernicious sub-Sequent Z 3 sequent Ones they have fince invented to inflave the Souls and Bordies of Men; for when Men are so far infatuated to believe even thing under pain of Damnation that their Priests shall think sit tell them, there is nothing so wicked, so absurd, so irrational, so contrary to Sense, Reason, or even the holy Scriptures, that the will not digest and maintain at the Hazard of ten thousand Lives the Terror of the Punishment with which they are threated so their Disobedience ever prevailing above the Influence of a Reason that should pretend to open their Eyes, or offer to disengage then from the Deluficns of so tyrannical a Bendage.

This then is the Source of most of the Casamities that have in a Ages afflicted the Christian World, and which at present is the un happy Occasion of our own. The Ambition of a few Men for the private Interests and Defigns light the Fire, and a corrupt and mer cenary Priesthood are the Bellows that blow it into a Flame to de vour the Nation. It has ever been the Craft of fuch as defign an notable Change in an establish'd Government, to cajole and gain the Clergy into their Interests, with the specious Hopes and Promise of augmenting the Power, the Privileges, the Glory and Dignity of their Church; though in the End they generally serve them as Princes do Traytors, abandon or oppress them when they have reap the Benefit of their Treason. One would have imagin'd, that the Behaviour and Fractice of the late King James, who they are feat ble, notwithstanding all his fair Declarations in their Favour, design nothing fo much as their Ruin and the final Extirpation of their Re ligion, might have taught this fort of Men a little more Willow yet we find them to far from profiting of the Evil they were so near suffering from the Father, that we have feen them ever fince em Ploying all the same cursed Arts and Doctrines to establish the So of the fame Religion, and if possible of worse Maxims; so farwi a falle and hypocritical Zeil for a Church, supported by the Hop and Prospect of an augmentation of Power with such Men, preva and carry it over the Interest of true Religion, or the publick Goo and Happiness of their Country. This Influence they have over the People, renders them of all Men the most proper Tools of Tra tors who meditate a Revolution; for when the People who are is dom capable of judging of things otherwise than by their Senses at catch'd by the Ears, and taught by them to believe as Gospel what ever Doctrines and Opinions are necessary for their purpose, (thoug never so contrary to Reason or Scripture) the Work is half done, and in a fair Way of being brought to their End, especially when then is a proportionable Force, whether Foreign or Domestick, to an and fuffain the Defign; for without that, the Subversion of an and ent establish'd Government, as has been observ'd, is attended with Difficulties next to impossible to overcome; because, when the People have once time to cool and return from the present Feve the natural Love and Defire of their ancient Liberty, and the original nal Principles of the Constitution, will ever carry it from the ill con certed Counsels and Measures of the Conspirators, though never much encouraged by the treacherous Efforts of their Clergy. This Power

Power therefore of the Priefthood is so absolutely necessary to those tho attempt any notable Change in a Government, that it will be ifficult to prove, that in any famous Enterprise of that kind in Chriundom, or in the Times and Regions of Paganism, that more of the access has not been owing to the Craft and Cunning of the Priest, un to the Arms of the Soldier; of which the Instances are so nuperous and fresh in all the Kingdoms of Europe, and particularly our wn, as to need no further Proof. Whoever is but moderately acnainted with the Ecclefiastical History, will easily be convine'd that the early Ages of Christianity, their famous Constantine made those fastrous Profusions that inrich'd the Church, not so much out of leal for Religion, as to corrupt the Clergy, and by those Means to ajole them into his Interests. I remember to have read somewhere, if I mistake not, in the Legend of St. Sylvester quoted y du Plessis Mornay, that at the time of those unhappy Donatias which first broke in upon and corrupted the Integrity of the Christian Profession, there was a Voice heard from Fleaven, This Day deadly Poison is infus d into the Church. The Event has but too ally proved the Truth of the Prediction; for every Body knows by what Degrees afterwards the Bishops of Rome arriv'd to an Exorbiancy of Power, which in all succeeding Generations they infolently bus'd to infult those Emperors, who out of a foolish and mistaken leal had enabled the Mitre to trample under Foot the imperial Diaem; and to be the principal and indeed only Occasion of all the Blood and Confusions that have confounded the whole Christian World ever fince. There is a wonderful Vertue, if I may call it fo, nd Efficacy in Riches, that not only dazzle, but blind the Eyes of uch as prefer them before the Peace of Conscience, or the Interests the true Religion: They cannot fee the Faults, much less acnowledge any, though of the most enormous and icandalous Comlexion in their Benefactor; and that fort of Men, who have ever ince fanctified a Devil into a Saint who has contributed at any ime to augment the Riches, Authority and Power of their Church, and damn'd all honester Men, who were not such Fools, into Angels of Darkness, and represented them in the most dismal and hicous Colours if they dar'd but to touch or dispute them, extell'd he Zeal, the Piety, the Religion of their admir'd Constantine, tho' at the same time they knew he was not so much as a Christian, (having been Baptiz'd but the Day of or before his Death, at Nicomedia, by Eusebius Bishop of that Place) and though they knew he liv'd in Murder, and dy'd polluted with the Blood of his own Son, his Wife, and others of his best and nearest Friends and Relations. This is a sufficient Instance, amongst ten thousand others, of what such Men are capable of, when forgetting the Purity of the most excellent of all Morals and Religion, they abandon themselves to the Lusts, the Violence and Impetuofity of their Passions and private Intereffs.

We are but too well instructed how exactly and admirably well their Successors, as they call themselves, in all Ages of Christianity ever since, have copy'd after so divine an Original. I have not undertaken here the History of the Confusions wrought by the Clergy all Kingdoms, contending for a Power that in no wife belongs to them; the cruel Calamities upon our own unhappy Nation by ou own, afford abundant Matter for the Speculations and Exercise of a honest Lovers of their Country. There is certainly no one forto Men upon the Earth, to whom such a Degree of Power so utter inconsistent with their Character and Profession so little belongs, att Clergymen; yet the Itch of Dominion and Superiority, by whichthe may be enabled once again to inflave the Minds and Confciences Men, is but too manifeltly their Darling Passion. The Propagation of the most pure Religion, and the Improvement of the Morals Men, feem to have the least Share in their Concern and Application Interest, Riches, Splendour, Magnificence and Authority are visible the principal End of all their Views and Actions and Modern Do They forget the divine Command of our bleffed Savious who expressly tells his holy Apostles, That be that was greatest among them should be the least, and he that exalted himself should be brough low; or think themselves exempted, and the Rule not made for them but the rest of Mankind, who they would reduce again under the Yoak of their spiritual Slavery. They forget that the whole Defig and Tendency of the Christian Religion is not to make Men great but good; and that the most admirable Moral, that in order to make and preserve them so continually, preaches up an Abstraction an Renunciation of all the foolish Vanities of this World, is absolute incompatible at least in the Men of Protession with the Pomp an Grandeur, the Dominion and Magnificences of it: That Excels Power they so eagerly contend for, as it is intirely foreign to the Bu finess of Religion, sits awkwardly about them, and as often as the possess it, have never fail'd insolently to abuse it in a vile Application of it, to constrain their Fellow subjects and Fellow-christians into flavish, blind Obedience to their imperious Dictates and Command Tis as ridiculous to fee a Clergyman, whose Business it is to pical Humility, Meekness, and forgiving of Injuries, to aspire by unwar rantable Acts to arrive at a pompous Condition of Life, to which those amiable Vertues are generally Strangers, as it is to see other whose Duty it is constantly to recommend Peace, Love, Unity and Concord amongst Men, incessantly to preach and propagate Doctrino and Principles, that by their very Nature can have no other Tenden cy than to create and foment Divisions, Fears, Jealousies and Ani monties, which for the most part end in the last Confusions, and re of Impiety, to prophane the Character of a Profession, in it self ho and venerable; and instead of being Messengers of Peace, to while there are eternal Bleffings annex'd, to become Trumpeters of was the holy Scriptures brand with the odious Title of something work than Witchcraft, Rebellion.

'Tis not that when a Church is establish'd in a Nation under certain Forms and Regulations, that there ought not to be annex'd to it a Degree of Power, necessary and sufficient to support and maintain the Discipline and Occonomy of it, with Respect, and in Subos

nation to the supream Power which establishes it; for 'tis thus we eak and understand of the Church as by Law establish'd, for no ommunity can subfift without it; so much no honest Man who loves Religion and Country will ever grudge them, because such a Deee of Power is confistent with the Good and Tranquility of the ommon-wealth; but if they grasp at more than the Laws have thought to allow them, or abute that which they do, to the wicked Purics of creating Confusions and Disorders in it; those Gentlemen ay be pleas'd to remember and confider too, that it is folely in the wer of the Legislature to abridge and restrain it, when and after hat manner they shall think fit; and they may do well to reflect, hether the insupportable Abuse both of their Power and Character all Times, and more especially during the last and present Reign, hich they have so miserably disturb'd, may not in due time put the ildom of the Nation upon taking proper Measures to restrain and nish the Insolence of their Practice of the present, and prevent the e in all Times to come. If fuch a thing, which they will not fail roar at as the most terrible and sacrilegious of all Persecutions, buld happen, let-them thank their own licentious and unfeasonable solence for it; yet every honest Man in the Kingdom, whatever the her corrupt and interested may babble of their Church's Danger, llbe fatisfy'd, that both the Honour and Security of the establish'd ligion, and the Peace and Happiness of their Country will be initely better provided for by so seasonable and necessarry a Reforation: For tho' no Power under Heaven can dispence with, or add diminish the least Tittle of any fundamental Article of the Christian igion necessary to Salvation, and we are very well satisfy'd ours linever attempt it; yet the Modes and Forms of Worship and Rules Discipline are intirely in the Discretion and Disposition of the sucam Power of the Nation to constitute, to correct, to alter and ange, as the Necessity of Times, the Circumstances of Affairs, and Peace and Happiness of the State may require. The reform'd otestant Religion, as it stands refin'd from the Errors and abomible Idolatry and Superstitions of the Church of Rome, that is, the ine Christian Religion in its Purity and Innocence, which the evenly Author of it, (tho' there were no human Laws to support has promis'd to stand by and maintain to the Ends of the World) he Religion of God, and above the Reach and Influence of all hua Laws and Authority; but that Branch of the reform'd Religias conflituted under dertain distinct Regulations, the national urch, is the Religion of the People of England; the Christian Reon is the Creature of Jesus Christ, but the national Church of gland under fuch or fuch a Model of Worship and Discipline, is ely the Creature of the Legislature; and as that Power that can ethe Ese, can certainly give the Modus essendi, the Legislative wer which first constituted what we call the national Church of gland, under those certain Rules and Conditions of external Worand Discipline, can upon occasion new model and rectify it as nd main y please, safe always the fundamental Articles of the Christian igion, which no Power under Heaven can dispense with, innoin Subor dinatica wate or alter. If we ask these Gentlemen, who are so full of their divine Commission and so empty of the Essects and Influence of it By what Means or from what Authority the Church of England de rives either the Form or Power which she at present injoys? they will believe be puzzl'd to find out any other rational and satisfactor Answer, than because she is so constituted and establish'd by the Law of the Land. This the very Expression so common in their Mouth of the Church of England as by Law establish'd eternally imposs the Church of England as by Law establish'd eternally imposs states, the Power, the Privileges, the Immunities, the Manner of Discipline and Worship, by which we well know they always meatheir Church, are purely the Concessions of the Legislature.

Men as wife, much honester and more religious than themicing will therefore make a great Distinction, and that without offending their Consciences too, between the Christian Religion as deliver'd the World by Jesus Christ, the only Fountain of all Purity and Pe fection, and his holy Apostles and Disciples, as Men subject to the Weakness of human Nature, tho' influenced in a peculiar mann by the holy Spirit; and the national Church of England as by La establish'd, that derives only from the human Institution of the fi Reformers, and receiv'd its Establishment from the Legislature, on pos'd of Men liable to all the Imperfections of Humanity, with the Aid and Influence, otherwise than in the Course of a gene Providence, of the same Degree of heavenly Inspiration, by whi we are fure the holy Apostles and Disciples were illuminated and rected. The former, like its heavenly Author, all Purity and Pe fection, teaches the most admirable Morals that eyer were discore to the World, the whole End and Defign of it being Peace, Lo Concord, Humility, Meekness, brotherly Love, Charity, forgetti and forgiving Injuries, and whatever elfe there is of Good, of Gra ous and of Excellent, that can contribute either to the Tranquil and Happiness of a particular Nation, or the universal Good of M kind in this World, and their evernal Salvation in the next; the ter, I mean the Church of England as a Church, as it derives from Fountain less pure and perfect, namely that only of human Wildo partakes of the Imperfections of its Original, and is equally la to Error and Corruption; but this by no means from the Nature the most pure Religion the professes, but by Accident and the Ab of her Professors: For if these Men degenerate into so ihamelt Degree of Impiety, as to preach up fuch Doctrines and Opinio and foist them upon the excellent establish'd Church, as eviden tend to destroy all those divine and amiable Vertues and Quality which pure and undefil'd Christianity inforces; if they prom and propagate Discord, Dissentions, Envy, Hatred, Malice, Ra and all Uncharitableness; if they continually preach up Diviso Jealousies, Animosities and Distractions amongst Men, such as sturb and confound both the publick and private Happiness and Po of Nations, and thereby indanger the Salvation of all fuch as are happily missed and influenc'd by them; such Men may call the felves, if they please, Ministers of the Church of England, the's

rewicked enough thus leudly to corrupt and proflitute the most rellent Doorrines and Intentions of it to their deteftable Purpofes, at they can never call themselves, or I am very sure never prove emselves to be the Ministers of Jesus Christ, or of the most pure d divine Religion he shed his most precious Blood to propagate. that the pure reform'd Christian Religion, as made National, and ablish'd by our Laws, is in Propriety of Speech the true and geine Church of England, which every honest English Protestant ight, and I hope will facrifice his Life to preserve; but as corpted and prophan'd by the Impiety of mercenary Priests into a rade to cover and countenance the worst Designs, fall'n from her tegrity and dwindl'd into Craft, is in the same Propriety of Speech hat we call High-Church, and is at best but the perverted Church a miserable Faction. As the Churches of Ferusalem, Antioch d Alexandria, tho' establish'd by the holy A postles themselves and their Disciples, and all others in the first and purest Ages of Christimy never fet up for an Infallibility, or a perfect and incorruptible priv, but have err'd; so all others in all Ages since have been liato err, and have err'd. There is nothing in this World but what finite and imperfect, nor is the Perfection of Infallibility the Pare of any Condition, Church or Profession of Life in it, except albys that divine one of Rome, which the true Church of England, thas happily reform'd from her Impieties, will ever be asham'd copy after, tho' the High-Church of England we are fure is not; therefore Errors in Discipline and Worship, or even in the Dispenions of the Doctrines the professes, are by the Abuse and Corrupn of the Priesthood crept into the Church of England, those rors and Abuses are cognizable and corrigible by the supream Powof the Legislature, which constituted her a national Church; and Ministers, the wicked Authors of those Errors and Abuses, puhible like other Men, with the utmost Severity of the Laws, acding to their Demerits, both as Corrupters of the Religion of teltablish'd Church, and Disturbers of the civil Peace of the Nanay I maintain, that as Crimes of this Nature ought least of Mankind be expected from Men of their Character, the Justice the Laws can never be effeem'd too rigorous and severe in their nishment.

This is a Doctrine that I very well know will be damn'd, Bell, ok and Candle, as heretical by the Priests of the High Church tion, who so eagerly lust after an Independency from the State, an Exemption, after the manner of their Brethren of Rome, from Givil Power and Jurisdiction; nor am I insensible how the Perwho tells them these bold and honest Truths is like to fare in the mions of Men who know no Mercy, yet if they will please to be that he is in no manner of Pain for what they shall think, or at they can do, they will spare themselves the trouble of unneary Resembnents, and him that of his Contempt of them; and hout pretending to be wifer than the rest of my Neighbours, I ltake upon me further to assure them, for I have notable Intellice, that the time is not far off when they shall be made sensible, that they are not only and ever shall be dependent on, but punish according to their Delinquences by the Civil Power for attempting to be otherwise; and that the Church of England, as it is a Member of the Politick Body of the Nation, an Occonomy confifting of He nours, Dignities, Emoluments and certain Privileges and Immun ties, is in a capacity of being regulated according to the Pleasure the Legislature; tho', as has been affirm'd, no Power under the Sr can alter or change, without the last Presumption and Impiety, a essential and fundamental Article of the Christian Religion she on fesses necessary to Salvation. It is but too evident, that the sham less Clamours these Men have rais'd about the Dangers of the Church are not concerning it in the first and purest Sense of it, but for the Church as inviron'd with Honours, Power, Dignity and Rich and their Concern for it little or none at all in a spirititual and tru religious one. Touch not the Pomp, the Splendour, the Magni cence and Authority of their Church, and they are the most an and peaceable Creatures in the World to Suffer you to do what w please with the Religion of it; yet we hope and question not to to fee the time, when the scandalous Doctrines of late foisted up our excellent Church by her wicked mercenary Priests, shall bed own'd and rejected with all the Scorn and Detestation they defer and the infamous Authors of them as severely punish'd; and yet the true and pure National Church professing the Protestant, reform Religion of Jesus Christ in its original Purity, preserv'd intire in its just and legitimate Honours, Dignities and Authority, with while the Laws of the Land have thought fit to invest her. There is honest Protestant Englishman can ever wish, much less design t least Evil to the most excellent of all the reform'd Churches, that his own Country; and I am as confident, that no fuch Englishm who has a Grain of Wisdom or good Sense with his Honesty, w ever consent or permit the Church in their Sense to attain to h an Excess of Power, as by no means belongs to it, and which a will not fail to be abus'd, will naturally tend to the Establishment a spiritual Tyranny, of a thousand times worse and more danger Consequence to the Peace and Happiness of the Nation than a po tical one, inasmuch as the Consciences and Souls of Men are of finite more Value and Confideration than their Bodies and Ellat The Questions and idle Clamours that have of late so rudely renta torn the Bowels both of Church and State, are not concerning ligion and the Purity of Doctrine, but the Interests and Power the Priesthood; 'tis a War of the Priest, not of the Church, vest him with the belov'd Independency, Power and Authority contends for, and he will not fail in a Return of Gratitude to the foolish honest Layman who gives them to the Devil; for Laity, as they are pleas'd to distinguish them by a certain Sophil unknown to the first Ages of the Church, can from what is expect no other than to be the servile drudging Gibeonites, to the Wood and draw the Water of their imperious Tyrants the La of the Spiritualities, by the bleffed Effects we have already feen felt of the Abuse of that Degree of Power the Laws have allo mish

Just Heaven, who sees and knows the quity of their Hearts and Deligns, either open their Eyes that the may be sensible e'er it is too late, and repent of their Crimes; a they are hardned in them, put them out, that they may fall in the Ditch, and be buried under the Ruins they have dug a prepared for their honester Fellow-Subjects and Fellow-Chil ans.

The Devil and his Disciples, the Jesuits, have sown this cur unhappy Distinction of Whig and Tory amongst the People, that brought them to the very Brink of Ruin, by the near Profped the Re-establishment of Popery, Slavery, and arbitrary Power; a refin'd it into Low and High-Churchmen amongst the Clergy, compleat and finish so laudable a Design. The Vertue, Firmnelsa Courage of the former who retain the Purity of their Religon, the Integrity of the political Principles of their Forefathers and ancient Constitution, have hitherto, by the Bleffing of God, and and resolutely stood in the Gap, and preserv'd both the States Church from that Deluge of Ruin, the others by their wicked A fices were pouring in to overwhelm them both in the general Dell ction. eff Enemies, or the Certainty and Suddenness of the Evils that are ready to break in upon them. Preposlession and Prejudice are ever attended with Passion, which casts a Mist before Mens Eyes, and hinders them from feeing into the Bottom of Defigas, which under the specious Colour of Religion, and the publick Good, are leading them directly into the Subversion of them both; to this add the Ignorance of some, and the Corruption and Obstinacy of others, and the Work of Ruin is near finish'd; but they, who without them, are capable of examining the true Nature and Reason of Things as they are in cool Blood, and neither fuffer themselves to be abus'd into a blind and implicit Belief, by the Craft and plaufible Infinuations of he Prieft, or missed into the general Corruption by the powerful Motives of a private Interest, will with half an Eye perceive, that he whole End and Intention of such Doctrines is no other than to prepare the Way to the Accomplishment of the private Defigns of particular Men, who meditate a Change in an ancient Government, the more easily to establish their own Fortunes; though upon the Ruin of the Religion, Liberties, Honour and Happiness of their Country. It must be acknowledg'd, indeed, that these Doctrines are amirably calculated for the Meridians of Constantinople, Ispahan, Debli or Ayra, or not to travel so far, for those of Rome, Verfailles or Madrid, the Subjects of which former are naturally Slaves, and the atter by their Cowardice and Treachery are in a very fair way of eing reduc'd into the same blessed Condition; but to propagate them na noble and generous Nation, whose Freedom is as ancient as their Being, and who have had the Vertue and good Fortune, through he course of so many Ages, to have preserved it intire, they are vibly the frantick Villany of a treacherous High-Church Priesthood, he veritable Pharisees of the Christian Religion, who for their priate Ends inceffantly labour to reduce their Native Country into the ame miserable Condition of Servitude with the former, by the one afallible Means of the Establishment of their darling Pretender; ut there is ever a certain Infatuation of the Mind that attends the centrick Motions of an irregular and ill-concerted Ambition, which inders Men from reflecting on the Folly, the Wickedness and Daners of their Enterprises, till they are made sensible of them by the everity of their Punishment.

No Man can be ignorant that, fince these mischievous Doctrines—were utterly unknown to these Nations till the last unhappy Age, it annot be understood that they can, with so much Violence and Aplication, be industriously reviv'd and propagated in this, otherwise han in view of some certain and particular Design; and as all true Englishmen esteem'd themselves happy and contented upon the Foot of the Re-establishment of their ancient Government in the Success of he late glorious Revolution, so I think no Man, who heartily loves is Country, can with Patience see Principles and Doctrines adamc'd, and publickly preach'd up to the People, that are absolutely neonsistent both with that and their original Constitution, without toncluding that it is done purely with the Design to make a Change at the Government, and utterly to renverse that Form of it, which

coft our generous Ancestors so much Blood and Treasure to establish and transmit to us, and ourselves so much more to bring about a Revolution to pass it surely to our Posterity. The Man must be very blind who does not fee not only the Danger, but the utter Ru. in and Subversion both of the established Religion and the State, in the Introduction of the Pretender by the Power of a French Army, and much blinder if he will not perceive that this only is the fole End and Defign, both of the Principles and the Authors of them; and he is either an infamous Traitor to God and his Country, or the most despicable of Cowards, who will not sacrifice his Blood and For. tune to prevent it. 'Tis the highest Pitch of Glory a Man can arrive at in this World, to dye with his Sword in his Hand in the Defenced the Religion and Liberties of his dear Country; as it is the lowest and last Degree of Infamy and Dishonour to betray them, and line tamely under the miserable Condition of an inglorious Servitude after having injoy'd the Blessings of an immemorial Freedom, that has so eminently distinguished us from all the Nations round 'Tis the Aggravation of the Miseries of the damn'd to have once been happy; and will be the terrible Aggravation of ours, when we are groaning under the Yoak of an infunportable Slavery, and dragging out a miserable Life with the Chains of Popery, arbitrary Power, merciless Priests and French Tyranny; when we shall lift up our Eyes and reflect upon the Delights and Bleffings of that glorious Paradice we ful have forteited and lost by our Treachery or Cowardice. He who by fuch novel and pernicious Doctrines bestows an Excel of Power on his Prince, or indeed any more than the Laws allow him, is a vile Betrayer of his own and Fellow-Subjects Liberties because Slavery is an inseparable Appendage of unrestrain'd and a bitrary Power; but he who fees that fuch a Power is not of itself fufficient in how great a Degree soever granted him, without the Affistance of a foreign Aid, and calls that in to accomplish his Wick edness, is doubly guilty, both in his Intention to inflave his Fellow subjects to the despotical Domination of his natural Prince, and equally exposing them to the Insults and Violences of a foreign One yet this is demonstrably the fole End of these Men and their Do Ctrines at this time of the Day, who whilst by their fulsome flatter ing Concessions of an immoderate and uncontrolable Power about the Laws, they enable a Legal limited Prince to degenerate into Tyrant, at the same time call in the Affishance of the Popish French tis true their best Friends, but the Nation's worst Enemies, to field the Work. This new Policy of modelling a Protestant Government and providing for the Security of the Protestant Religion by Ministry and Intervention of the Pope and French Jesuits, is sud a One as could never have enter'd into the Head or Heart of any B glishman but those of the venerable High-Church Complection, whi we very well know bear a wondrous Esteem and Affinity to the former. It will doubtless in time be an admirable Expedient to the Conversion of the obstinate Protestant Hereticks of these Nat ons, after the divine Manner of their new French Friends, who wi become their Masters, to do it by the irresistible Eloquence of agooning, which we all are satisfied is extreamly Primitive and ostolical. If Slavery be the unavoidable Effect and Consequence an Absolute and Arbitrary Power; if at this time the trumping an Hereditary unalienable Right, cannot be suppos'd to mean thing elfe than to reproach the Nation with the Injustice they e done the Pretender, in depriving him of a Succession they had Power to meddle with, and by disposing the Minds of the Peoto plane the way to his Establishment; and if calling a Popish eign Power to effect all this, be the highest Treason a Man in the and Sense of our Laws can be guilty of; what Obligations then ethese Nations to Men whose Principles, Doctrines and Practice not possibly be understood to have any other End or Intention? dif fuch Men would seriously lay their Hands upon their Hearts, will feriously consider in time, when the Nation shall rouze out the fatal Lethargy with which they have infatuated fo great a tof it, when they shall open their Eyes to see the Wickedness of rBosom-Enemies, and the inevitable Ruin of their Religion and erties from their foreign Ones, whether any Punishment that can devis'd or inflicted on them, ought to be thought too fevere and brows for the Guilt of so infamous a Treachery. I these Doctrines, with all their dangerous and unavoidable Convences, are not the immediate and genuine Productions of the rupt and bigoted Zeal of High-Church Priests and theirs alone, them dislown them, and tell us on whom else we can with justice er the cursed Spawn, and we will spare them our Reflections, place them to the Account of some Body else; but this is a ce of Sincerity so little to be expected from Men who are without our, Conscience, or Love for their Country, and who seem to from disclaiming them, that they make their Glory and Boast of at would be their Infamy and Confusion, if they had the least in of either. Success is apt to harden Men in evil Enterprises, these but too well see how far a prosperous Wickedness, imvd by the Address and Arts of skilful Managers, has advanc'd, ive it over; and as by what they have already done, they flatthemselves to have arriv'd near the End of all their Wishes, they puble their Instances, and have of late in all manner of Sermons Pamphlets inforc'd the Poison of their Opinions with greater ence, and a more barefac'd Impudence than ever. Thus far, inthey may be in the right; for when Men have conspir'd and ed into the wicked Design of betraying their Country, the Sword rawn, and it is the best way to throw away the Scabbard. Your P-pac'd Politician will never boggle when his Hand is in, at any as how vile soever that will contribute to gain his End; and e Gentlemen very well know, that Confusion and Punishments their certain Lot if they miscarry in their Designs; and we as know that the last Miseries and Calamities of Slavery and Suthion are as inevitably ours, and the whole Nation's, in the Ruin Por Religion and Liberties, if they succeed. Their Business is troduce the Pretender, under whose shelter they only can, with Reason, expect not only Protection, but the noblest Rewards for so meritorious and extraordinary a Service; ours to keep him on and confound both his and their Devices; theirs to overturn our and cient established Government, the Extirpation of the reform'd Rel gion, and the final Subvertion of our Laws and Liberties; ours expend our dearest Blood and Fortunes in the glorious Toil of defen ing and preferving them all in their intire, with that Vertue, Co rage and immovable Firmnels, as shall compel the worst of ourge mies to acknowledge that we were at least worthy of a better De ny, if we are to perish in so noble an Attempt. We cheerfu leave the Iffue in the Hands of that all-wife eternal Providence, whi governs and directs all Things for the Good and Happiness of Ma kind; and only humbly implore that good and just God to fare with his Bleffings and Affiftance the Caufe that is most just and in teous, and those of the contending Parties, whose Doctrines Principles are most conformable to his divine eternal Truths, who with the most Sincerity intend and pursue his Glory, the G and Security of the national reform'd Religion, the general Well of Mankind, and the Peace, the true Interest, and particular H piness of our own poor divided and distracted Country.

Yet these are the Men, who by a certain Figure of High-Chu Rhetorick which in the vulgar Language of the poor despised we call Arrogance, distinguish themselves under the glorious tle and Character of the Church of England; they ingross to the ielves what ought to be in common with the rest of their Fell Christians; for as a wittier Man has observ'd before me, they no more properly be call'd the Church, than the Drums and Tru pets of an Army can, in propriety of Speech, be call'd the Am in this indeed they agree and resemble, that they equally best Drum and found the Trumpet, one to Arms and Battel in the the other to Sedition and Rebellion in the State; but in this wonderfully differ, that the one participate and share the Da with their Fellow-Soldiers whom they excite to the Charge, and other as industriously as prudently withdraw and avoid it, and le those unthinking Blockheads they ingage in their Quarrel to beat one anothers Brains, whom they will be fure to use like Slaves, their Expence they establish their Power, for the Reward of t Folly and Madness. We have been always taught that the Ca lick or Universal Church of Christ consisted of the whole Body Believers, whilft Christianity was in its Integrity, where-ever stressed or dispersed upon the Face of the whole Earth; and the Profession of the Christian Religion, when confin'd within limits of a national Church, included every Member of it will Distinction, who affented to and believ'd all the necessary and damental Articles of it necessary to Salvation, till Priest-crast stituted the divine Virgin into a Trade and Commerce of late nor are we unwilling to leave them the distinction of Church or Clergymen, and shall be glad to fee them not profane it, as fet apart for the Administration of holy Things, and to convey lacred Mysteries of their Religion to their Fellow-Christians Exercise of a Function, which every Man will honour and revol when it is discharg'd with that Integrity and Probity of Man מס מ

hat become and are effential to it; but they will excuse us, if they leafe, when we tell them that every true Believer, of the meanest condition and Profession of found Faith and honest Practice, has as such right to be esteem'd a Member of the universal Church of hrift, and of the particular Church of England as by Law estaish'd, as e're an Arch-bishop, Bishop, Priest or Deacon, by what lame or Title dignity'd or distinguished, in the Nation; and that neier the Priesthood nor the People separately, but the Priesthood and e People together mutually compose and constitute what we underand by and call the national Church of England. We are not insafible, that in their Opinion, the profane Laity are impious and criligious to the last Degree, who shall presume to concern themives or meddle with the Pomp, the Splendor, the Magnificence ad Authority of what these Men constantly mean and understand the Church, with little or no regard to the Substance and Propaation of true Religion, which is the Essential of every Church: And ough the Pride and Insolence of these Men, who arrogate all the onour of that Character to themselves, will not admit the Laity to a Participation of Fellowship in the national Church; yet a terble Day of Reckoning shall come, when Jesus Christ, the only righous Judge, shall reward the honest humble Layman, who firmly eliev'd and constantly endeavour'd to practife the Duties of his diine Religion, as a Member of his Church militant; when the proud dhaughty Churchman of Profession, with all his arrogated Titles nd Distinctions, who profanes his facred Function and Character to he vile and wicked Purposes of secular Ambition and Self-interest, all of all forts of Men be most severely punished; for if in this ife only they had their Hope in him, they may be truly faid to be f all Men most miserable.

If there be any thing in these Reflections that seems severe, I am to tell my honest Countrymen, that the consideration of the onour and Interest of my Country, is with me of infinitely more leight and Confideration, than that of all the Clergymen who are it as luch; they intend their private Interest, and I the publick. honour and adore the most excellent Religion of the established hurch, in which I had the Happiness to be born and educated, and mich I shall cheerfully die defending; but I detest the Perfidiousels of such Clergymen, as can fall into such a degree of Wickedess as to contribute by any means to betray it; and as it is impossie for any Man of ill Principles ever to be of good Manners, they ho propagate such as visibly tend to the Pollution of the Purity Religion, and the Disturbance of the Tranquility of the State, elerve to be treated with Scorn and Contempt, and punished with eutmost Severity of the Laws. When Men in pursuit only of priate Designs preach up such Doctrines, and father them upon the uthority of the holy Scriptures, whose sole End is Peace, Love, urity, and the general Good of Mankind in this World and the ext, they are to be treated as Banditti and Robbers, the common aemies of all Men; as their Hand is against every Man, every Man's land ought to be against them; they put themselves out of the reach f Compassion or good Usage; theirs is not a Frailty of human Nature, 'tis a study'd and concerted Evil of the Will; 'tis Obstinary, the result of a perverted Heart and Conscience; the former may plead Excuse, the latter deserves only Detestation and Punishment; their principal End with respect to themselves, is to grasp at a Power which is foreign to their Function and Character, and indeed in. compatible with true Religion, and which we are but too well affur'd by the Histories of all Ages, they never got into their Hands but they abus'd it to the certain Prejudice and Oppression of their indifcreet Benefactors, and to fill the World with Confusions and Disorders. Let any Man reflect on their Behaviour fince the Policy of Constantine first made the Church rich, and the famous Ma. thilda, and after her the crafty Zeal of Pepin and Charlemain, who to secure a Crown usurp'd from Chilperick, who indeed never de. ferv'd to wear it, augmented both her Riches and Power, by the Concessions of large Territories, in Effect none of their own but the Greek Emperors, will easily be convinced of the Truth of what in this respect I have advanc'd; yet these Concessions, founded only upon Fraud and Usurpation, were in a trice, by Vertue of thele spirititual Jugglers, sanctify'd into the Patrimony of the Church and St. Peter, whose Sword of the Flesh, rather than of the Spirit, they have ever fince most divinely imploy'd to the Detriment and Disturbance of all the Kingdoms and Common-wealths in Europe Their gracious Successors, as they are pleas'd to call themselves, have in all Ages continu'd exactly to copy after such excellent On ginals; and those of our own Days and our own Church (I am always understood to mean that Part of it debauch'd into High Church have sufficiently prov'd, that as they have the same itch of grasping at inordinate Power, no matter by what Means fo they get it, have the same admirable Talent of abuting it. This is as evident to any who is acquainted with the Affairs and Behaviour of the Clergy in all Catholick Countries, as Light from the Sun; nor with respect to ourselves do we stand in need of any other Proof of it, than the Pri-Aice of our own High Churchmen ever fince the Reformation, a gainst the first Puritans and their diffenting Brethren ever fince, who they had enough of it in their Hands, to show their Resentments in the Severity of their Treatment. If they were contented with the honest and moderate Exercise of the just Power the Laws allow them for the Discipline and Oeconomy of their Hierarchy, Men would have had no Reason to be dissatisfy'd; but when they siercely con tend for such a Degree and Excess of it, as is utterly incompatible with the Peace and Safety of the State, I humbly conceive, that a honest Englishman, who loves his Country, may be excus'd if hel angry; and who with all Submission takes leave to advance, the it is the Business of the Legislature to teach Men more Moderation and better Manners, whose principal End is to arrive at so much as I time shall enable them to become their Masters.

I neither expect or defire to find Credit to this Truth upon my own bare Affeveration; I profess my self to be their Adversary and their Enemy as far as my Religion, which I understand as well as any of them, and hope to practise it better, will permit me to be so; but I pretend to refer and appeal to an Authority, which the boldess

hemselves will not have the Considence to reject or dispute, I mean he Propositions they advanc'd in their last Sessions in their Lower house of Convocation, which may be understood as the general Senment of the whole Body of the High-Church; a Majority of Rerefentatives always determing in such Cases, though every particur Member of that Distinction may, in some things, dissent from hem; and this I only say in a supposition, if any of them do, which very much to be question'd, 'Tis true the things they contain were first but whisper'd about and privately infinuated to feel the Pulse, nd to try what Dispositions the People were in to receive them; but Arrogance is ever augmented when supported by Power, they bean to think themselves (in a favourable Conjuncture, when they ad so many excellent Churchmen, of the new Edition, in the Maagement of Affairs) in a Capacity publickly to maintain such Theses, which all Englishmen hope to see them one Day as severely and ublickly punished as the vile Disturbers of Mens Minds and Conjences, and of the publick Peace and Happiness of the Nation, dare as follow, only as a Taste and Specimen of the Treat they are eparing for us, if they find us Sots enough to swallow and digest iele.

I. That the Catholick Church is a Body subject to one only Exteral Government.

II. That every Christian is oblig'd to submit to the Laws of this atholick Church under pain of Damnation.

III. That the Church is independent of the State.

IV. That the Church alone has the Power to offer the mystical ody of Christ in Sacrifice.

V. That Episcopal Ordination is absolutely necessary for the Calling the Ministers of the Gospel.

VI. That the Church and her Ministers have the Power of pardon-

One would imagine upon the first fight of these notable Propositiis, that we were either in Italy or Spain, or at least, that the Poh Religion were already re establish'd in England; for we cannot t believe that they who so impudently advance them in a Protant Country, would be wonderfully well pleas'd it should be so; ace they are the constant Sentiments and Doctrines of the Church Rome, and altogether as confishent with the Purity of the Religion the Church of England and Peace of the State as the Majs; yet chas they are, I pretend to maintain that some of them are absotely false, and am as sure that the wifest of them cannot prove e rest of them to be true, and that they are all as groundless and Iwarrantable in the Mouth of a Priest of the Church of England. they are in the last Degree scandalous and arrogant, I mean, in e absolute and dogmatical Sense that they have recommended em. These Gentlemen would have done Right to themselves, Id Justice to the rest of their Fellow-Subjects, if they had pleas d the same time to have explain'd themselves a little, so as to be un. erstood what they mean by the Catholick Church in their first Arcle, for we are weary of their indifinite and general manner of pressing themselves, which fignifie and determine nothing; there's too much French in it, which we of the Low Church cannot approve. though we are fure those of the High do : For if by the Catholick Church, they mean the whole Body of true Believers, agreeing and affenting to all the fundamental Doctrines of Christianity, in which only Sense it can be properly understood and call'd so, their Proposition is demonstrably fille; for all the separate Members that compose the Body of the Catholick Church, are not under one and the same external Government, or ever were under the Direction or Jurisdiction of any one Head as Supream in this World. Jesus Christ himself alone, we all know and allow, is the sole Invisible Head of the Catholick or Universal Church Militant here on Earth, who has oblig'd himself by an eternal and unalterable Promise to take care of it to the End of the World; but in every Nation under Heaven (those under the tyrannical Usurpation of Rome only excepted) where the Christian Religion is profess'd and establish'd by Law, those under him are properly said to be the visible Head of every Church whom the supream Legislature have thought fit to appoint to be for and in those Heathenish Countries where it is only suffer d to be profess'd, but not so establish'd, no Body can deny but that the Body of the Clergy with the Elders of the People, have the Power to elect and appoint those to be at the Head of their Church for the Regulation of the Discipline and Occonomy of it, who for their Wildom, Learning and Piety, they think may best deserve it. 'Ti not of this Place to examine the Usurpations of an insolent Priest who for many Ages has arrogated to himfelf the Title and Power of the sole Head of the Universal Church; but we very well know that in the beginning of the Contest, the Churches both of Grun Asia and Africk, vigorously oppos'd, and as absolutely deny'd and rejected any fuch Universality in the Bishop of Rome; so did the Æthiopick Churches, and that of Ruffia, which to this Day acknow ledges no such Authority and Jurisdiction in him, nor submit to the same Forms and Regulations of external Government: Nay the Church of France, all Catholick as She is, though for certain Reasons of Policy they in some Measure acknowledge the Bisho of Rome for their Head, yet are govern'd by Maxims of their own and absolutely reject his Power and Authority, in several the mol material Branches of the Ecclefiastical Regiment of the Gallina Church, as is evident from their four famous Propositions of 1684 and the notable Instance of the Regale. We as well know that the Honour and Authority was early and often pretended to by the Bishops, but was as often and vigorously oppos'd by all the out Churches; and never had the Formality of an imperial Sanction but upon a very extraordinary and commendable an Occasion. certain Villain, to arrive at the Greek Empire, nam'd Phocas, mur der'd his Master and Benefactor the Emperor Mauritius and hi whole Family, after the most inhumane and execrable Manner the ever was, and to confecrate fo pious a Villany, apply'd to the mo holy Bishop of Rome, Boniface the Third, for his Confirmation of the Throne; the good Father consented and gave it in ample Form and in return of Gratitude was complimented by his Monster with the Title of Universal Bishop. etended Universality, erected solely upon the sanctify'd Basis of erjury, Murder and Usurpation ! Worthy Commencement, and ceedingly for the Reputation of the Head of the Catholick Church Jesus Christ! All the reform'd Protestant Churches have actually hihdrawn themselves from his Obedience, and by renouncing both s Authority and Errors, have happily freed themselves from the urthen of the most insupportable of all Yoaks, that of his Spirial Tyranny, to which these honest Men would again inslave us; tit is to be suppos'd that they will not deny, but that all these diat Churches are the Members that jointly constitute the Body of c Catholick Church of Christ when it signifies Universal, that is, e whole number of true Believers scatter'd over the Face of the hole Earth, under what Forms and Manner of Discipline soever ey may happen to be distinguished; for it is not Form, but Bee, that is of the Essence of every true Church; and as it is past ontradiction evident, that they never were, are, or possibly ever all be under one and the same only Head and external Governent, it is as manifest that the Proposition that affirms them to be , is evidently false. If they deny that all these distinct Churches e Members of the Catholick, or maintain that it is absolutely nefary that every Member of the Church of Christ should conform every Instance to any one that they are pleas'd to esteem such; ppose that of Rome, which alone pretends to it, and without hich it cannot pretend to be a true Church, and consequently not be a Member of the Catholick one, they will do well to affign some better Reason and Authority than barely their own for dog io, if they expect to find Credit with us; for we don't rememer to have read, that either Jesus Christ himselt or any of his Apoles and Disciples, or any of their Successors of the first two or three enturies, prescrib'd any certain Form and Manner of Discipline nd Worship, as a Mark and Characteristick of his Church, to hich all others, as they should encrease and multiply, should be big'd to conform under Pain of being excluded the Fellowship ad Participation of his Universal Church; or indeed, that in the me I have mention'd, either he or they requir'd any more than a rm and fincere Assent and Belief of all the fundamental Articles his divine Religion necessary to their Salvation, and an Integrity f Manners and Practice conformable to them; for the rest they pay excuse us, if we tell them that the various and different Forms Worship and Discipline of the Churches dispers'd over the Face f the Earth are purely of Humane Institution, and are neither of he Effence of a Catholick or any particular Church as Member of it, rotesting all the Fundamentals of the Christian Religion.

But without further meddling or concerning our selves with the lifairs of Foreign Churches, we pretend to affirm, that we neither lave or acknowledge any visible Head of our National Church ut our Kings, whom the Laws of the Land alone have constituted uch, without any manner of regard to the Presumptions of the Pope of Rome, or Insolence of the Priests of the High Church of England; and as it is impossible for the Prince to be immediately oncern'd in the Administration of holy Things the same Laws have invested him with the Power of appointing subordinate Officers in the Church for that Purpose, with the Grant of certain limited Powers, Honours, Dignities, Emoluments, Privileges and Preemi nences, which Custom, Prescription, and Circumstances of Affain have render'd practicable, but how convenable to the Nature and Intention of the Character and Profession, I don't pretend to deter mine, but according to my little Knowledge, not very Primitived Apostolical. Our first Reformers thought fit to model and establish the Protestant Religion in the National Church, under the Direction and Administration of Bishops, which without Controversy is of a other Forms the most decent and estimable as most conformable to the Manner and Practice of the Primitive Churches. Thefe in some Sense are faid to be Heads of our Church, but in Subordina tion, and under our Kings, inasmuch as they are intrusted with the Guardianship and Regiment of the establish'd Discipline and Octo nomy of it; as our Kings themselves are said to be the Head of the Common-wealth, because they are invested and intrusted with the supream executive Power; it being as impossible as unnecessar for every Branch of the Legislature to exist at all and the same times Our Bishops in this limited Sense are said to be the Heads of ou Church as they are appointed to the Execution of the Eccleinship Polity. In relation to our Kings, we say that all Power is imme diately from God; but the Modification, the Determining, the De gree and Manner of it, is originally the result of the Choice and Con fent of a free People: Thus in relation to these visible Heads of the Church, the Bishops, all Power is from Heaven as its Foun ain; bu the Quantum, and the Manner of the Discharge and Executiono it, is directly from the Prince; but both the Regal Power in the Prince, and the delegation of it to the Bishops, as to the governm part that imports and denominates Headship, are equally and orig nally the Gift and Concession of the People. It is very distant from my Intention or Principles, to dispute the Sanction and At thority of Episcopacy: I honour and teverence the Order as Prim tive and Apostolical, and of all others the most contributing Peace, Unity, Decency and Order, whilst in the Hands of Men wh understand the Excellence, and practise the Purity of it in its fr Intention; and it were heartily to be wish'd, that the Conduct a Behaviour of some of late Years may not have given Occasion their Adversaries to revive an old Dispute on that Head, which is the Peace and Honour of our Church and Nation would have bet much better to be buried in Oblivion: But as there can never wanting in the Church, Men of Wisdom, Courage and Learning I leave it to them to defend and maintain their Cause against the Reasons or Calumnies of all their Adversaries; and as heartily any Man in the Nation pray that the Church of England maying Ages, even to the Ends of the World, remain under the happ Constitution and Influence, in which by our wife and pious Re formers it was first establish'd; and that as the Order of Epilo pacy is the diffinguishing Honour of our Protestant Church, it ma ever fall into the Hands of Men, who by their Wildom, Piety, Lean ing, Courage, Love of their Country, and all other Christian Vo ers in

ues, may be an Honour to the Order. This then is the Constitunon of the civil State; this the Nature and Establishment of the Ecclesiastick in our own Nation. I would therefore ask of these Caholick Gentlemen Innovators, whether the National Church of ingland, under fuch an Oeconomy be a Church or no? Whether it e the Catholick Church, or whether it be only a Member of it? suppose they will hardly deny the First, for then they themselves re no Priests or Members of that Church; nor affirm the Second, cause such a Notion is absurd of it self, as exclusive of all the ther Churches in the World, or makes them but Members and deendent on her felf: It remains therefore to confess that the Church f England as by Law established, is only a true Member of the Caholick Church, as it implies the Universal Church of Christ, that s of the whole Body of true Believers, affenting to and practifing Il the fundamental Doctrines deliver'd by Jesus Christ and his holy postles and Disciples as absolutely necessary to Salvation. And if his be granted, which cannot reasonably be deny'd, what then beomes of the Truth and Modesty of a Proposition which maintains hat the Catholick Church is one Body under one and the same sternal Government: Since ours is not that Catholick Church aone (nor any other fingle Church in the Universe) but the most ure and excellent Branch and Member of it, independent on any ower under Heaven but that which form'd and establish'd it with s National; govern'd and regulated by a delegated Power to her ishops, under the Favour and Protection of our Kings, who are er supream visible Head here on Earth; having her own Canons and Constitutions, which all receive their Force and Vertue from hat which is alone the supream Power that establishes all things in very free Nation, and particularly in our own, I mean the whole egillature.

But there is another notable latent Sense, and that we don't in he least question is what they intend, in which their Proposition is something of Truth; yet if they mean by the Catholick Church. ith the old Absurdity of a particular Universal, only the Church Rome, in which we acknowledge that all those of the same Suentition with her acknowledge both her Authority and Jurisdiion, and submit to the Pope as their Head, at least in appearance, one and the same external manner of Government: These Men e to know, that the Title of the Catholick Church in truth bengs no more to that of Rome, than to the Greek, the Eastern or ly other Church under the Sun; and that the Honour of it, which e infolently affumes, has no other Foundation that what has been ready mention'd, which as these reverend Hypocrites are not inplible of, they would have done well duly to have reflected on. he most she or any other Church can modestly pretend to, is to be Member of the Universal Church of Christ in the only proper tale it is capable of, that is, of the whole Body of true Believers, od that the most Corrupt and Vicious too of any upon the Earth; it let them besides consider, that as the National Church of Enand, as the stands reform'd from her abominable Errors and Suerstitions, so has she as absolutely renounced her Power and Jurisdiction, and consequently in no manner can be esteem'd a Member of her Catholicity in their Sense, which is the only natural One can be understood or meant by their Proposition, viz. That the Church of Rome is the Catholick Church, and all other Churches to be comprehended under it, and to be in Subjection to, and ac. knowledge the Pope as the only Supream visible Head of the whole, to be obey'd in all Things under one and the same external Go. vernment and Jurisdiction; for in any other Sense the Proposition is both false and nonsensical, which are two Reproaches that a Man ought not in Conscience to make to such a Learned, Judicious and Reverend Body as a Majority of an English Convocation. Ad. mirable Doctrine for a Society of Priests of the Reform'd Protefant Church of England ! 'Tis but too true indeed that these her pious Sons have given the World of late but too convincing Proof of their good Inclinations to return again into the Bosom of their dear Mother, both from the Nature and Tendency of their Do. Arines, and the Principles and Practice of their modern Politicks for it is evident enough that such Men as are so very forward to have the State govern'd by Maxims of French Policy, as are una voidably destructive of the original Constitution, without doing them the least Injustice or Breach of common Charity, may be at firm'd to be very well dispos'd to conform their own to the Te nets and Opinions in Matters of Religion to the Gallican Church from whence 'tis but a short Trip over the Alpes, and then we are at our Journey's End. 'Tis then indeed that what these Men now as impudently as falfely urge, that the Catholick Church, and we as Members basely betray'd into a Fellowship and Participation will that of Rome, may be faid to be a Body under the external Govern ment of one supream visible Head, the Pope; but till then wit Truth or Equity it never can: But the good God who put it into the Hearts, and affifted our first pious and courageous Reformer in the glorious Work of separating from her Communion, and the nouncing her Tyrannical Jurisdiction, and has promis'd to continu that Assistance to the Ends of the World, will, we hope and pray defeat the wicked and shameless Designs of those Wretches wh labour hard to plunge us, our Church and Country, into those in pious Superstitions again, as are the Abomination and Reproach the whole Christian Religion, and must be the intire Loss of our civil Liberties.

Their Second, that every Christian is oblig'd to submit to the Laws of the Catholick Church under Pain of Damnation, is of piece with the former, and what they cannot prove either from Divine or Humane Authority to be true; for till they define and do monstrate which is this Catholick Church, 'tis both Nonsense as Impiety, which savour strongly of the Crast of the Priest threaten us with such a terrible Punishment for Disobedience to be Decrees; yet this may notwithstanding be very proper Docton in the Mouth of a Doctor of the Church of Rome, who gives most Weight and Credit to the Decretals and Decisions of a single powithout the Authority of a general Council, than to the holy Scriptures themselves; who can no otherwise support the Interests

But Heaven be prais'd, it is not in the Power of the whole dy of the High-Church Priefthood, their Imitators, to gain inely that Authority and Ascendant, though they have seduc'd but many, over the Minds of People bless'd with the Knowledge d Revelation of the facred Truths of their Religion, as to gain eir Belief of so impious and unwarrantable a Doctrine. e under no manner of Apprehensions of incurring the dread-Punishment of eternal Damnation for the Breach of any Laws, those deliver'd down to us and seal'd with the precious Blood Christ and his holy Apostles; these indeed we acknowage are the eternal Laws, the Precepts and Commands of an orable Divinity, that we are neither permitted to dispute or disey; but we know that the Decretals and Decisions of Popes, e Canons of General Councils, and all other Constitutions of hurches and Churchmen, whether general or particular, are no ore than the result of a Wisdom purely Humane, and we but too ell know but too often interested, subject not only to Error, but the Impostures of a study'd Crast, and to which from the very ture of their Original it is impossible for honest Men in their Sento conceive a Notion that so dreadful a Penalty should be attach'd separably to the Breach or Disobedience of them. If ever we are look for any fuch infallible Authority over the Destiny and Souls Men in the Catholick Church, it ought to be in the Decisions of four Occumenical Councils; and we defire them first to prove at the Canons and Constitutions even of them, which we know by believe preferably to the holy Scriptures, and we no further an as they are confonant and agreeable to them, are genuine; that ey have equally been had in Veneration, and observ'd by all Chrian Churches; and that they were fram'd with the unanimous onsent of the Deligates of the whole Body of true Believers who affituted the respective Christian Churches in the World: The atrary of all which we can past dispute make out, were it of this ace and Defign, before they impudently inforce the Belief of em, and the Consequence of it in their Proposition upon the estahid Church of this Nation under Pain of eternal Damnation; but they know well enough that nothing of all this is possible to be ne, but that it is only the Craft of the Priest for secular Intentis to inflave the People, what Punishment in this World or the at may be due to an Arrogance and Impiety that would terrify eWeak and Credulous, and pretend to bully those in their Senies d better Understanding with so dreadful a Punishment for the each, Non-observance or Disobedience of Ecclesiastical Canons Laws of the Catholick Church, when they themselves very well low that barely as such they have no manner of Force, Vertue or gour of a Law, and consequently in no wise binding or obligato-

Delufions of their Spiritual Tyranny.

But be that as it will with their Enthusiastick Notion of their Ca tholick Church, we have Canons and Constitutions of our own, which are only binding upon us by the Authority they have receiv'd from the Legislature, Independent upon any other Power under Heaven and which for the fake of Peace and Discipline in the Church, lea us into the Duty of Obedience to them as far as we can approved them, without hectoring us with the Terrors of Damnation if we don't; and I leave it to the Men, whose Profession may oblige them to fwear to a punctual Observation of them, to determine, whether any Man amongst them, with a safe and honest Conscience can swea to a nice and scrupulous Appobation and Assent to them all: For lan very certain, that there is no Punishment in this World inseparable affix'd to a Man who refuses his Affent and Obedience to any of them much less of an eternal one in the next. We live under a happy Con stitution, where all the Crimes and Delinquencies of all Sorts and Professions of Men amongst us are equally cognizable and punishable by our own Laws, and not at the Arbitrement of defigning and an bitious Priests, except some few, that by their Nature more immediate ately relate to Ecclefiastical Discipline, which no Man grudges then whilst they pretend to no more; in all others, the Priest as well a the People is liable and obnoxious to the Penalties of the Laws and cording to their Delinquencies, and if by the Default or Negledo the Civil Magistrate the Execution of certain Laws had not been to much relax'd, but exerted with the natural Severity which alway best inforces Justice, and best provides for the Peace and Security both of the State and Church, we should not at this time of Day have felt the Smart and ill Consequences of those Disorders, with white an unfeafonable and too great an Indulgence have incourag'd the fort of Bigots so often to imbroil the Nation. Our holy and exce lent Church speaks in quite another Strain and fort of Language, more Modesty and Reserve of her Authority, in the express Words her twentieth Article. - The Church hath Power to Decree Right or Ceremonies, and Authority in Controversies of Faith: And yell is not lawful for the Church to ordain any thing that is contrary! God's Word written, neither may it so expound one Place of Scrip ture that it be repugnant to another; wherefore, tho' the Church's a Witness and Keeper of holy Writ, yet as it ought not to Decree ny thing against the same, so besides the same it ought not to inform any thing to be believ'd for necessity of Salvation, --- Here are the Christian Sentiments of our first religious Reformers and Compiler of our Articles and most excellent Liturgy in a modest Declaration of the Power and Authority of the Church in Matters purely relig ous and in Controversies about Matters of Faith, which every Ma allows is her due, and convenable to the Nature of the Characte and Profesion of her Pastors, for the Discipline and Order of the

Tis with the same Christian Moderation and Reserve that they ak of the Nature of a national Church in their nineteenth Arti-... The visible Church of Christ is a Congregation of faithful in the which the pure Word of God is preach'd, and the Saments be duly ministred according to Christ's Ordinance, in all ngs that of necessity are requisite to the same. As the Church of rusalem, Alexandria and Antioch have err'd, so also the Church Rome hath, and not only in their Living and Manner of Ceremobut also in Matters of Faith.—What is all this but an honest d ingenuous Acknowledgement of the natural Imperfections and pability of all Churches to err, and be mistaken even in things are most properly of the Essence of a Church, even Matters of th? If then the first and earliest Churches of Christianity, if the arch of Rome and that of England have, and may be liable to Ersand Corruption, either as separate Members, or as they compose whole Body of the Universal Church of Christ; what Punishnt, or indeed Excuse is equal to the Insolence of a small number Priests of a particular unknown High-Church of their own form-, who faucily arrogate to themselves and their Church the Powof damning all Mankind, who will not submit to the Laws and crees of the Catholick Church, without telling us what, or where s Catholick Church is, or to be found, whose Constitutions and crees at best cannot be deny'd to be only the Results of such, who liable to the same Errors and Spirit of Delusion with Men of all er Sorts and Professions? And if we consider how much greater endant Passion, Prejudice and Self-interest generally have over fe fort of Men than most others; what Condition are the Peace Men in in this World, or their Happiness in the next, who are to the Guidance of such fallible and prevaricating Directors? e first general Council of Nice was held, I think in or about the ar 325 of Christ, yet we know even so early what Intrigues, Heats aft and all other wicked means were imploy'd to render that Aibly abortive and of no Effect in Favour of the deteftable Arrian rely, for the Suppression of which it was principally conven'd; inbuch, that if their famous Constantine had not interpos'd the Imial Authority to check and restrain their Frenzy, it would have a broke up with the Reproach of a Meeting compos'd of Knaves Madmen for the Ruin of the State, rather than of wife and learn-Men inspir'd and actuated by the Holy Ghost for the Good and Edition of the Christian Church. We know as well that the same Spirits of Discord, Pride, Malice, Revenge and private Interests more or less reign'd in all general Councils and Ecclefiaftical Sysever fince; and we are too unhappily convinc'd by the constant dice of that usually assembl'd in our own Nation, that not so th the Good and Propagation of the Christian Religion is their

Bufiness as the Inlargement and Augmentation of the Power, Riches Authority and Jurisdiction of their High-Church and Church-man who are fure to have the Management and Administration of them. If these Men would really have us give any Credit to their Nove Dogms and Opinions, let them first convince us that they are Men of more Piety, Wildom, Learning, Probity and good Sense than our first Reformers, whose Sentiments of the Power, Authority and Nature of a Church are so widely different from theirs. The excellent and truly confcientious Persons, by a warm, but justifiable Christian Zeal for the Souls of Men, show'd their Abhorrenc of the Errors, Corruptions, Superstitions and scandalous Usurpations the most degenerate of all Churches that of Rome from which the reform'd; and these by a furious, blind, bigoted and interested in fatuation, are as fait as they can betraying us back again into them by indeavouring to reintroduce the same dangerous Errors of Pow er, Authority, Jurisdiction and Infallibility, and the consequence them, implicite Obedience to all the Laws and Decrees of it, under pain of Damnation, which the former with a generous and chriffa Disdain renounc'd and rejected for ever. There is nothing forth End that these Men affect so much as to have the People belien that these sort of Assemblies are inspir'd and directed by the imme diate Presence and Influence of the holy Spirit; yet we are told by an Authority something better than theirs, that the Works and E fects of that divine adorable Spirit are eternally Peace, Unity, Con cord, Meekness, Humility, Forgiveness, brotherly Love and universe fal Charity. Let them be pleas'd to reflect a little and convincent World, if they think it worth their while, what they have do and what Works of this Nature they have produc'd, either for the neral Good of the Christian Religion, the Peace and Happinels the State, or the particular Glory and Utility of the national Church from the unhappy Time of the Revival of their Convocation to the Day: Whether the Doctrines of these High-Church Priests, for would be understood to speak of no other, are not captious, line ous, and all tending only to private Views and Interests? When in all their Disputes there has not always appear'd more of the li of Persecution than a true Christian Warmth and Zeal for Persua on or Conviction? If rude and unmannerly Reproaches and infol Invectives against their Superiors, the most reverend and learned Bishops, who cannot run into all the Violences of their Infatuation if railing, reviling, abusing, insulting their Equals and their Bette in Moderation and all other Christian Vertues, who have Prob and Courage enough to oppose their Bigotry, have been the confi Practice of these divinely inspir'd Gentlemen of the High Chun Model? If a Pharifaical Pride, Envy, Hatred, Malice and all charitablness, Discord, Disunion, Jealousies, Animosities, unnatu Heats, Divisions, Distractions in the State, and Scandal, Dishono and Reproach to the most excellent Church in the Universe, are natural Productions, as well as the Charactericks of Men who et themselves into the sole Judges and Reformers of an antient of vernment and an establish'd national Church. from Men of fuch an unevangelical Temperament and Complexion? Their Third, that the Church is Independent on the State, is a Proposition of that scandalous Audacity and Extravagance in the Mouth of a Protestant Priest of the Church of England, as the bare mention of it, not only destroys the Credit, but creates an Abhorrence of it in the Heart of every English Gentleman who has any notion of his Religion or Liberty, and is much fitter to convince he World how far the Insolence of such Men is capable of arriving, when they are abetted by Power, and no longer under the restraint of Honour or Conscience, and rather with Scorn and Contempt to e rejected and hooted out of the World with its audacious Authors. han to be thought worthy of a ferious Answer. "Tis true indeed, hat this is the constant Language and darling Tenet of the Church of Rome, which esteems her self not only Independent on all Civil States, but impudently challenges an absolute Superiority over all he Governments and crown'd Heads upon the Earth; and if the Ambition of these Men in her Imitation hurry them to contend for he same Independence and Superiority, 'tis only for the same End hat the does; not to much out of any regard to Religion as to be Masters of a lawless and unrestrain'd Power, that may once again hable them to lord it and domineer over the Persons, Consciences and Estates of their miserable Fellow-Subjects; and that which anongit us infinitely augments and aggravates the strangeness and udacity of such an Opinion and Attempt in thele High Church Priests, is because they well enough know that such an Excess of seular Power is intirely foreign to the very nature of their Profession, which obliges them to renounce the Pomps and Vanities of the World in a much more formal and peremptory manner than any oher fort of Men in it; and that such an Independent Power is abfolutely inconfistent with the fundamental Principles and Policy of our Constitution: They know very well that in Effect they have no Power at all but what they derive purely from the Indulgence of our laws; which as they are a Member of the Body Politick, they are ermitted to exert according to the Tenor and Meaning of the Aricles of their Church in things purely relating to her Discipline, and o determine in Disputes concerning Opinions and Matters of Faith, nd even in these they have no such Degree of it to constrain Men, who may think fit to diffent from them, under any Penalty to believe ust as they do; they know as well that the Canons and Constitutihas of a national Synod, which is the utmost Extent of their Ecclelastical Capacity, (and even that not without the Permission and Writ of Summons from the Crown) are but a dead Letter, till they eceive their Life and Vigour from the Fountain of all Power in a ree Nation, the supream Legislature: They are not at all ignorant f the shameless Nonsence and Absurdity of a Proposition that aierts two Independent Powers in the same Kingdom at the same ine, for whatever is Independent is Supream; and from two Powfe, aret is equally claiming and pretending to Supremacy, nothing can newho ere estarily result but eternal Clashings, Consusions and Disorders to ntient 6 he Common wealth. imagine that these Men would be at other than in the end to reduce the State to a Dependency on their Church, after the manner of most Catholick Countries where they prevail and have Power to do it, and especially of the Court and Church of Rome, for whom they feem to have so extraordinary an Attachment? This indeed we allow is a never-failing and infallible Receipt, with a Popish brobatum eft, to cure the Evil of two Supream and Independent Powers in the Kingdom at once, when for our Sins they shall have brought up. on us the Curse of having made their Church the only one; we sail have made a very bleffed Exchange from a Condition of Life of Hap. piness and Freedom under the Protection of our Laws, which are only calculated for that End, for the miserable Servitude under the Tyranny of Priests who know no Mercy. If the Question were to be put whether the Church and her Clergy should live under a legal Subjection and Subordination to the State, or the State in an Inferiority and Dependance on the Church and her Clergy? I thak amongst English Freemen the Question would not be long a deciding; and if we did not reflect in what Times we live, it would have been to the last Degree surprizing to see the Legislature of a free and no. ble Nation to neglect showing their Resentments of so scandalous an Indignity in the Severity of a Punishment proportionable to the Insolence of so traiterous a Profession. We are sure, that by the Grace and Favour of our Laws, and the Indulgence of a mild and gentle Government, they will ever be continu'd in the Possession and and Injoyment of their legal Honours and Privileges, if they do not forfeit their Right to them by Misdemeanor, which I desire them to know is very possibly, and it may be worth their while to reflect how fairly they have already bid for it; but we are too well acquainted with the Spirit and Temper of such Men in all Ages when they have been posses'd of a Power they never knew how to vie with Moderation, not to be sensible that if ever they arrive at fuch an Excess of it as they contend for, we shall be fure to be treated with the Indignity of Slaves, and richly deserve it too if we are Tis true we live in an Age where fuch Sots as ever to suffer it. Nonsense, Absurdity and Contradiction slip down as glibly with High-Church Priest, when they contribute to promote the Interest of their dear Church, as a Glass of Sack with a Lay-Sinner, where Impudence and Falschood are furiously ala mode, whilst they have a Faction that supports them; where Treasons against the State, and Reproaches and Scurrilities against all that is Brave, or Wise, or Vertuous in it may be liberally belch'd out, whilst it may be done with Impunity; but a Day of Reckoning shall come, and bad as it is we do not at all despair to see these worthy Gentlemen made sensible that they are no more than subordinate Members of the Body Politick, and their Spiritualities better instructed and convine'd too of their Dependence on the State, by an Exemplary Rigour of the Law upon a certain modern Insolence, unknown to these Nations since the time of their bleffed Reformation from Popery, and the infor portable Tyranny of a corrupt and imperious Priesthood contending for their High-Church Independency.

If by their fourth Proposition, That the Church alone has the power to offer the Mystical Body of Christ in Sacrifice, they mean y the Mystical Body of Christ, the Universal Church, compos'd of he whole Number of Faithful Believers, in which Sense only, all wife and learned Men have constantly understood it; we tell 'em, hat it is good, fubstantial, downright High-Church Nonsense; for tis no more than giving the Catholick Church the Power to offer he Catholick Church as the Mystical Body of Christ in Sacrifice, nd we by no Means grudge 'em the Profoundness or Delicacy of b extraordinary and refin'd a Discovery: But if by that Mystical body, they mean the propitiatory daily Sacrifice of the Body and flood of Christ in the Eucharist, as it is constantly understood in he Church of Rome; we with the same Freedom tell 'em, that it sfrank High-Church Popery. We are taught in our Holy Church, y the Mouth of much wifer, honester, more learned and religious lasters than themselves, that our Blessed Saviour once for all offer'd is Body as the propitiatory Sacrifice upon the Crofs for the Sins fall Mankind, and we firmly give credit to her and believe it: We are likewise taught by her, that as often as we partake of the Bleffed Sacrament of the Lord's-Supper, we eat and drink the real lements of Bread and Wine, as Signs and Symbols only of his ody and Blood in Commemoration of his Death and Sufferings, which he has, by his Almighty Power, inseparably annex'd all he Bleffings and Merit of his Body and Blood to all truly penitent Receivers of it, in the full Satisfaction and plenary Remission of heir Sins; and which, in the Power and Virtue of a fincere and ively Faith, we call a real spiritual eating and drinking the Body nd Blood of Christ: We leave to their High-Church Stomachs to igest the Absurdity of their propitizatory daily Sacrifice of the lystical Body of Christ in the Mass, in the same Manner, Reality nd Proportion, as it was expos'd and suffer'd upon the Cross, for othing else can be rationally understood or intended by their Proofition; and content our felves with the humble and reasonable ense and Doctrine of the Church of England, in the most venerable nd important Mystery of our Holy Religion, which she has exellently express'd in the Office of the Holy Communion, of the lead, in these Words; The Body of our Lord Jesus Christ, which was iven for thee, preserve thy Body and Soul unto everlasting Life: Take nd eat this, in remembrance that Christ dy'd for thee, and feed on him thy Heart by Faith with Thanksgiving. And in the following Words of the Wine; The Blood of our Lord Jesus Christ, which was hed for thee, preserve thy Body and Soul to everlasting Life; drink bu, in remembrance that Christ's Blood was shed for thee, and be hankful. This is the true and rational Opinion of our Church of ingland, concerning the Nature and Merit of this Holy Institution; which we readily affent to, and imbrace, because it is plain, easy nd intelligible, and because it is perfectly agreeable to the Nature of a Sacrament, and the plain and genuine Sense of the Holy eriptures: But for the quaint Devices of the Mystical Body of Christ, in their Proposition importing the actual Existence of his Body

Body and Blood in the same Figure and Dimensions as upon the Cross, and a daily Offering of the same as a propitiatory Sacrifice for the Sins of the World, as it is always understood in the Conmunion of the Popish Mass, we freely leave the Honour and Alministration of it to these reverend High Church Proselytes of hers, upon Condition, if they please, to transplant themselves into a Climate and Soil luxuriant and fertile of Enthusiastick Visions as those of Rome; for, by the Blessing of God upon our honest Endeavours, they shall never introduce and re-establish, tho they imprously attempt it, the execrable Blasphemies and Superstitions of a Popish Mass in our Nation, which are the Reproach of the Christian

Name and Religion.

Their Fifth, That Episcopal Ordination is absolutely necessary for the Call of the Ministers of the Gospel, is a Proposition equally void of Christian Charity, as Truth and Sincerity; the the Establishment of such an Opinion may be more necessary for their Purpose, that is, to gain the Reputation of Sanctity to Order that has more of it in Vision than Practice, or the Interest and Propagation of true Religion. It is indeed acknowledg'd, that in a Church reform'd and establish'd by the Legislature, as our under the Occonomy of Bishops, that the Act of Ordination right understood, is necessary for the Call and Institution of Minister that is, such as are appointed and set apart for the Administration of Holy Things proper to their Office and Function: But we make tain, that those Churches in which their Pastors and Ministers to ceive their Ordination, that is, their Appointment to the Ministry by the Hands of their Presbyters and Elders, are as much me Churches of Christ, if the pure Word of God be preach'd, and the Holy Sacraments duly administred in 'em, according to the Tenor and Meaning of the Holy Scriptures, as the Churches of Rome, or England. It is very far from my Intention to revive the old Dif pure concerning the Nature and Validity of Episcopal Ordination, as at this Day practic'd in our National Church: I am pretty well acquainted with what has been faid for or against it; and, a I hope there shall never be wanting Men of Parts and Abilities in our Church to defend and maintain it, I leave it to fuch to add themselves of that Office, whenever it may be called into question For me, I am well fatisfy'd in my Conscience, that it is an excellent and necessary institution in it self, when it is conserr'd on Men, of pecially who will not abuse it to Purposes for which it never will intended; but when it is, it is neither of any Estimation or Imporrance; and he that shall advance, that what they now lay so med firess upon for certain particular Ends, is originally but a Ceremon purely human, which in process of time they have thought it w dignify, and as it were confecrate by a fort of divine Title of Order nation; will advance a Position he may very easily maintain, and without in the least any thing derogating from the Validity or En cacy of the Episcopal Ordination of the Church of England, which I perfectly honour and effective as absolutely necessary for Peace, O. der, Decency, and the Confervation of her Discipline and Worth Whoever the

Whoever

Whoever has been at the trouble to inform himself of the Nature nd Original of this Inflitution in the Apostles time, and the first ges of Christianity, will find it very different from what it is at his Day generally esteemed amongst us; and that of the foreign hurches more conformable to the manner of those primitive Times, han the Practices either of the Churches of Rome or England. there is no Body, I believe, who doubts but that the holy Apostles, Men divinely inspir'd and commission'd by the Holy Spirit, had uthority to appoint and qualify their Successors by an immediate communication of that Spirit and Authority, to the Ministration of ofe Offices and Duties necessary for the Propagation of the Gofd and we are fure that upon certain Occasions they did so; but is certain, that even in their own time, as the Apostles could not e every where, that the Exigencies of the Infant Church might repire em (whilst the Numbers of Believers were yet but small, yet miderable enough to stand in need of particular Pastors and eachers, but especially as they multiply'd and dispers'd thro' the ifferent parts of the Empire); they, on the Occasion of a Vacancy Death or otherwise, first the Apostles themselves, and afterwards their Example, their Disciples cast their Eyes upon whom they kem'd a fit Person for his Capacities, which in those times only infifted in Innocence and Purity of Manners, in Piety, Prudence, briety, and good Life, as what were most likely to contribute to e Edification of the Church; the Person thus pitch'd upon, they ways recommended to the People in their publick Affemblies, and ey were always cheerfully received at the Hands of these hely Men, nd confirm'd to the Work of the Ministry by their unanimous Sufage and Approbation, which was given by their lifting up of lands, which was the manner in those Days of giving their Affent; nd sometimes the Hands of the Elders were laid upon him, and rayers were made by the whole Congregation for him. This was en the whole manner of this Institution; and the Person thus quafy'd and appointed, apply'd himself to the Work of his Ministry, hich was Prophecying or Preaching, Praying, Administring the acraments, Visiting the Sick, and the like, without withdrawing imself, or interrupting the ordinary Course of his proper Trade or rosession by which he liv'd, except for the necessary Application of me part of his time for the Discharge of his Duty to his Congreation in the Office of his Ministry: Nor did his Title to that pportant and honourable Calling give him any manner of Pretenon to live upon the Sweat and Labour of his Fellow-Christians; e was not defign'd to be a Burthen to their Purses, but for the ase, the Good and Direction of their Consciencies in all Godlies and Honesty; the Honour and secret Satisfaction of so glorious n Imployment, the Merit of which confisted in doing good to Manind, was a sufficient Recompence of the Pains he was at in the Disharge of his Duty. 'Tis true, that in time when the Numbers of hristians vastly increased into great Congregations that necessarily equir'd all the Time, Care and Application of the Pastor, each Conregation made constant voluntary Contributions, which were care-B b 2 fully collected by the Deacons the first Day of every Week, and reasonable part of it appropriated for a comfortable Affistance of the Minister, and the rest to the Necessities and Exigencies of the Poor and Indigent, unable otherwise to get their own Livelyhood. I for here; What I have faid being sufficient for my Purpose, which was to show both the Arrogance and ill Grounds of a Proposition that lays so much Weight upon an Institution purely human in its Delign and Original; but according to them, has fomething in it of Divine, as in a peculiar manner distinguishes 'em from all the re of Mankind, and excludes all other Communities of true Believes from the Honour and Privilege of being Members of the universal Church of Christ, who are without their Episcopal Ordination, and leave it to our High-Church Priests to acquaint the World, if the please, by what commendable Arts and Means their Church any to fuch a Degree of Riches, Power, Authority and Magnificence all of which were utterly unknown to the first and purest Ages

Christianity.

But before I quit this Subject, I think it necessary, for the further Information of my honest Countrymen, to acquaint 'em that the Word Clergy, is a perfect Stranger to all the Scriptures both of the Old and New Testament, in any other Sense than as a fort of Ma thus deftin'd and fet apart after the manner already mention'd, fi the Ministration of the Holy Things of Religion; that is, a mi peculiar People as God's Lot, the Word Cleros importing no more and is ever to be understood sometimes of the whole Body of B lievers, fometimes of the Saints and the Elect, and fometimes of the Church; which is no more than an Affembly of the Faithful met gether, as appears from most of Sr. Paul's Epistles dedicated to the Churches then in being, where he expresses himself in one, to the Saints; in another, to all who have obtain'd like Faith with us in a third, to all who in all places call upon the Name of the Lor Jesus; the Church, as the Word Ecclesia imports, signifying more than a Meeting or Congregation of the Faithful; from white it is demonstrable, that in those early times, (by which all that it lates to Controversies of this kind ought to be determin'd), neith the Term or Meaning of the Words Church or Clergy, as they a abusively understood and misapply'd now-a-days, were never appl cable folely, or appropriated to the Pastors or Elders of their Co gregations; but did indifferently fignify and include all the who Body of the People affembled together, or disjunctly in their fever and respective Assemblies making a Profession of the one commo Faith of Christianity. If this be false that I advance, let it be lidly confuted; if true, I befeech these reverend High-Church M to prove to the World upon what Authority they folely affume themselves the glorious Title and Appellation of the Church Christ, in distinction from the rest of the Body of true and saith Believers; or why they value themselves and lay such a stress up the present manner of their Ordination, so as presumptuously efteem themselves distinct and separate from the rest of Mankind wheni a its Original, the Word Ordination was never understoo and a

Mankind Inderstoo o fignify more than a Decree of any thing made in the Assembly of he Faithful; and in process of time was particularly us'd for the At of Appointment and Election of any one to the Office of the finistry; and left the first Professors in the same Condition it und 'em, without conferring any Sort or Degree of Sacredness to eir Persons, or Dignity to their Profession, but what they might fily deserve from a diligent and conscientious Discharge of their uty; and I am very much mistaken in my Opinion, if such a Disvery will contribute much to lessen the Disesteem Men have coniv'd of the Prefumption of such, who honour themselves alone ith the glorious Character of the Church of Christ in Exclusion of eir Fellow Christians, at least without convincing the World that ey have more Regard for the Purity and Propagation of Religion an they have of late done; or who arrogantly assume to themves a Sacredness and fort of Divinity from their Ordination, that etends to separate and elevate 'em above the Condition of all other us of Men, whilst by their Principles, Doctrines and Manners, ey have given but too much Occasion to think 'em the most dening and irreligious part of Mankind: From this appears the shood of an Opinion that ascribes such a Vertue and Sanctity to iscopal Ordination, and which makes it so absolutely necessary to e Call of Ministers of the Gospel, that without it there can be no pushitution of a true Church; tho' that which is call'd Episcopal present, is so widely different from that of the Apostolick Times d Institution. But further; the Want of Christian Charity in is Opinion, is as notoriously manifest as the Falshood of it; innuch as it excludes at once all the foreign Communities of Christis from the Priviledge of being true Churches of Christ, because ey are without Episcopal Ordination; tho' it is evident past uestion, that the Election of Pastors by the Congregation, and the infirmation of 'em by the Prayers and Laying on of Hands of eir Ministers and Elders, comes much nearer, and is more conmable to the Primitive Manner of Ordination, than that in Use the Churches of Rome and England. Thus, according to these t-headed, uncharitable Bigots, that vast Body of true Believers in me, before they were extirminated by the Episcopal Zealots of church of Rome, and the imperious Persecution of their Popish yrants; those of Geneva, Holland, and all other parts of Germany, gether with our own numerous Dissenting Brethren at Home, e no longer true Churches of Jesus Christ, tho' all of 'em professing e same Christian Faith tho' in different Manners, in all the effenland fundamental Articles of the Christian Religion: Yet the verend and learned Fathers and Doctors of the Church of Engnd, in their Letters and Writings to 'em, have ever acknowledg'd d given the Title of the Huguenot, the Calvinist, and the Lutheran hurches, I mean of the Confession of Augsburg, who have no Biops or Ordination like their own; which I think is an Authority something greater Weight than the rash uncharitable Bigotry of few hot-heated High-Church Priests assembled in Convocation, ho make their Episcopal Ordination of so absolute Necessity to the Nature B b 3

Nature and Conflitution of a true Church, that they can allow nont to be such that are without it.

As to their laft, that the Church and her Ministers have the Power of Pardoning Sins, is of the fame piece and hammered out of the same Forge with the former, that is, all of 'em out of that of the Church of Rome, which of all the Churches in the Universe, is the , only one that presumptuously arrogates to her felf an Impious and Antiscriptural Power and Authority, which the holy Apostles never practifed themselves or ever intended to invest the Christian Church withal; nor need there any greater proof of the good intentions of these Men, to re-establish the errours of a Church which their Wife and Pious Forefathers had absolutely renounc'd, than their reviving in a Protestant Nation such pernicious Doctrines purely Popish, which the other still practife and maintain, and are absolutely inconsident with the Peace of our establish'd Church or the Interests of our civil Govern nment. We know that our holy Church modeftly afferts and allow her Ministers as Men set apart for the Sacred Offices of the Divine Religion the professes, a Power of pronouncing a conditional Absolution remission of Sins, upon the Terms of Confession of 'em to God and a fincere and hearty Repentance for 'em, but the does no more; Jesus Christ having never himself practic'd or invested the holy Apostles with an other; but we have no where been Taught as yet, that the allows my Power to her Priests as such by virtue of their Episcopal Ordination decifively and absolutely to forgive Sins, without that condition of Re pentance, for God himself has no where told us, tho' his power is in nite, that he will ever pardon or forgive without it; and weknow but one Power which is Antichrift, (who tho' in the extent of hisprenum tion he stiles himself with a hypocritical humility but the Vicar m the Servant of the Servants of Jefus Chrift, ) yet places himfelf about all that is call'd God, yet arrogates to himself the absolute capacity of pardoning all forts of Sins by his fole Virtue and Authority The crue establish'd Church of England a genuine Virgi Daughter of the primitive Christianity assumes no more Power to felf, nor allows to her true Sons any of forgiving Sins, but what h brought with her into the World, and which is equally granted with Ministers of all other true Christian Churches ; but the high Churche England a profittute Daughter of a debauch'd Mother the Church's Rome, as impioufly as infolently arrogates to her felf, and comme nicates to her spurious Sons an absolute and unconditional Power Absolution and Remission of Sins unknown to Jesus Christ, his ho If these Me Apostles, or the first and purest Ages of Christianity. mean no more than the Power of conditional Absolution, we do dispute or refuse it 'em; but why then do they express themselves Terms that evidently import, that their Church and her Minited have a power of forgiving Sins absolutely and without mentioning condition. For the general and indefinite Terms of their Propolities without refiriction or limitation, cannot reasonably be underfieed in end any otherwise, than that they believe themselves, and would have others believe 'em invested with such a power absolutely and auth rit: e vely as Priests; but if they mean it so, they are I think at let blig'd to prove to the World, from what fountain and authority they erive a Sacrilegious Usurpation above the power of God, at least hat he has any where revealed to us; for his Omnipotency as no body oubtsit, is out of the question; and if they mean it only in the Sense f the Church of England that has been mention'd, we must tell 'em hat in the modest Sense of that Church the same Power of Conitional Absolution, and Remission of Sins is granted and practicable w the Pastors and Ministers of all other true Christian Churches; ho' we know, in the insolent Sense of the corrupted High Church f it, an absolute and unconditional Power of forgiving Sins is nherently invested in the Pope, as the Head of their Catholick hurch, and by him communicated only to his Sons of the Epifopal Ordination, and by special favour to such of ours who in Il their Doctrines, so nearly and exactly resemble so gracious and ndulgent a Father. Now the Truth and Religion of this Proposiion is in the Clouds, but the Craft and Design of it are as evident s Light from the Sun; for if People can be once Deluded into an Opinion of this Power of the Priesthood, there is but very little vanting to establish the Tyrannical Domination they so eagerly conend for; there being nothing that Men in the last Articles of life will not willingly part with to a Priest, who he is pertwaded as a Power to fave or damn him; the old infernal Artifice of he Church of Rome, by which the has in all Ages augmented her Revenues and Authority at the expence and ruin of Millions of families, and a wondrous proper and most primitive and Apotolical example for the imitation of the pure established Church of England. In two words, every honest vertuous Christian who conscientiously endeavours to discharge his Duty, and to come up as near as possible to the Purity and Perfection of the admirable Precepts and Commands of his Divine Religion, and dies in a fincere Repentance and Contrition of all the Sins and Follies infeparable from the condition of humane Nature, shall by a lively Faith in the full Merit and Satisfaction of the Death and Sufferings of Jesus Christ, obtain a full and free Pardon of 'em all without their Absolution; and the best of 'em, who without this Condition in the Article of Death have no other or better Security for their future Happiness, than the bare Absolution of a Priest of Episcopal Ordination, the good God have Mercy upon their Souls. Far be it from me to disswade Men from the Offices of our Holy Church; I very well know, that it is a sweet and wonderful Consolation to an honest dying Christian, to hear the Promises of our Blessed Saviour Jesus Christ repeated and confirmed to him by the Mouth of a pious and reverend Minister of our Church; but I would endeayour to prevail with my fellow Subjects and fellow Christians not to fuffer themselves to be imposed on and deluded at the hazard of their Souls, by the groundless the specious infinuations of such High-Church Priests, as assume to themselves a Power which God himself never has, or never will exert that we can know of.

Whoever shall seriously and impartially inquire into the Nature and Design of these famous Propositions, will at first sight discover that they have all along been and still continue the avow'd and professed Doctrines of the Church of Rome; which, without any manner of regard to the Interests of the true Religion, or the good and Salvation of Mens Souls, tend primarily to increase and inlarge the Power, the Grandeur and Authority of what they are pleased to call their Church, but indeed is nothing less; and that they are all and every of 'em founded upon one branch or other of the manifest Usurpations of the Popes, who in all times have communicated fo much and fuch a proportion of Power to all the Orders of the Priefthood, as he has thought necessary to support his Kingdom of Antichrift; for, as I hope, it shall plainly be made appear, that there is not the least, or any manner of Foundation for 'em from the Sacred Authority of the Holy Scriptures. Our Saviour Chilf positively tells us, that his Kingdom is not of this World, and that if any one amongst his Disciples desired to be the greatest he must become the least, and be the Servant of the rest; so that the greatness here mentioned cannot possibly be understood of Worldly Pomp and fecular Power, but a greatness that consisted solely in a degree of excellence and perfection of all the Divine and Moral Virtues. There is indeed in the Apocalypse an Officer prefigured to be in the Church, which most learned Expositors fix upon the Pope as Antichrist; and St. Paul tells us who it is that shall sit in the Temple of God, shewing himself that he is God. Whether these Predictions are convenable to or accomplish'd in the Character of the Pope, I leave to the Reflection of such as shall consider, that the exorbitant Power, which, without any fure warrant from Scripture, they have for fo many Ages usurped and arrogated to themselves, is suff, that of being Christ's universal Vicar, by which they ingross, as it were, the Monopoly of that Holy Spirit which was equally promised to the whole Church, which, as has been prov'd, was in the Language of those Days, ever understood of the whole Body of true Believers; and is further evident from these remarkable Words of St. Peter's Sermon both to the Jews and Gentiles. Repent, and be Baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the Remissions Sins, and you shall receive the Gift of the holy Ghost; for this promise is made to you and your Children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call. In which Words we see that the holy Spirit was to be thro' all Generations the equal partage of all true Believers as they conflituted the Universal Church, and was to remain with it to the Ends of the World; and at the same time we are Taught the infolence and presumption of any one who should pretend to ingross to himself what was design'd the universal Blessing of all the faithful. After this pretended universal Vicarship, founded no otherwise than we see, follows, as a necessary consequence, an infallibility of judging of all Divine Truths, the Power of forgiving Sins after a more absolute manner than our Bleffed Saviour wasknown to do himself; not only to be the supream head of all Ecclesiastical Persons and causes whatsoever; but to be so far exalted above all Kings, Princes, Powers and Principalites as Sovereignly to Decide, Judge, Depose and Deprive em as they shall think fit; and lastly, to have a despotical Power and absolute Jurisdiction over all the Affairs of the whole World. This is that immeasurable Power, which the corrupt and Sicophant Sophisters of the Canon Law have invested their Idol with, and which he has been graciously pleased to accept and Exercise for so many Ages; how much for the general good of Mankind, the Glory of God, or particular honour of the Christian Religion, s of every Mans Knowledge. Now let any the most Zealous of his High Church partisans, who pretends to Ability enough, oblige the World so far, as to shew 'em upon what solid Foundation this inordiate Power of the Successor, as they are pleas'd to call him, of St. Peter, which we are fure St. Peter himself never dreamt of or Exercis'd, is reated; for all the Texts of Holy Scripture which have been faally alledg'd for the support of it, will appear to be as impiously s shamefully abus'd by these prevaricating Impostors and Deluders of Mankind. They tell us then that this absolute jurisdiction of theirs, specially over the Church, was first granted by Christ to St. Peter, and nd from him derived to the Popes as his Successors in these Words; hou art Peter, and upon this Rock will I build my Church; but besides that, t never was, nor ever will be proved, that the Popes are the true nd legitimate Successors of St. Peter, or by what Right the Bishops Rome pretend to that Succession more than any other of the Bishops the fucceeded immediately to the Apostles; all the best Expositors unaimoufly agree, that the plain and natural meaning of that Text imorts no more, than that the Preaching, Ministry and Sufferings of t. Peter, should be as a Rock the firm and great Foundation of the hristian Doctrine, without any manner of regard or mention of Secuar Authority and Jurisdiction whatsoever. As to the Power of foriving Sins from these Words of our Saviour to him; I will give thee he Keys of Heaven; What soever thou shalt bind on Earth shall be bound Heaven; and what soever thou shalt loose on Earth shall be loos'd in haven; and also from those other Words spoken by him, and eually directed to all his other Apostles, Whose Sins ye remit, they are mitted, and whose Sins ye retain, they are retained; 'tis the Sense of If the Primitive Fathers, that they are to be understood to fignify o more, than that in what part of the World soever ye shall Preach nd Propagate my Divine Truths, as many as believe in and Practife m, shall find Grace and Mercy and Remission of their Sins; but those whom the knowledge of these joyful Tidings shall not reach, or nowing 'em shall shut their Ears, or obstinately refuse and reject hem, shall remain in darkness and under the burthen of their Sins. ow one must be very quick-sighted, who shall discover any thing all this, to ground or confirm the Usurpation of a Power in the ope, or derivatively from him in the Priesthood of forgiving of Sins . uthoratively by Virtue of Episcopal Ordination. 'Tis just after the me manner and full as weakly that the Canoniffs and his other artifans, found his infallibility of judging all things, and his own kemption from all other Judgment under Heaven, from these Words St. Paul; the Spiritual Man, judgeth all Men, but is himself e all dged of none; from whence these Sacrilegious Wresters and busers of the Sacred Oracles of the Divine Truths infer this harafter and Power of the Spiritual Man to be meant only of the ope; tho' it is evident, that St. Paul, who may be suppos'd best to understand his own Meaning intends by these Words no more than to distinguish between a Christian enlighten'd and inspirited by the divine Virtue and Instuence of the Holy Ghost, and one continuing still in the State and Darkness of meer Nature, who is incapable of discerning or judging of the excellent Gists and Graces of the Christian Religion, as he formally explains himself in the following Words, The natural Man cannot discern the Things of the Spirit, because the

are Foolishness to him.

'Tis from these small and feeble Beginnings (conceiv'd in Fraud and Usurpation, and nourished and supported by Craft) is arisen the Leviathan of the monstrous Power of the Pope and Church of Rome, which has for the Course of so many Ages been the Source and Terrour of all the Crown'd Heads and Governments of Europe and of all those out of it, where for their Unhappiness they have had the Misfortune to establish their Lawless Authority. 'Tis full thirteen hundred Years since the Clergy of that Church, abandoning the Purity of the Evangelical Dostrine, by an execrable Priestrate began to ingross an immeasurable Power, not only inconsistent with the Profession, but absolutely destructive of all that is good or vintuous, and estimable amongst Men. By these Means they have introduc'd upon the Ruins of the Primitive Christianity, an abominable Superstition, that in respect of civil Government and good Morality, has brought the World into a much more miferable Condition than it was before under the Religion of Paganism: For I maintain that there were more frequent and noble Instances amongst 'em of Virtus Valour, Honour, Justice, and Love of their Country, and of all other Moral Excellencies, than have been known in the World, fince the most pure Primitive Doctrine of Jesus Christ has been debauch'd by their Clergy into the present Popish Superstition. There is nothing more certain than that the Christian Religion, considered in is native Purity and Excellence, is infinitely more advantagious and beneficient to Mankind in all Respects, both of this Life and that to come, than all the most excellent Productions of that kind of the most virtuous and most politick Legislatures of former Times; in is there any thing that more evidently demonstrates the Divinity of its Original, than that in its whole Nature and Tendency it is it admirably calculated equally to promote the Peace and Tranquilling this World, and the Happiness and Salvation of all Men in the next; pa is it as demonstrable, that this Divine Religion, as it stands corrupted and establish'd in the Church of Rome, not only not provides for either, but is diametrically opposite to both those great and glorious Ends, for by placing the whole Merit of it in the Observation of certain super fitious Ceremonies and Duties without Life or Virtue (which their crafty Priests by their Spiritual Legerdemain have fanctify'd in Works of Supererogation), they have utterly destroy'd the ver Nature and Defiga both of Religion and all Moral Virtues, which fo eminently lead Men into the Ways of Honour, Integrity of Marners, good Life here, and Happiness hereafter; and which the me Christian Religion so admirably promotes and refines, that by certain Communication of i.s Divinity, they loofe what they be of imperfect as barely moral, to participate of an excellence purely divine : But the Religion of the Church and Clergy of Rome foils and tarnishes the native Beauties of those admirable Virtues, and renders them either impracticable or despicable by the unhappy Mixture of the Ordures of Error and Superstition. As the Interests of a Clergy so corrupt and fall'n from the Purity of their Profession, must ever be, not only distinct, but opposite to that of all other Conditions of Men; (the fole End and Aim of all their Actions and Defigns being the Aggrandization of the Power and Authority of themselves and their Church, without any Regard to Religion, any farther than the Appearance and Affectation of it may ferve to the Accomplishment of their Ends) it is impossible to expect any good Effects to the World, in Relation to the Civil Governments of it, from a Superfittion compos'd only of Formality and Hypocrify; the Priests of which pretend to ingross to themselves the absolute Power of domineering independently and sovereignly over the rest of Mankind, and think themselves well repaid by what they gain on the side of secular Power, for what they loose on the side of Virtue, Honour or Religion; for if the Power of the Church and her Clergy be, as they suppose and would have it, supream and independent, adieu to the Liberties of all Men of other Distinctions; and as there are but little or no Degrees in Slavery, it will follow, that both the Prince and the People will be equally under the Bondage of their imperious Domination, for whether their Chains are of Gold or of Iron, they are still Chains, and they are still inslaved. This is but too evident from the Ravages, the Blood, Slaughter and Confusions they have in all times been the Authors of, in all Dominions in Europe, where they have been able to establish their Spiritual Authority; themselves by a Licentiousness inseparable from Tyrants, revelling in all the Luxuries of Peace, Plenty and Liberty, whilst all that have the Misfortune to be dependent on 'em, are sure to be perpetually expos'd to all the Hardships and Miseries of Slavery and Want. Yet is all this Excess of Power and Independency as directly contrary to the express and positive Doctrines and Commands of the holy Scriptures, as any other Usurpation of the Papacy; for though they prefume to elevate themselves above the Reach of all fecular Authority and Jurisdiction under Heaven, yet the Apostle Sr. Paul and even St. Peter himself, from whom they pretend to derive, preach every where Submission and Obedience to the higher Powers, and to submit to every Ordinance of Man for the Lord's fake, whether it be to the King as Supream, or other legal Magistrate; though we very well know, that the Princes in whose Times those Doctrines were inforc'd, were Heathens and Tyrants; yet by the Principles of the Christian Religion we are, and hold our felves indispensibly oblig'd to pay that Obedience to 'em, without regard to the evil Qualifications of their Character, in things that the fundamental Laws invest 'em with the Authority to exact, when they are not contrary to the Word of God; and this Docirine of theirs of Obedience is couch'd in such general and comprehensive Terms, as without Exception includes all forts and Degrees of Men who make a Profession of the Christian Religion. otherwise the Command, if it only bound some, and left others at Liberty to disobey, had been both imperfect and unreasonable; nor is there the least Colour for any pretended Ecclesiastical Exemption or Immunity for Pope or Clergy; nor did St. Paul, St. Peter, or any other of the Apostles, either from the Doctrine, Principles, Practice or Manners ever propose to leave an Example to their Suc. ceffors of any Order or Distinction, to insult, domineer and depole Princes, overturn Governments and Common-wealths, and to be the Occasion or Authors of all those Disorders and Calamities, that make Kingdoms desolate, and their People miserable; for as it is the whole Business of the Christian Religion eternally to preach up and cultivate all the good Offices of Peace, Purity of Manners, Humility, Moderation and Charity amongst Men here, and their eternal Happiness hereafter; all the reverse and contraries can on. ly be the Effect of a debauch'd and prostitute Religion, if it deserve that facred Name, founded upon felf-interest, Avarice and Ambition; and therefore naturally tending to root out and destroy whatever there is of good, of great, of virtuous and commendable amongst Men in this World, and damn 'em in the next. For fince the Diffusion and Establishment of Popery in those unhappy Nations where it has obtained full Credit and Authority, there has abounded more Immorality, Profaneness, Irrcligion, Dishonesty, Lewdness, Cowardice, and detestable Politicks, which are the certain Prognosticks and Fore-runners of the worst of all Evils on this side the Grave, Slavery; than ever were known under any other Oeconomy to the World from the Creation of it to this Day.

'Tis then from this corrupted Source, namely the Profane and impious Abuse of the Holy Scriptures, that the Craft of Priests has derived that immeasurable, and I may properly say infinite Power, which they fix in the Church, that is, according to their Notion in themselves and their Pope, as their only visible Head here on Earth, to whose external Government the Universal Church of Christ is to be subject, and to whom they pay much more Regard and Veneration than to Jesus Christ, the only true and invisible one in Heaven; but which neither Jesus Christ or any of his Apostles, either by Precept or Example ever proposed or intended for their Imitation. I have purposely dwelt the longer upon this Subject to thew the Weakness of the Pretensions of the Church and Popes of Rome to Infallibility and Independency, as well as their other Usurpations; because it is from this noble Original our own High-Church and her Priests are not asham'd to form their Pretensions to 'em, and have so audaciously advanced towards them in this favourable Jun cture of the Credit and Interest of their Faction, in order to reestablish both the Religion, and curs'd Appendages of it, of Infallibility and Independency and the eternal Consequence of rem, Slav very; though our wife and pious Princes and Reformers have to long ago renounc'd and disclaim'd 'em, as absolutely incompatible with the Purity and Intention of the Christian Religion made na tional in the Church, or the Peace and Happiness of the State n;

I think therefore it is the Business and Interest of every honest Exglishman, who heartily loves his Country or Religion before it is too late, feriously to reflect on the End and Design of these Men with their Modern Doctrines, which are all of them avowedly those of the Church of Rome, and unknown to that of our own national one, fince by the Bleffing of God she had the Happiness to become Reformed and Protestant. What Peace they are to expect to their Conscience from the Dominion of Priests, who endeavour to perswade, that their Salvation or Damnation absolutely depend upon their Belief or Diffent to what they fay and think fit to obtrude upon them as the most facred Oracles, to which they exact all the servile Compliances of a blind and implicite Faith; what good Effects or Bleffings to the Civil Government founded upon Liberty and Prerogative, from Men who aspire to an Independency on it, which in the End must necessarily reduce it to a miserable Servitude and Dependency on their Church; whose Maxims of Policy and Principles in respect of Religion are solely founded upon Errour, Crast, and Usurpation; and whose utmost Ambition it is to subject all things in a free and noble Nation to the insolent Domination of the Head of them and their Catholick Church? What Business has an English Protestant, at this Time of Day, with Popish Doctrines of Religion, or an English Subject with the Jesuitical Maxims of French Policy? Yet there is nothing more demonstrable than that the whole Design and Tendency of these Propositions are only to dispose the Minds of weak and unthinking People, and to prepare the Way to reestablish Popery in the Introduction of their Pretender; for no great notable Change can possibly be effected at once in an Ancient Government. but it is absolutely necessary to cajole and preposses the Minds of the People, as it were infensibly, by previous Dispositions to receive and acquiesce in it; and as has been said, there is nothing more eafily affects, or makes deeper Impressions on Men's Minds and Affections than Religion, when Artfully manag'd; we acknowledge that nothing could be better calculated for their End than the former Doctrines and these latter Propositions of our High-Church Priests; for if Men can be throughly perswaded of the Truth or Necessity of 'em for the good of Holy Church, it will be no difficult Matter in a little Time to perswade 'em to sit down contented under the Government of a Popish Prince, though poison'd with the Principles and Maxims of a Nation irreconcileably an Enemy to their own; and in a little more to introduce the whole Gallimaufry of Popery in Form. One would be glad to know what else an honest Englishman ought reasonably to expect from the Doctrines of High-Church, that constantly teaches the Divine Commission, the absolute and arbitrary Power, and the hereditary unalienable Title of our Kings, that is, that establish Tyranny by a divine Right, and the necessary Consequence of it, an unconditional Slavish Passive Obedience in the Subjects? Or what from a Body of her Priests, who in a Protestant Country maintain, that the Catholick Church is a Body under one and the same external Government, when all the World knows, that cannot otherwise be understood but of the Pope, who those of that Communion constantly maintain to be the only Supream visible Head of the Catholick Church. That every Chriff. an ought to fubmit to the Laws and Decrees of the Catholick Church under Pain of Damnation, which is the barefac'd Language and Doctrine of Papists only. That the Church is independent on the State, by which they can only intend to subject the Imperial Crown of our antient Kingdom once more to the Tyranny of the Roman Mitre. That the Church alone has the Power to offer the myflial Body of Christ in Sacrifice, which in good old English is downright the Mass. That Episcopal Ordination is absolutely necessary for the Call of the Ministers of the Gospel, by which with as much Modesty and good Nature and Charity, they fend most of the Fo. reign Churches of Christ with the whole Body of Believers that compose 'em, with all our own Diffenting Berthren, in one Lump to the Devil. And lastly, That the Church, and her Ministers, have the Power of pardoning Sins; tho' one thing I will venture to advance, that for their facrilegious Presumption of usurping the Authority of Jesus Christ, who as God has alone the Power of pardonlag Sins, they of all Mankind in the last great Day shall most stand in need of Forgiveness.

Nor is the Malignity of these Popish Doctrines confin'd to the High-Church Clergy of this Nation alone: The Disease is more epidemical, and the Poyson diffused thro' all Her Majesty's Dominions, 'Tis true, their Brethren of the same Principles and Do-Arines in the Convocation in Ireland, have not prefumed as yet to offer any thing of this kind to the Publick; but they have upon all Occasions, both in their Discourses from the Pulpit, and their Pamphlets, sufficiently infinuated their good Inclinations to the commendable Doctrines of a Church, from which their honester Fore fathers, so much to their Glory, have reform'd: And we can name the Person and the Day, whereon one of the Lower-House of Convocation, in which there is a great Majority of High-Church-Men, who with a very grave Face and villain Heart, in a formal Speech, which wanted not others of the same Complexion to second it, proposed the Re-establishment-in the Church, the Doctrine and Practice of Auricular Confession: And the Horrour of such a Propostion, so evidently Popish in the Mouth of a Protestant Priest, me with the Scorn and Contempt it deserved in a Committee of that House, where a reverend Dean presided, and was condemn'd and at that time drop'd; yet it is a manifest Indication what these reverend Bigots would be at, and their ready Dispositions to imbrate the old condemn'd Errors of the Church of Rome, so they might arrive at the same Degree of Power over the People, that their der Brethren of that Communion have been so long, and are still in possession of, in all Catholick Countries. It will be difficult for the Wifest amongst 'em to show of what Necessity, nay, even of what Utility such a Doctrine is to the Good and Salvation of Mens Souls That does not at all appear to be the Point in question; but it is very eafily demonstrable, that by it they solely aim at the Advancement of the Power of their Church and Clergy; for by being almitted nd

Nor is there any thing that has so long restrain'd these Men from pore publickly declaring their Intentions sooner, but the Fear of the aws; for the Considerations of Honour, Conscience or Religion, re of no Weight with such as have abandon'd themselves to the ofatuations of their private Ambition, or the Interests of their hurch: But that Fear being over from a Relaxation of the Laws. y the Negligence or too much Indulgence of the Magistrate, and nder the Favour of what they effeem an auspicious Juncture for heir Designs, they have begun to throw off the Mask, and with a are-fac'd Impudence, give us to understand what we are to expect ven from a Protestant Clergy, prostituted to the condemn'd Errors nd Superstitions of the Church of Rome, if the Virtue and Courage the honestest part of the Nation, and the faithful and vigorous ndeavours of the yet uncorrupted part of their Profession do not revent the Abominations they are bringing in upon 'em; for God epraised, there are still some Numbers, tho' but small in comparin of the others, and would be more if they had been incourag'd. ho neither want Piery, Learning or Courage to defend the primive genuine Doctrines of the Establish'd Church, and at the Hazard their Lives and all that's dear to 'em, oppose the introduction and e-establishment of the Corruptions of that of Rome.

Tis the greatest Unhappiness and Missortune of that poor disburaged and divided Nation, (which in our Remembrance, and no nger ago than the late Lord Rachester's short but fatal Administraon, was the most unanimous and united in their Sentiments and sections, both for the Establish'd Religion and the Protestant Inrest of the State, of any under her Majesty's Dominions), to have Stranger at their Head, intrusted with the Execution of the Laws, the either will not understand their true Interest, or is sent amongst am only to betray it; a Man without a Name in the World, till he got one by the laudable Defence he made for the Villains ingged in the horrible Defign of Affaffinating our glorious King William; and has nobly augmented it fince by that of a more infamous Traitor, if that be possible; and because I desire to be understood, I mean Sacheverell; for if either the End or Circumstances of a Crime be what can add Degrees of Aggravation to it, the Villany of fetting a whole Nation in a Flame, folely in order to divide and betray it into the Hands of a Foreign Enemy of different Religion and Interest, is a Treason of infinitely a deeper Complexion, than that of depriving a Prince of his Life, tho' adorn'd with all the royal Virtues and eminent Qualities that can contribute to render a People perfectly happy; because the Consideration of the publick Good of a Nation, is over preferable to that of any fingle Person of what Distinction or Character soever. 'Tis principally to these two famous Occasions, that this Gentleman owes his Reputation and Rife, I will not say Establishment of his Fortune, for that is still in the Clouds. Tho' I am an Enemy to his Principles and Deligns, I am very far from detracting from his Parts and Abilities which he is endu'd with in an eminent Degree, but is by their Means only fo much the more dangerous Enemy. The Ignorance of a Fool or weak Man can never do much hurt to his Country, let his Intentions be what they will; but Parts and Learning in the Hands of a corrupt and mercenary one, when misapply'd, are the most pernicious Tools that can be made use of for its Subversion. 'Tis true, that is our Laws are fo indulgent to all Criminals as to allow 'em Cound for their Defence, a Man of the honourable Profession of the Law is permitted to fay what he can or pleases in the Cause of his Clean, let the Crime be of the highest Nature or Degree imaginable, and yet may very well be suppos'd to maintain his Integrity and the Chr. racter of an honest Man: But when a particular Person is always pitch'd upon and made use of to maintain the Cause of Assaiins and publick Incendiaries, notorious Enemies and Betrayers of their Country, it seems rather to be the Effect of Choice than Chance; it looks extreamly as if a Man's own Inclinations influence and warm'd him more than the Confideration of a Fee; fuch a Man feems to like the Cause, and to be in the Interests of those heap pears fo forward and fond of defending: But be that as it will I think it is every honest Englishman's Business, who loves his Country or Religion, especially in that poor Nation where there is at least eight Papists to one Protestant, to pray, that for the future they may never fee any more Lord Chancellors of Royal. Affaifin, of publick incendiary Creations; for the Occasions are suspicious, and if we mistake not, of evil Omen and inauspicious: Yet this may be truly faid of him, that the wife Politicians in Power, who have plac'd him in that honourable and important Station, will not find themselves in the least deceived in their Expectations of the Man for he has given sufficient Evidence to the World, both of his Belia and Practice of his beloved Doctrine of Passive Obedience in a blin and servile Submission to all the Orders of his excellent Patrons Benefactors; and of all the Faults that may be objected to him, the of Ingraticude to so good Masters will certainly be one of the last. it is admirable to observe with what a Harmony and fort of Simpathy in carrying on the noble Defign, there is between his darling High-Church Clergy and him, in that Kingdom; where, when he had with the utmost Violence and Injustice opposed the chief Civil Migistrate of the Metropolis, the Lord-Mayor and Protestant Court Aldermen, in the legal and accustomed manner of electing their enhing Lord-Mayor, and had by his Authority rejected to the feventh reighth time, Men of Probity, Capacity, good Fortunes, and found evolution Principles, only to make way for a Creature of his wn, Alderman Confrantine, a supple Tool of High-Church Agility, ho would leap over a Stick backwards and forwards for a Pretender a King of France; to which I must add, the Circumstance of me, it being the Year wherein they were to appoint a new Comon-Council, which is to continue the three enfuing Years, in hich time the wise Men in Business hop'd to have finish'd the comendable Work of inflaving their Country, and if they had prevail'd the Metropolis, would have given a fair Example for the leffer ities and Burroughs of the Kingdom to have followd; the lower ouse of Convocation for such an eminent Piece of Service and Dein, and for his diffinguish'd Zeal for the Promotion of all the Inrests of their High-Church, to the visible Detriment of the National e; and the Establishment of the Power of the present Politicians, s fingular good Lords and Patrons, before the Utility and Advange of his Country, made the following Address; which, as it is eminent Piece in it felf for the Stile and Substance of it, and an pple Indication of their Sentiments and Gratitude to so extraordiry a Minister of their High-Church and Faction, I shall do my If the great Honour, out of the wonderful Esteem I have for so verable a Body, of so zealous Intentions for the Good and Prospety both of the State and Establish'd Church, to transmit it as far wa to Posterity, as it shall be the Fate of this Trifle to survive.

To the Right Honourable Sir Constantine Phipps, Lord High Chancellor of Ireland, a Message of Thanks from the Lower House of Convocation, agreed to Nemine Contradicente, Die Veneris 9 Novembris, 1711, and presented the same Day by the Prolocutor, attended by his Asfors.

Your undaunted Courage, your well-temper'd Zeal, and your morning Eloquence, were then most remarkable when they were most necessary.

And as these noble Qualifications drew the Hearts and Eyes of all those who wish'd well to our Church and Constitution towards you; so our most Gracious Sovereign could not but soon discern, that no Man could be a more proper Minister of Equity to her Subjects in this Kingdom, than he who had so happily defended em from Rigour and Oppression in the other.

May this Nation be ever happy in so Wise, Faithful and Steady a Minister, for the Security both of the Prince and Subject; that the Pring gative of the one, and the Liberties of the other, may be ever involably preserved to 'em; and may the Church never want so Faithful and Astectionate a Friend to Support and Defend her in Times of Difficulty, and be an Honour and Ornament to her in Times of Prosperity.

The Lord Chancellor's Answer.

Gentlemen,

I AM extreamly oblig'd to you for this great Respect: I always thought it my greatest Happiness to be a Member of that Church which is the Honour and Glory of the Resormation; and it is my greatest Satisfastion that I have done any thing which so great and learned a Body estems of Service to that Church. I do assure you, that as it is my Duty, so it is my Inclination, and shall always be my Endeavour, to promote the interest and Welfare of the Establish'd Church, and of the Clergy that as Members of it; and I will not be deterr'd by any Menaces or Danger what soever, from doing my utmost to Support and Maintain Her Majesty's Prerogatives, and Liberties of Her Subjects and our Constitution both in Church and State.

enough be wonder'd at, how fuch a Man as the reverend and learned Prolocutor Doctor John Sterne, could prevail with himself to continue in a Station which daily expos'd him to the Rudeness and ill Manners of those hot-headed Zealots, as often as he refus'd to run into the Violences and Excesses of their Frenzy; a Gentleman of excellent Parts and Learning, of a fober but agreeable Converfation, generous, friendly, charitable, laborious and indefatigable in the Duties of his Function, of great Courage, Piety and good Manners, a strenuous Defender of the Revolution, and a true Lover of his Country, in an eminent Station in the Church, as Dean of St. Patrick's: Nor do I believe that any better, or probably any other Reason can be assign'd for it, than that he was willing to make a Sacrifice of his private Quiet and Resentments of the shameful Indignities he frequently receiv'd, to the publick Good of the Church, whose Peace he ever fludiously promoted; and endeayour'd, if possible, by the Prudence and Moderation of an excellent Conduct, to restrain and soften the Violences, the Fury and Passions of Men who knew no Temper: He has fince, to make room for the reverend, judicious and incorruptible Doctor Jonathan Swift, the renowned Author of the Tale, and the Conduct, been remov'd to the Bishoprick of Dromore, which was more due to his Virtue and Merit. noble States-man, whom they thus magnify and extol to the Skies for his great Services to their High-Church, has not hitherto given the World any Instances of his Affection or Attachment to the Establish'd one of that Kingdom; but his good Inclinations for the Prefervation of their ancient Civil Government, he has amply demonfirated, by turning out of the Commission of the Peace all over that Kingdom, Gentlemen of good Estates, sound Revolution Principles, and other eminent Qualifications for the Service of their Country, and filling 'em up with new Converts and others, Men without Fortunes, Interest or Estimation, but very proper Tools to carry on the commendable Designs of the Faction: And I cannot here but mention with Honour, the Generosity of those worthy Protestant Gentlemen who rejected the Offer made 'em of succeeding the former (with a noble Probity and Disdain) from a Man they had something more than bare Suspicions, was sent amongst 'em for their Ruin: Nor can we ever sufficiently commend the generous Constancy and Firmness of the Lord-Mayor, Aldermen, and famous Recorder of that City, who at that time had the Honour to be Speaker of the House of Commons in that Kingdon, whose united and unshaken Courage and Virtue, which they have ever constantly shown in the Defence of the Privileges and Liberties of their ancient Charter, baffled all the unjust and violent Attempts of the Chancellor and the Faction; and by their resolute Conduct gave so fair an Example to all the other Cities to stand up as boldly in defence of theirs. They have, and ever will have fresh in their Memories, I mean all the honest part of 'em, which is much the greatest, the Danger that their Religion and Liberties were expos'd to from the Tyranny of a late Popish Prince and a slavish mercenary Clergy: Their Gratitude to God, and under him to their glorious Deliverer King William, goes Ccz

Hand in Hand with their miraculous Delivery from Popery, Slavery and Arbitrary Power; only amongst the miserable Jests of the High-Church Clergy and Faction, are to be found the Instances of a vile Ingratitude, which shall fix an indelible Infamy upon their Profession. It was this particular and remarkable Firmness of the loyal City of Dublin, and the general Constancy and Vigour of a Majority of the Honourable House of Commons of that Kingdom, which (to their immortal Honour) have, as it were, stunn'd the Fa. ction and Infolence of the Man at the Head of it; and given 'em to understand, that a Nation so gallantly defended by so rare and uncommon a Virtue of such noble Patriots, is not casily to be made a Prey to the base and slavish Politicks of the Magistrate, or the surious and ungodly Bigotry of the High-Church Zealot, who with united Hearts and Hands endeavour its Destruction. With what Impudence do these Men confound the Establish'd National Religion of three Kingdoms, which only preaches and maintains the pure Doctrines of Jesus Christ and his Holy Apostles, with their upstart High-Church, which is but a politick Hotch-potch of usurp'd Power, Authority and Jurisdiction, which are by no means of the Essence of a Christian Church, but to delude and impose upon the Understandings of their weaker Brethren? Who are in reality to be reputed the best and most faithful Friends to a State or Church? They who adhering to the ancient Doctrines of the one, and ancient Principles and Maxims of the other, imploy all that's in their Power to preserve and maintain em both, upon the Foot of their original Constitution, which has ever been, and ever will be, the constant Practice of the Moderate or Low-Churchmen? Or they who eternally broach and disperse amongst the People, new Popish Doctrines in Religion, and new Jesuitical Maxims of French Policy in the State, which unavoidably lead to the Ruin and Subversion of 'em both; which ever has been, is, and 'tis to be much fear'd, ever will be, the perpetual Endeavour of all High-Church Bigots and Politicians? Yet one of the most frontless of their Scriblers, I mean the Examiner, has had the Impudence to put the Decision of this important Question upon that Issue, and we chearfully and readily join in it, and leave it to the Determination of every fensible impartial Englishman, who has Knowledge enough to understand the true Interest of his Country and Religion; and Virtue enough not to betray em, to decide in the Case between em. The Whig or Low-Churchman, who acknow-ledges a Power and Prerogative in the Prince legally established, limited and circumscribed. by fundamental Laws, which are both the Soul and Nerves of all Civil Governments, together with a just and legal Obedience and Submission in the Subjects to all his lawful Commands, according to the Tenour of the Holy Scriptures, which injoyn no more; or the Tory, High-Church Priests, or other, who in a free Nation and limited Monarchy, founded equally upon the Prerogative of the Prince and the Liberty of the Subject, ascribes fuch an unlimited, absolute and arbitrary Power to the one, as is absolutely inconsistent with, and unavoidable destructive of the other. That

That Englishman must be infatuated, or what is worse, to the last degree of Infamy corrupted, who in what fo nearly concerns him can balance a Moment to distinguish who are his and his Countries best Friends, from his and his Country's most dangerous Enemies. As to regards purely of Religion, who has the best Title to the glorious Profession of it, as establish'd in the National Church; the low Churchman who constantly Preaches Peace, Unity, Concord, Humility, Brotherly Love and Charity to all Men, or the high one who incessantly Preaches Doctrines that are naturally productive of Discord, Hears, Jealousies, Animosities and Divisions, which are the Fruits of a private Spirit and Ambition; and as they are ever destructive of the publick Peace and Tranquillity of a Nation, are as visibly design'd only for the Aggrandization of the Power and Jurisdiction of their high Church, to the manifest Scandal and Detriment of the National one. The former are the genuine Refults of a natural Affection that lead Men strait into solid Friendships and Regards for its true Interests upon Principles of Reason, Nature, and pure Religion; the other only appearances and affectation of Friendship and Concern, under the Colour and Mask of a Divine Religion which they neither understand or practice; the one in all their Actions and Designs are really and effectually what they feem to be, true Friends, and faithful Patriots to their Religion and Country; the other only defire to feem what indeed what they never were or will be, the more easily to betray both under a specious disguise into the hands of a foreign Enemy; and by an admirable tour of high Church Policy provide for the Interest and Security of a Protestant Church and Nation, by enflaving them under the Domination of a Popish Tyrant; yet these reverend Jugglers will in amoment confecrate the Nonfense and Contradiction of so gross an Abfurdity into the most pure and orthodox Doctrines, when they contribute to elevate their high Church above the State, or subject the profane Laity under the infamous Servitude of so pious, a learned and venerable Clergy; and I cannot here omit to take notice of a very notable Doctrine, but something new with us, of a Priest of their Tribe, who tho not a Member of their Convocation, is a very good indication of the endeavours and ardent inclinations of the whole Body of 'em to work a change for their purpose in the affairs and nature of our ancient civil, as well as ecclefiaffical Confliction; it was deliver'd in a Sermonin Christ-church the 29th of May, being the Anniversary of the Restoration, before the Lords Justices, Sir Constantine Phipps, and the great General Ingoldshy, by whose special command it was ordered to be Printed, to show how perfectly well they understood the nature of our original Government, and their vigorous Refolutions to contribute to the prefervation of it. This Journeyman Tool, in the Language of the Church, was at that time Chaplain to the Lord Chancellor, and has fince for his rare and supple Capacity for the Service of the Faction, been promoted to the honour of being in the same Station to the renown'd Lord Rolinbroke. I should by no means have thought Joseph Trap, A. M. worthy to mention, or to have taken the leaft notice of, had it not been for Cc 3

the fingular rarity of his Doctrine from these words of Isaich, Chap. 1. v. 26. And I will restore thy Judges as at the first, and thy Counsellours as at the beginning, afterwards thou shalt be called the City of Righteousness, the faithful City. I think it will not be difficult to guess that so learned and artful a Partisan would not omit so fair an opportunity of imploying all the Stock of his prosound Erudition, and flourishes of Rhetorick, to give from these excellent words a very favourable and indulgent turn to the Glory and Advantages of his singular good Lords and Masters of the present Times, and so the discredit of those of the preceeding. Whoever has a mind to be satisfy'd in that Point, may inform his Curiosity from the Sermon it self which has been publick; I shall concen my self at present with no more of it, than what is to my purpose, to shew the Audaciousness of the Priest, this in a Paragraph, Page 7th, which I shall saithfully transcribe.

But to our own case, the ordinary Providence of God never bless's any Nation of the World with so perfect a constitution as that of these Kingdoms; in which the Authority of the Prince, the Liberty of the Subject, and the Happiness of both are equally provided for. The Schemes of Lycurgus, Solon, Plato or Machiavell were not so exquisite in speculation as ours in fact, and what they could not so much as contrive, we actually enjoy. ——So far the Man is right, and what he is in nothing else Orthodox. ——'A Constitution, says be, it is made up like the Universe, of four Elements, and tho' the Sovereign and the three Estates seem to be in their Natures like them, jarring and disagreeing Principles, yet like them too, they are so mutually temper'd and blended, that instead of destroying they strengthen and support the whole; and as this Scheme resembles the World in its composition, so it may do in its duration, if so great Blessing be not prevented by our Folly and Wickedness.

Now this same Doctrine of the Sovereign and the three Estates is something new and unknown, till the day this Insolent publish'dit to the ears of all his honester Countrymen; for we have ever been taught by our Fore-fathers, and all our fundamental Laws that our Kings, Lords, and Commons, were the only three Estates which compose the Legislature, the only supream and independent Power of the Nation, without ever dreaming of a fourth. 'Tis true indeed, that fuch Language in the Mouth of a Popish Priest in France might have past without Reflection or Censure, where for the Missortune and Curse of that noble Kingdom the Clergy have been establish'd a fourth Estate of their Constitution; yet there is nothing in nature more plain, than that they have been not only the principal cause of defacing the Beauty, and preventing all the Ends of it for the publick Good of their Fellow-Subjects, but even the Subversion and Slavery of one of the greatest People in the Universe; but in the mouth of an English Protestant Priest, who knew he was advancing a Lye, (in a place he ought to have efteem'd facred to Truth) the moment he was divulging it, is, if I am not in an error, of very near akin to Treason, and so audacious a piece of Impudence as could never have enter'd into the head of any but a high Church one, who we know are fo defirous to carry on the fame execrable defign of enflaving all Conditions of their Fellow-Subjects to the Tyranny of their Priesthood. We acknowledge that the Church of England, as by Law effablish'd, and her Clergy are a considerable Branch and Members of the Commonwealth, and as such ought and ever shall be maintain'd in their just and legal Honours and Immunities; yet we believe the time is not far off, when the high Church of England with the corrupt and mercenary Tribe of her Clergy shall not be permitted to increase their Usurpations, or enjoy the Dignities and Emoluments they so little deserve; and whenever they shall dare to presend to erect themselves, according to the Notion of this insolent Churchman, into a fourth Estate, there are two things that we heartily hope, and firmly believe, that is, that the Nation will never by their Sins fall into such a State of Wickedness and Degeneracy from the Virtue and noble Spirit of their Ancestors, as to merit so terrible a Curse and Judgment; and that the just and merciful God for the Glory of his true Church and the establish'd Religion, and the Good and Happiness of these poor Kingdoms will never permit it. If any honest Englishman, deceiv'd by the plausible Opinion of the Uprightness a d Sincerity of the Intentions of such Priests from the nature of their Character and Profe hon, has hitherto doubted, that all ther Defigns and Endeavours have tended folely to raise and aggrandize the Power and Authority of their Church and Priesthood, upon the ruin of the holy Religion of the establish'd Church, and civil Liberties of their Fellow-Subjects; let him reflect with himfelf, what other Inferences and Conclusions he can rationally draw both from all their other Doctrines, and this of aspiring to the Honour of a fourth Estate, which neither the Laws of God intended, nor those of the Land ever thought em worthy of. To what end can Men pretend to affect such a Power so entirely foreign to their Function and Profession, but in the same views with those of the Popish Communion, who wherever they have obtain'd the ascendant of Power, have perpetually employ'd it to reduce both Prince and People under their Tyranny? Do we not see our own so near of kin to em, daily propagating such Popish Doctrines in a Protestant Kingdom, folely to the end of re-introducing the abjur'd Errors and Superstitions of Rome, to corrupt the Purity of the reform'd Religion establish'd in our holy National Church? Do we not find 'em hour ly infinuating and promoting Maxims of Popith French Policy into our happy Constitution, which if they succeed, must necessarily terminate in the entire Subversion of it? Are we grown so fond of French Popery and Slavery, or are we become already fuch vile fubmissive suffering Slaves, as to fit still with our Hands in our Pockets, till our crafty high Church-Priests shall put the Bit in our Mouths, and Saddle on our Backs to mount, and ride us once more our Telves and miserable Posterity to the Devil? Shall we tamely see and fuffer so unsupportable an Infamy and Punishment? Or shall we not rouze out of this fatal Lethargy that has fo long bewitched us and before it be too late, evert our old English Virtue, good Sense and Valour to their Confusion? thing better and nobler in the defence of our Religion and Liberties. which they so audaciously labour to extirpate and subvert? Shall we be wanting at least in our good Wishes and Prayers, that we may foon fee the bleffed time when this traiterous maintainer of a fourth Estate of Priesthood, with all his Abettors, shall be animadverted on with the utmost severity of those Laws they so impudently infult and contravene? 'T will be a glorious fituation, which by our Cow. ardice or Treachery we shall see our selves reduc'd to, when we shall find an imperious high Church Priesthood erecting themselves into Legislators, and giving Laws to a free and noble Nation; they who at present have not the power of making a Canon for the regulation of their Church, that has the force of binding, till it receives its Sanction from the civil Power; yet it is this alone demonstrably that these venerable Pharisees and worthy lovers of their Country directly drive at: Let that wretched cowardly Englishman, who is fond or defirous to be the Slave of such relentless Masters, perish their Slave, he deserves no better; but let them know, that there are yet many a hundred thousand honest and generous ones who know the value of their ancient Freedom, and in that are worthy of it, who will facrifice their Fortunes, Lives, and whatfoever elfe can be efteem'd dear and precious amongst Freemen, rather than tamely part with their Religion and Liberties, or submit to the Spiritual Tyranny of Men born their Inferiors, and who never usurp'd a Power which they did not always profane to the Diffress and Misery of the rest of Mankind; if any Man is offended with the freedom or plainness of my Sentiments, I have only to tell him, that I am an Englishman, a Freeman, a Gentleman, and an honest one too, who love my Country, my Liberty, and my Religion; with all fuch, the juffice and merit of the Cause will be my excuse, if I need any with 'em; as to the reft, that is of high Church, whether Priest or Layman, I think em not worth it, and am in little pain and less dispositions to make any at all to any of 'em, either in this Kingdom or that.

But to return to the Irish Convocation, I intend only those of the high Church Members who compose it, and are the Majority; it's Man seriously examines their Conduct of late Years, even abstracted from their Doctrines, there is much more reason to believe that they are a fort of Mon who rather have no Religion, at all, than such is defire to be hopour'd with the Character of the Ministers, and more immediate Professors, and Dispensers of it; since it is manifest that they so very little conform to, and practice the Precepts of that which Jefus Chrift and his Holy Apostles by their Example and Sur ferings recommend to their Ohservance and Imitation, under the most dreadful Penalty of Eternal Punishments. 'Tisin vain for Man to boath of the glorious Title and Privilege of being Christians who aft directly opposite to all the Precepts of Christianity, Such Men affect only the appearances of Religion, but in effect are no thing less than Religious; and as the World is too quick-fighted not to fee thro' the thin Difguise, and to differn the Interests of Am bition, preferable to that of the only pure Religion, they feldomfall gay

to look on fuch, with that Contempt and Abhorrence fo fcandalous an Hypocrifie and Prevarication deserve. What opinion can one rationally besuppos'd to conceive of those who set up for Teachers and Leaders of the People into the Ways of future Happiness, who themselves set before their Eyes Examples of Vices, the practice of which our holy Religion affures us have for their reward Eternal Damnation; we know as well as they, and I hope shall justify our Knowledge by our Practice, that the Religion of Jesus Christ and his Disciples is a Religion of Peace, Unity, Concord and constant Charity; but whose Disciples then are they to be esteem'd who eternally preach up Divisions, Dissentions, Envy, Hatred, Malice, and all Uncharitableness, to the Disturbance of the publick Tranquillity of the State, and of the Peace and Union of the National Church. This were indeed a heavy Charge, and an impious one in any Man who should invent it only to calumniate or expose 'em; but they have taken sufficient care, to prevent a Man's making so soul a Reproach to his Conscience on that Article; for they have so evidently demonstrated to the World the little regard they have to the Welfare and Happiness either of the State or Church, that by their own perpetual practice they stand self-condemn'd, in the opinion of all such as have sense enough to enquire into the true nature of Things and Actions, and judgment enough not to be deceived by their fraudulent, however specious Impositions. If we are commanded by a Divine Authority, it is not lawful for us to question, to love one another, to live in charity with all Men, to love our Neighbour as our felves, and by a refinement on humane Nature by a celestial Grace, to love even our Enemies; what do these Men mean, who every hour of their Lives convince the World they love no body but themselves, that they practice none of the Duties of common Humanity, much less of a heavenly Charity but to themselves, and even that, not so much out of a sense of Religion as views of Interest; and who esteem all the rest of Mankind who do not believe and act as they do, as mortal Enemies, and treat and perfecute 'em as such? From so very unchristian a practice, so directly opposite to all the Precepts and Commands of their Religion, can these Men be reasonably said to be the more immediate Ministersand Teachers of it, by a peculiar Authority from the holy Apostles, which they pretend to assume to distinguish 'em from the rest of their fellow Christians? Or have we not reason more justly to conclude, that if they make a profession of any thing, 'tis of an infernal quality, very opposite to the Purity and Divinity of it, Unforgiveness; and whether pardoning and forgiving Injuries be considered as an indispensable Duty of a Divine Religion, or as one of the brightell and noblest Excellencies and Perfections of human Nature, I appeal to the observation of all disinterested and impartial Men, whether that Reverend Community distinguish'd under the Character of the high, Church Clergy, are not of all Mankind observed to know and practice'em, the least? For if a Man, a Society, or Body of Men, nay, if a very confiderable Body of a Nation, tho' professing all the effential and fundamental Articles of the same common Faith in Jesus Christ, do not submit and conform to 'em, in every circums stance of the Discipline and Worship of their Church, they are Here ticks, they are Schismaticks, they are every thing that is odious and reproachful that Hell or Malice can put into their antichristan Mouths to render 'em contemptible; tho' it seems something hard, and not a little unreasonable, that such Men should pretend to set themselves up for the Judges and Controllers of the Consciences of others, who evince to the World how very little, or what strange fort of

ones they have of their own.

What Authority have these Men to make the Worship of any particular, suppose the establish'd Church of these Nations to be the sole and indispensible rule by which the Consciences of all their fellow Subjects, and fellow Christians, must of necessity be constrained to ferve God after their manner only? Jesus Christ, or his Apofiles left no certain Model for the imitation of all succeeding Belie. vers; and if Discipline of any fort were afterwards established by their Successors, it was no more than a human Institution, and might be refus'd without fear of being damn'd for noncompliance, till the Craft of Priests made it be esteem'd so, to terrify and hold in Subjection a misguided Laity; the Establish'd National Church, tho the wishes and defires Conformity, yet enjoyns not, much less commands no fuch thing; because she is modest and sensible she is not invested with a Power to do so; nor since the first happy Reformation have there been any Laws made to compel Men's Consciences, but what have been procur'd by the Arts of an infidious high Church Priesthood when they were in credit to obtain 'em. How do these Men prove to us from the Authority of the Holy Scriptures, which is the only one under Heaven that can decide in the case, that a just and merciful God shall not be as well pleas'd with the Sacrifice of contrite Hearts, of the Prayers, the Praise and Thanksgiving of Christian Dissenters (whose behaviour in respect of civil Government, and practice in regard of things purely religious is generally a reproach to theirs) as of their elevated high Church Clergy, or of those other unhappy People they have by their specious infinuations cajol'd into their Interests and Designs? If we have not been misinform'd, 'tis the Heart alone, and upright Intentions of it that are ever the most acceptable Sacrifice to God, and not Affectation, Appearances, and certain Formalities, which are in themselves, the former irreligious, and the latter indifferent; this is to make Religion confiff in pure grimace, or what is worse, impudently to profficute it to the facrilegious views of private Interest; the former, when fincere and truly Religious, shall questionless be receiv'd by an equitable and merciful God as agreeable Offerings, tho' without the preeinct and manner of the establish'd Church; whilst the latter with all the Pomps and Formalities of the High (of which I am only understood to speak) may be rejected as the Impieties of an infamous Hypocrifie. Is it then by unmannerly Railings, by Calumnies, by Invectives, by Fire, and a Spirit of Persecution, (things unknown to facred primitive Christianity) that they wou'd invite Men back into the Communion of their Church, from which their Severity, and a re.

nd 2 DifDiscipline (which they might think in some things might still sayour of the Superstitions from which they had reform'd) had first panish'd 'em? Do they not know that Men's Consciences cannot, and are not to be compell'd, fince it is as impossible for Men to beieve as others do without conviction, as to be well or ill at other Men's Pleasures, or indeed their own? They would do well out of rudence in their own regard, if they had any true value for themelves, their Religion, or their Country, to forbear prescribing dognatically, or offering officiously their Advice before it is ask'd, and ever can be necessary, at least till they had got into their hands that upremacy and Independency which we know they aim at, and which they never shall or can be masters of, but upon the Ruin and We shall then be quick-Desolation both of the State and Church. y, when it may be too late, made sensible of our Error and Folly in suftring 'em to arrive at a Power which we shall be no longer able to efift. What Mercy then to be expected from Men invested with such n exorbitant degree of it, as shall place 'em above the reach and Inuence of the Laws? The Church of Rome which has fo long, and y fuch facrilegious means usurp'd such an independent Power, damns ll the rest of Mankind, tho' more true Believers than themselves, and uts 'em off from the mystical Body of Christ, the universal Church, Hereticks; and the high Church of England which nicely copies ter so perfect and primitive an Original, damns all' their fellow abjects who cannot conform to the Discipline and Worship of their ommunion, tho' much honester Men, and much better Christians an themselves, as Schismaticks, and obstinate disturbers of the eace of the Church. This is the common roar from their Pulpits that Kingdom, for we are all this while in Ireland, which we e think were intended for more Pious and Christian Purposes; nd it is with great forrow that we can affirm, that we can point out e Men, and the Places, where in express words they have declar'd their Congregations, that all the Children of fuch as have not reiv'd their Baptism from the hands of a Priest of the Episcopal Irdination, are under a State of Reprobation. Is this the Peaceble, the Meek, the Humble, the Charitable Spirit of the Gospel of fus Christ? Or does it not rather manifestly appear, that they e doing the Drudgery of a Being that sets himself up in oppositito all that can be call'd God? What is this to the business of ue Religion, to the Ministration of which they insolently preme to be consecrated, and by that Character distinguish'd from e rest of Mankind? Their heavenly Master has told 'em, that his ingdom is not of this World, and condemn'd the Presumption of s own Apostles, as yet ignorant of the End and Intention of his offrine, as aspir'd to be the greatest. From what School is it then at these pretended modern Disciples, even the least among 'em has arn'd the defire to become the greatest; and all of 'em to-arrogate Power of commanding and domineering over Kings, Princes, and ommonwealths, not to mention their Fellow-Subjects? Or from hat Authority do they pretend to decide magisterially over other en s Consciences, but from that of Rome? For we know no other

Power under Heaven that arrogates it, but their Sovereign Pontif, as the Supreme visible Head of their belov'd Catholick Church.

'Tis something above Wonder, to observe with what unchristian Haughtiness and Severity they treat the distress'd French Refugees who have taken shelter in that Kingdom from the violent and barb rous Perfecutions of their inhuman Tyrant. It might reasonably have been expected, that poor Strangers banish'd from their own Country Friends, Relations and Estates, by the fury of a merciles Religion purely upon the score of Conscience, might have mov'd so much Compassion, and Sentiments of Tenderness due to the distressed, as to have permitted 'em to find that Repose and Tranquillity there, which they were so cruelly deny'd and depriv'd of at home, at less amongst Men professing the same common faith, who had had the least Tincture of Humanity or Religion, which was design'd to to fine upon it : Yet neither the Miseries of Banishment, the Cause Conscience and Religion, the loss of Estates, and whatsoever else is us'd to be esteem'd dear and most valuable amongst Men, have been able to shelter those poor Unfortunate, from the Hatred and Malice these admirable Protesfors of their new Religion, who know no Pin Neither the Favour and Indulgence of our Princes, nor the Authorit of Laws, which in two Acts of Parliament, one in the Reign King Charles the Second, and the latter in that of our glorious King William, (both which have establish'd 'em amongst us upon the for of the ancient discipline and manner of Worship of their first Re formation) can cover em from the ungenerous Insults of a high Church Clergy void of Honour. Calvinists, Republicans, Enemies of the establish'd Church, Disturbers of the publick Peace, and an add tional Strength and Reinforcement to the Presbyterians of that No tion, are the softest and gentlest Epithets and Characters those fun Zealors can bestow upon 'em, and are heartily forry they can do m more; yet do these poor, distressed, unhappy People live among themselves with that truly Christian Spirit of Brotherly Love, and of a distinguishing Charity with all other Fellow-Christians; with that Firmness and Loyalty to the Government that protects in and with that respect and deserence to the established Church which they honour; as will eternally reproach the Neglect and Remind of the others, in the Practice and Exercise of all these excellent, the ligious, and politick Vertues. I can with the greater confidence and do with the greater pleasure and Satisfaction advance the Truths in their behalf, both because I esteem it a Duty, inseparate from the Character of the Christian and the Gentleman, to do Julio and Favour to the Unfortunate; and because I have been sufficiently conversant, and a strict Observer of the Inhumanity of the one la of Men, and the great Moderation and Christian Temper of the other under Sufferings, that are the greatest Proof and Tryals human or religious Virtues. I have been wonderfully charm'd edify'd to see Men, many of 'em of ancient Nobility, noble for tunes, with all the Advantages of a generous Education (which w often give a loofe to the Follies incident to human Nature) live lick fugees in that Kingdom (a very inconsiderable few excepted, and those some of 'em of the Clergy) are unanimously and immoveably fix'd in the Principles of the late happy Revolution. They lament the deplorable condition of their native Country, which from a no. ble free People, they have been reduc'd into the miserable condition of Slavery, by the very fame Doctrines, Principles and Measures that are employ'd to ruin and subvert our own. They have been made too sensible of the Miseries of Bondage and Tyranny in their own Country, to fall in with the same Methods, and much the same fort of Men, who they daily see taking so much pains to introduce 'em both into these. They admire, and have too noble a sease of the old English happy Liberty and Property, to contribute with their and the Nation's Enemies, to deprive us of those invaluable Bleffings as has been done in France. They well know, that both they and we owe the Happiness we enjoy above all other Nations, to that glorious Revolution, that re-establish'd our tottering Government upon the foot and folid Basis of its original Constitution; and they have Gratitude enough to thank God and our great Deliverer for fo inestimable a Treasure, and courage enough to joyn with all honest Englishmen to support and defend it. They see their Interest, their Repose, and their Religion inteparable from those of all the honest and greatest part of the Nation who love their Country, and they are chearfully and generously resolv'd to stand by them for their Preservation; this is the true and principal, the other but the affected and apparent Cause of all the High Church Malin and Animofity against them; and I may venture with their Par mission to affirm, 'tis that in which they place their principal Go ry, which as it will with all difinterested Persons be both an As gument and eternal Monument of their Judgment, Virtue, a Courage, will on the other hand convince the World how far the Interest and Ambition of mercenary Priests, who are basely betray ing their Religon and Civil Liberties, can carry it above all Confi derations of Honour, Conscience, and the general Utility and Hay piness of their native Country.

Neither will this cruel and unchristian Behaviour to our own Domestick or the Foreign Dissenters, seem strange to a considering Person, who shall reflect with what Inhumanity they treat the con tlemen of their own Character and Communion, who have the good Sense and Probity to diffent from 'em in the Extravaganda of their Opinions; nor is there any thing that more visibly make known the Nature and Genius of a mistaken and intemperate La than Severity, Passion and ill Manners, that are inseparable from it A true and conscientious Zeal for the Glory of God, the Peace in Unity of a National Church, the Propagation of true Religion, a the interest and Happiness of one's Country; as they are in Men in the highest Degree commendable, ever work by the gent Spirit of Perswasion, Affability, Courtesy and good Nature; 'tis univerfal Defire of promoting the general good of Mankind; but false, affected and hypocritical Zeal, as it has ever for its End private Interest distinct from that of the Publick, is made un

Self-Love and Ambition; and always discovers it felf, and operates by the suitable means of Pride, Asperity, Passion, Prejudice, Violence and Perfecution, with a certain Air of Imperiousness, that is impatient of Opposition. The one is a generous Heat that gently warms and animates Men to cultivate and preferve the Peace and Tranquillity both of the Church and State, by Reason, and the peaceable Virtues of Moderation and Christian Charity: The other adevouring Fire, which with an irrefiftible Violence and Impetuofity is kindled and blown up into a Flame with an Intention only to destroy. Tis not difficult to conceive, Men actuated by fuch a turbulent and ungovernable Spirit to be capable of the wildest and most pernicious Extravagancies, and of introducing all the Confusions and Diforders, that not only shake, but subvert that Peace and Union and natural Justice, which are the very Foundations of the Publick Happiness. It is from this furious and unquiet Spirit of an intemperate Zeal, that proceed Railings, Calumny, Invectives, Scandal. Reproaches, and whatever else can contribute to create and foment Heats, Animofities, Discord and unnatural Divisions amongst Men of the same Religion and Civil Polity; and I am forry to say, that it is every Body's Observation, that these terrible Effects of it are of no one fort of Condition of Men so visibly the Practice, as of Clergymen, I ever mean of those of the High-Church Distinctinction, and the' I could wish with all my Heart I had not the Reason to advance so melancholy a Truth, yet a thing so obviously the Knowledge of all observing Men, and the Love I have for my Country, which they have long, are still labouring to betray, makes me insensible of the Reproaches or Resentments of Men whom I neither love nor fear. It is very difficult to imagine that a Body of Men affembled in Convocation, which is supposed to be composed of Persons of Piety, Learning, Prudence, and good Manners, should shamefully abandon themselves to all the Violences of Prejudice and their Passions, in a Manner that would be a reproach to any other Sort and Condition of Men, who are not suppos'd in the same degree to have had all the happy Advantages of Education, Learning or Profession; yet there is so much more of the Wolf than the true Shepherd amongst'em, that it were next to incredible, if it were not past contradiction evident, with what Bitterness, with what haughty ill bred Insolence, with what unbecoming Rudeness of Language and Manners, they not only infult, but as it were tear to pieces and murder the Reputation of those honester and more moderate Gentlemen amongst'em, who will not run headlong with 'em into all the Excesses of their Enthusiasms; and which is the utmost stretch of infernal Malice, where there are no Faults, will not scruple to invent 'em; so pregnant and fertile is the Devil of scandal in the Mouth of of a Mercenary Priest, when the business is to blast the Reputation of Men, in every respect, of all the Virtues of their Character infinitely more commendable than themselves; for some sew there are, and 'tis pity their Numbers are not greater, who to their great Honour have the good Sense to understand the true Interest of their Religion and Country, Virtue to defend and maintain em, and a Courage and Temper cruly Christian to support the Insults and

Effrontery of the Zealots.

It were a Task as endless as invidious, to enumerate all the Dar. ticularities that may be instanced in a Practice so very unsuitable to the Profession; and I shall content my felf only with the mention of one, which will sufficiently discover the Temper of a Zeal, when it is rather an Effect of Passion, than of Conscience or pure Religion; which where it prevails, amongst other commendable Qualities, is always attended with a Blindness of near akin to Infatuation. A certain Reverend Member of their Convocation, who as Chancellor of St. Patricks is Minister of St. Warburgh's Church in Dublin, in. stead of a Lesson, (if I do not forget) it was the Chapter whereinis the story of Tobit and his Dog, was pleased to appoint another to be read, which he effeemed of more Use and Edification to his People, One cannot easily imagine what a Cry, upon so very frivolous an Occasion, was rais'd amongst them against this excellent Person, by the godly; the Church was in Danger, the Order of their Holy Liturgy was inverted, Discipline despis'd; and one would really have believ'd that Mahometism, was pouring in upon us with a Deluge to overflow and drown both the Church and Nation; they fropp'd not here, for this Sin of fuch dreadful Complexion and Confequence was carried to the Upper House, as an unpardonable Violation of the facred Rules and Orders of the Littingy, dress'd up in all the ridiculous Formalities of Complaint; but was rejected with the Contempt it deserv'd by the Lords the Bishops, as frivo lous and malicious on the one part, and excusable and justifiable on the other. Is not here now a most admirable Instance of these Men's Regards and Sense of Religion? One would have imagin'd that if such a Body had been in a Humour of finding Fault, they should at least have pitch'd upon a Subject that might have furnished out a reasonable Matter for a just Complaint; yet so far were they blinded by their Passion, and suffer'd that to carry it over the little Stock of Reason or Prudence they were Masters of, that they unluckily cast their Eyes upon a Person, who, if there be such a thing in Nature, was the only Man amongst 'em without a Fault; and, as I cannot be suppos'd to flatter where I have no manner of Interest in doing it, I shall do my self the Honour, and him the Justice to give a feeble Sketch of his Character; and if I have any Excuse to make, 'tis to him for Want of Ability to come up to the Merit of it. The venerable Person I am speaking of is Dr. Edward Synge, a Gentleman by his Birth, and much more so by his Manners; who, to the Happiness of an excellent natural Genius, has added all the Advantages of a generous Education, and Improvements of indefatigable Study: 'Tis difficult to discern, to which he is most indebted for the Accomplishments of the Gentleman and the Scholar; I don't mean by the former a Machine of Grimace, or by the latter, the Pedant; but a Man equally eminent for the Probity of his Manners, and his fingular Knowledge in all useful Learning; of great Temper and Moderation, and a constant and excellent Preacher, vigilant, watchful, and tender as a Father in his Care over his Flock; who places his Satisfaction and Repose of his Mind in the Discharge of his Duty, because he knows it is his Duty, without catching at the airy Fantom of Applause or Popularity; one, who truly wears his Religion in his Heart, and ever busy in the Exercise of his Ministerial Function, though he never fails to shew it in all the decent Instances of his external Behaviour; chearful without Reproach, of inoffensive Freedom consistent with a nice and scrupulous Virtue, that speaks a Soul exempt from the Embarassments and Disquierudes of Hypocrify and Affectation; and, to compleat the Character, of Primitive, and I will be bold to fay, without offending him or the Truth, of Apostolical Example, in the whole Train of his Life and Conversation. It would be for the Honour of any Church, the Glory of God, and Happiness of any Nation, if all the Pretenders of Profession to Religion would, I not say come up to the Perfection, but endeavour to imitate a Man of such uncommon Virtue and unaffected Piety. Behold the Man, the Object of the Rage and Malice of these Bigots! and I challenge the worst and most ill natur'd of his Enemies to contradict or deny any one Article of the Character I have done the World the Justice to give him. But to unriddle this Mystery of Iniquity, and expose the true Causes of their Animosity, I need only acquaint the Reader, that to the many excellent Qualities I have mention'd of this venerable Clergyman, he has had the great Indifcretion (for there is nothing perfect on this fide the Grave) to superadd such as will ever recommend him as a loyal Subject and honest Englishman in the Opinion of all who are truly such, tho' they may differ omething from the Mode and Language of the present Times that is, that he has in their Convocation, and on all other publick Occasions thewn himself a true Lover of the Liberty and Property of his Country; that he is what most of 'em are extreamly scandaliz'd at, an Enemy to their Pretender, and a strenuous Asserter of sound Revolution Principles; that he perfectly honours the Virtues and Memory of that great and glorious Instrument in the Hands of God, King William, who accomplish'd it; that as he is convinc'd of the Reasons and Equity of the Revolution it self, and sensible of the happy Effects and Bleffings of it to these Nations, he has Gratiude enough to be thankful for 'em to God and the Prince, and to indeavour to perpetuate the Memory of it to Posterity; that with Ill honest Englishmen he adheres inviolably to the Succession as ettled by the Legislature in the most illustrious Protestant House of Hanover: all which he has ever approv'd and maintain'd to be just, calonable and equitable, by a Strength of Reasoning which none of hem is able to answer; particularly in an excellent Sermon, preach'd before the honourable House of Commons in that Kingdom, or which he deservedly received the Thanks of that House, and their Orders to publish it; which with most of these hypocritical, angry ealots are all Sins of that crying and damnable Nature, as will ever be forgiven or capable of Absolution even from the sacred south of a Priest of Episcopal Ordination; and we are all cerin, that it must be something very extraordinary that is out of the Reach of such an infallible, independent, sanctify'd Power to effect.

These are the bleffed Evangelical Dispositions in which we find the Majority of them, and the Generality of the rest of the inferiour Clergy, (I am forc'd, for Distinction sake, to make use of a Term they cannot well endure), of that Kingdom; and it would be fome Degree of Happiness for it, if this fatal Poison were only confin to them: But it has been unluckily diffus'd into the House of Lords. where those of the Spiritual Order make the Majority to carry every thing they please in that House, according to their own Principles and Defigns; which is sufficiently evident from the famous Contest between them and the Honourable House of Commons, the 12st Session of the 12st Parliament, upon the Subject of the Revolution; which I hope may, without Offence, be communicated to the World in their own express Terms, whereby my Countrymen may be fatisfy'd of the different Spirit and Principles upon which both Houses have acted upon that important Occasion; and the more esfily judge which of em have, and are likely to approve themselves the best and most faithful Subjects to the Establish'd Government, and Supporters of the Established Religion. The Case is as follows:

THE House being inform'd, That the Lords, in an Address to he Majesty this Session of Parliament, have restlected on the House of this House; and a Paper, alledged to be a Copy of the said Al-

Sir Ralph Gore reported from the committee, that they had compar'd the said Paper with the original Address shew'd 'em by the Clerk attending in the Office of the Lords House, and that the same was a true Copy of the Lords Address to her Majely agreed on the 19th Day of July last; which he deliver'd at the Table where the same was again read: And a Motion being made, and the Question being propos'd, that this House having on the surf.

June, 1709, come to the following Refolutions, viz.

Resolved, That this House taking into Consideration the Proceeding of the University of Trinity-College near Dublin, in consing Edward Forbus, by Degradation and Expulsion, for speaking life mourably of, and aftersing the Glorious Memory of his late Majest ling William the Third; and also the steady Adherence of the Provost and Fellows of the said College, to the late happy Revolution, her presentables Government, and the Succession in the Protestant Line, as Law Establish d; for the Encouragement of good Literature and some Revolution Principles, do address his Excellenty the Lord-Lieutena that he will lay before her Majesty the humble Desire of this House, the Soool, he bestowed by her Majesty on the Provost, Fellows and School College; which Resolution being laid before the Queen's faid College; which Resolution being laid before the Queen's Excellent Majesty, and her Majesty having been graciously pleased no der that 50001, to be paid to the Provost and Fellows of the said the

lege, in compliance with the aforesaid Application, as appears by his Grace the Lord-Lieutenant's Speech to both Houses of Parliament: And the Lords having in their Address to her Majesty, agreed on the said 17th of July, inserted the following Words, viz. Your Majesty has also extended your Royal Favour to the College of Dublin, and at such a Juncture, as must testify to the World, that what your Majesty bestow'd, was not given to promote those Principles, upon which it was first apply'd for.

The previous Question was put, that that Question be put; it was carry'd in the Affirmative.

Resolved, That the Lords in the said Address, have highly infring'd the Rights, Privileges and Liberties of the Commons, misrepresented her Majesties gracious Condescention to their humble Application, and have unjustly insunated (to the Dishonour of this House) that the Principles for Encouragement of which the aforesaid Application was made, were such as her Majesty disapprov'd.

Resolved, Nemine contradicente, That to infinuate that the House of Commons, in their afore recited Resolution, intended any other than the late happy Revolution brought about by King William the Third, of Clorious Memory, is false, scandalous and malicious, highly and most unjusty restecting on the Loyalty, Integrity and Honour of this House, and a great Breach of the Privileges thereof.

Resolved, Nemine contradicente, That it is to the late Happy Revolution, next under God, and to the Wisdom, Justice and Piety of her Majesty, and the glorious Successes of her Majesties Reign, we owe the Injoyment of our Lives, Religion, Liberties and Properties.

Refolved, Nemine contradicente, That this House will, at the utmost Hazard and Expence of their Lives and Fortunes, defend, support and maintain her Majesties most sacred Person and Government, the Church of Ireland as by Law Establish'd, and the Succession of the Crown in the Illustrious House of Hanover, against the Pretender, and all other her Majesties Enemies Abroad, and against all Jacobites and other factious and disaffected Persons at Home.

These noble and vigorous Resolutions alarm'd the House of Lords, and gave birth the 9th of November following, to a Representation and Address to her Majesty. The former, as being a Charge against the Presbyterians in that Kingdom, and from which in their Answer they have handsomly clear'd themselves, as foreign to my Purpose, I omit, and refer the Curious to their Desence, which has been publick: The Address to her Majesty, in answer to the Resolutions of the Commons, is as follows.

The humble Address of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament Assembled.

May it please your Most Excellent Majesty,

W E Your Majesty's most Dutisful and Loyal Subjects the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament Assembled, do with a just Retribution of Thanks for all Your Majesty's Favours with the highest Veneration of Your Sacred Person and Government, and with the utmost concern for the Welfare and Prosperity of this Your Realm, beg leave to approach Your Majesty.

The grateful remembrance of the many Obligations you have laid upon us, the fintere Veneration for Your Majesty's Royal Person and Prerogative, and the tender regard we have for the Peace and Tranquillity of this Kingdom, could alone prevail with us thus long to forget the high Indignities offered to this House by the Commons, and to submit our private Injuries to Your Majesty's more publick Concerns, least by our just Resemment of their Behaviour, when so industriously provok'd, Your Majesty's Affairs might be obstructed, and by that means, the pernicious Designs of evil minded Men render'd effectual.

of Unanimity, how far they have made good their Professions to Your Majesty of Unanimity, how far they have pursu'd that Temper recommended to em by Your Majesty, we shall not determine; yet surely had those Professions been sincere, they would not (without any Conference demanded, or any Opportunity given us to explain our selves, if we had been mistaken) have us'd us in a manner unknown to former Parliaments, and in Language more indecent, more opprobious than was given by another House of Commons, at a time when they Voted a House of Lords

However your Majesty might justly approve the Conduct of the College of Dublin in the late Revolution, we did and do still humbly conseive, that Your Majesty did not extend your Bounty to 'em to promote in general Revolution Principles, Principles which as explain'd by the Pamphlets and Libels publickly avow'd and celebrated by Men of Factious and Seditious Tempers, and particularly by a Sermon Preach'd on the 30th of January, Dedicated to this very House of Commons, without Censure of Animadversion, do in a great measure maintain and justify the execrable Murder of King Charles the First, your Royal Grandfather of Blessed Memory, and on which may be sounded any Rebellion against your Majesty and your Successors.

Nor have the Commons, in our Apprehension, vindicated themselves of their Vote, by saying that sound Revolution Principles mention'd in their Address, neither had nor can have in the true Construction of the Words a yother meaning, than what related to the late happy Revolution; for however they may take upon themselves best to know their own meaning, yet we think it hard to deny us the Right of Judging, as well as they of the true Construction of the Words; and we do take leave to say, that the Commons having in that Vote mention'd the steady Adherence of the Provost and Fellows of the College to the late Revolution, as one consideration for the Five Thousand Pounds since granted by Your Majesty, the subsequent motive mention'd in the Vote, viz. for the Encouragement of sound Revolution Principles, cannot in good Reason or Grammar, be refer'd to the late Revolution, since Adherence to the late Revolution, was a distinct motive of it self, and it is the known Nature of Principles to be as well the Rule and Guide of future as of past Actions.

It never enter'd into our Hearts to misrepresent the Commons to your Majesty; for their own Astions they must be judged by God and by your Majesty; but for our selves, we do solemnly assure Your Majesty, that we are heartily thankful to Almighty God, for the late happy Revolution and Asknowledge the Necessity and Justice of it, that we will at the utmost hazard and expence of our Lives and Fortunes, defend, support and maintain, Your Majesty's Sacred Person and Government, Your Just Prerogative in the Choice of Your Ministers, the Church of Ireland as by Law Establish'd, and the Succession of the Crown in the Illustrious House of Hanover, against the Pretender and all who design Revolutions either in Church or State, against all your Enemies abroad, and against all Papists, Jacobites and Republicans at Home.

Whatever plaufibility of Expressions or Professions there may appear thro' this whole Address, there is no Man of tolerab e Sense who Examines and feriously considers it, but must with half an Eye differn the Spirit of an inveterate animolity against the Whigs, or in the language of the Resolution and Address, the Men of sound Revolution Principles in every Paragraph of it, which it is impossible for 'em to disguise or conceal. Whether the remembrance of Obligations, Veneration for Royalty and Prerogative, and Regard for the publick Peace and Tranquillity were the Motives that prevail'd with the Lords Spiritual (for it is of them that I would be principally understood to speak, as being the Majority that leads or overpowers the others as they please) to postpone their private Injuries to the publick Concerns, I do not pretend to determine; yet the Reason why they subjoin to make the World believe it was of this wondrous Deference and Submiffion (viz. Left Her Majesty's Affairs should be obstructed, and by that means the pernicious Designs of Evil minded Men render'd effectual) is in the Opinion of all Wise and thinking Men, but a very Weak and Malicious one; because it carries a very rude and violence Reflection upon a great Majority of that Honourable House who are of Revolution Principles, and have never been known to have offer'd. and indeed are utterly incapable from their Principles of forming any evil or pernicious Designs against their Country, which they have always contributed so nobly and generously to defend. When their Lordships complain of the high Indignities offered to em by that House, they would have done well to have reflected upon the Occasion they had given 'em for their Resentments from their own; when in their Address of the 17th July, they afferted that her Majesty D.d 3

had extended her Royal Favour, to the College of Dublin; at fuch ? Juncture as must testify to the World, that what she bestow'd was not given to promote the Principles upon which it was first apply'd for; when they could not be ignorant that the Commons in their Resolution of the first of June 1709, had maintain'd that it was granted upon their Application folely for their commendable Behaviour in the lan Case of Forbus, and their steady Adherence to the late Happy Revolulution. In Parliamentary Affairs upon Occasion of Mistake or Matter of Offence, to prevent Misunderstandings between the two great Branches of the Legislature, 'tis as usual for the Lords to defire Conferences with the Commons, as for the Commons with the Lords, and generally is fought for by the House in which the Mistake or Offence first took Birth, which in the case before us evidently did in the House of Lords as the Aggressors; and therefore it seems to be with se little Reason as Equity that the Lords complain of Indignities offered 'em by that House, without any Conferences demanded or any Opportunity given 'em to explain themselves, if they had been miltaken; when the Commons found themselves first so injuriously attack'd and insulted in the aforemention'd Address of the Lords of the 17th of July, which in Effect and in the Language of the Vulgar, was flatly giving 'em the Lye; and we never heard any but High Church Men blame their Resentments in the vigorous Resolutions they came to in their Defence and Justification. There is no Condition of Men exempt from the Obligations of Justice and Good Manners, but such as consult the Motives and Interests of Ambition and Supercilious Haughtiness before their Reason; and if the Temporal Lords by their Birthright and Nobility (without inquiring how many of 'em came by it ) or the Spiritual Lords who we know how they came by theirs, are of a Distinction above the Commons; the Commons are not debar'd their Pretentions to as much good Sense and true Honour, Titles excepted, as the best and Learnedest of em; and it ought besides to be considered, that they represent the whole Body of the Nation, which is thought by Wife Men to be of something more Weight, than Feathers in some Mens Caps without Virtue, or Lawn upon other Mens Sleeves, without Merit; yet the former instead of being sensible of their Injustice seem both to desend and aggravate it, and plainly tell the World the Reason, why they fo long forbore to express their Resentments for such high Indignities, was left the Publick Business should be obstructed, and by that means the pernicious Defigns of Evil Minded Men render'd effectual; this feems to be a new way unknown to former Parliaments of redressing the Injustice of one Indignity by the Addition of another; a notable Specimen of the modern High Church Policy and Morality in the Infancy of its Power; when it is Establish'd and grown Stronger, we may reasonably believe as a badge of our Slavery, that a House of Commons shall be oblig'd to ask Pardon for the Affronts and Injuries the House of Lords at their Pleasure may think fit to insult 'em with; yet their Lordships may be pleas'd to reflect, that as they have not ingrossed all the Sense of the Nation, that there were many Wife Men at that time of Opinion, that there was another politick Reason of much more force than that already alledg'd, which prevail'd with

'em to defer the expressing their Resentments from the 17th of July to the 9th of November following, which I think was the last or last day but one of that Session; for if their Lordships had expressed 'em sooner, or the Commons been permitted to have sat but a very little longer, they would have given their Lordships, and that they very well knew, a further Taste of the Resentments of a Body of Men equally jealous of the Honour of their House, and of that of their

Country. In their next Paragraph they are pleas'd with a wonderful shew of Moderation to inquire, how far the Commons have made good their professions to her Majesty of their Unanimity, and how far they have pursu'd that Temper recommended to 'em by her Majesty, which in their great Wisdoms they will not undertake to determine; yet furely without all this Affectation of I know not what Supercilious Modesty, they very well; knew what and who were the Occasions of all the Difagreements amongst 'em, for if that harmonious Unanimity, so eminently the result of their Principles, had not been Interrupted and Disturb'd by an Infernal Spirit of Men of contrary Opinions. eternally productive of discord; if that honest and peaceable Temper recommended by her Majesty had not been discomposed and russed by the infidious Arts of their High-Church Tools and Emisfaries who had poison'd and debauch'd considerable Numbers of 'em, there never would have been an Hours Dispute, or an Hours Obstruction to any Business before 'em in Relation to her Majesty's Honour or Satisfaction, or the Service of the true Interest of the Publick; but when there happens to be unluckily in a House of Commons, or in a Nation a diffinction of Parties, it is impossible but that Jarrings must infue, and when there are different ends and designs it is as impossible to avoid Heats and Disagreement of Counsels and Sentiments; the Question is who is in the right, and most perfectly pursue the true Interest of their Country, and I think it has been infliciently made out in the preceding Discourse, which of, the two Sorts of Men, tend most directly to that noble End; For it was to their either ignorant or Mercenary Incendiaries were folely owing all the Opposition and Disturbances the honest Whig party have always met with, in their House in the Discharge of the great and honourable Trust, repos'd in 'emby the Nation; there has ever been a Spirit of Unanimity, Temper, Moderation and Fidelity, in the whole Conduct and Behaviour of all the other Members of that Honourable House, who Without any private Designs or other Interest than that of the Publick, were folely influenc'd and animated by the true and found Principles of the Revolution, as they are ever understood by all honest tenfible Englishmen; nor is it rational to imagine that Men, who from the Beginning, and ever fince, have inviolably adher'd to the Defence of it, should ever be supposed to give themselves flatly the Lye, by acting barefac'dly in Opposition to their Sentiments, fince there was not a Man amongst 'em, who was not sensible that he ow'd his Religion, his Life and his Estate to that alone. Practice as it belongs wholly to, we freely leave to the Partifans of High-Church, who can play fast and loo se with their Religion and Virtue, and for their Interest be one thing to day, and another to morrow; who as they faintly engag'd in at first, have fince as treacherously deserted and reproach it with infamous Characters of Sedition and Rebellion into the bargain; and have demonstrated that they never look'd upon it otherwise than a State Engine, by which they hop'd to have rais'd and establish'd their private Fortunes; and if those generous Commons have taken so just an Occasion to show their Resentments both for the Disturbance of their Concord and Unanimity by 'em in their House, and the Injustice of the Lords Address pursuant to 'em; they have been provok'd to it by the Treachery of their Countrymen, who are manifestly more in the Interest of the Pretender, than the Establish'd Succession; and rather vile Sicophant Flatterers of a prevailing Faction than Patriots and true Lovers of their Country. It is a violent and invidious Reflecti. on those Lords of mighty Moderation and Temper, are pleas'd to make upon that Loyal House by their Comparison of an infamous Rabble, that formerly in a difastrous occasion, which can bear no proportion or manner of Relation to the Case before us, Voted a House of Lords Useles; there is not a Man of the honest Party in the House, that has not all the Respect and Veneration that is due to so noble a part of our Legislature as the House of Lords is, and who is not equally Senfible of the Excellence and Necessity of it in a well regulated Constitution like ours; and their Lordships in their great Candour and Concern for the Nation might have done well to have diffinguished a little and reflected, that the Kingdoms at that time of that Vote, were in the Frenzies of a violent Feaver, and by a certain unaccountable Fatality, the Power of it usurp'd by the wrests of a Miserable Canaille, that ever will be the disgrace and ever will be the reproach of it, whilst it has a Name; and who visibly design'd to have debauch'd our noble ancient Model of Government, into the vilest of all, a Popular or Democratical one; neither would it have been amiss when-their Hands were in; if their Lordships had thrown into their Reflections, that all the Misfortunes and the miserable Iffue of that Reign, were principally owing to the Advice and Principles of Men of the same Order and Distinction with themselves, they know very well (I believe ) who I mean, their Saints Laud and Strafford, cum multis aliis. But as the Nation at the Time of this unhappy Contest were found and in their very good Senses, (tho' we are not ignorant what Pains have been taken to debauch 'em from on fince) and in the Revolution, and from that time have constantly afted folely upon the Principles of Reason and Equity; it was an outragious Violation of the Honour and Loyalty of its Representatives to compare their Proceedings or Language to those of the most execrable of all Rebels; since they have given the most convincing Demonstrations, that there is not a Man amongst 'em who is not ready, and willing to fpend his Life and Fortune in the Defence and Maintenance of their Religion and Establish'd Government; tho' their Lordships are pleas'd in the latter End of their Address, to honour 'em with the Title of Republicans, and rank em with her Majesty's Papist and Jacobite Enemies at Home; for f

it is evident from the occasion of the dispute between 'em which is concerning the Principles of the Revolution, which the Commons infift upon and defend, that a Reflection so harsh and unbecoming their Lordships great Wisdom, Learning and Evangelical Temper, cannot rationally be understood to point any where else but at them, as Men carrying on the fame Republican Defigns upon the fame Republican Principles with the former; for it naturally follows that fince they ascribe the same Principles to that honourable House of Commons, the same Defigns will insue, as Effects from their proper Causes; it being according to their Lordships own Opinion, the known Nature of Principles to be as well the Rule and Guide of future as of past Actions; which Rule if it be true, I am afraid their Lordships have unawares brought themselves into a very unlucky Circumstance, for if the Whigs are by their Principles of necessity Enemies to the Pretender, than which nothing can be more certain; then it may pretty reasonably be said to follow, that High-Church whether Lords or Gentlemen, whose Principles are diametrically contrary, are by the same necessity of theirs for the Pretender, which is as certain, for their Lordships very well know, that contrariorum eadem est Ratio; and therefore as the honest Whig Commons of that House for the same reason must be eternally Enemies to the Pretender; their Lordships of that notable distinction must for the very same Reason, be eternally Friends to the Pretender; for Men are not to be judg'd by the Expressions of their Mouths which may convey very false Ideas of 'em, but from their Actions and Principles, which are most certain Indications of the Intentions of their Hearts, for their Lordships have told us that it is the known Nature of Principles to be the Rule and Guide of future as of past Actions; I leave the Reader to make what Application he pleases, and shall take leave to repeat to their Lordships; that as our Princes themselves who deviate from the End of their Institution, which is eternally the good of the People, are accountable to the Laws and may be depos'd for their Male-Administration, as we have a very fresh Instance in which some of their Lordships had a Hand; so 'tis possible a House of Lords which is something of an inferior Rank may be so far corrupted, as by what our Lawyers call, Frustratione Finis, to forfeit the Honours and Privileges of their Birthright; and in such a case (which God grant it may never happen) it may neither be a Crime to think 'em useless or a Crime to Vote 'em so.

Tis to as little Purpose, that their Lordships with much Solemnity assure her Majesty, that they are heartily thankful to Almighty God for the late happy Revolution, and acknowledge the Necessity and Justice of it, when in the same Breath they brand such as defend the Principles of that Revolution, with the odious Characters of Men of factious and seditious Tempers, as they plainly do in their third Paragraph. Now this merry spiritual Knack of thanking God for a Revolution, and disapproving the Principles upon which it was affected, is something so far out of the Comprehension of my weak Capacity, and every Body's else that I have convers'd with, that their Lordships would certainly have done themselves justice, and oblig'd all the World besides, if they had been pleas'd to have explain'd themselves a little upon so nice and metaphysical a Circumitance: For the Pamphlets, and Libels, as they are pleas'd to call em, fo publickly avow'd and celebrated by 'em, are no more than fo many Effays of honest and ingenious Gentlemen, who have afferted the original Power of a Free People, to exert themselves in the De. sence and Preservation of their natural Rights and Liberties, against the Incroachments of Tyranny and Usurpation in Cases at the last Necessity, by the Means that God and Nature have left in their Hands; which we very well know the Adversary is ever pleased to interpret a fort of Blasphemy against their divine Commission and hereditary Right; and particularly that Sermon preach'd the 30th of January, and dedicated to this very House of Commons, without Cenfure or Animadversion. Now if there had appear'd any thing in that Sermon worthy of Cenfure or Animadversion, there is not the least Doubt to be made, but that honourable House would not have faild to have flown their Resentment of it, without the Advice and Admonition of their Lordships. There are great Numbers of 'em, of Virtue, Capacity and Discernment, who have not the least Reason in the World to envy their Lordships upon any of those Points; and many of 'em of Estates and Fortunes, who surpass 'em: Nor is it at all probable that such a Body of Men would other profitute the Merit of their Judgment, or expose to Hazard their Estates and Fortunes, as they must in a great Measure have done by their Silence, in regard of any Man who should have dar'd to preach and dedicate Doctrines to 'em, that in any wife tended to the Prejudice of the establish'd Government: For whatsoever Doctrine in its natural Tendency, promotes the general Diffolution of a Government, must necoffarily in some Degree affect every Particular lar that composes it; and in such a Remisses as the Lords as em with, the Character of wise, of prudent, and of sensible Men, would have dwindled into that of Fool, or fomething worfe, in fuch as should have approv'd and incourag'd 'em. Nor is it more frange, to see a House of Commons of Revolution Principles themselves, not to find fault with a Gentleman who preaches a Sermon only to defend the Principles of that Revolution, than it would be to fee a High-Church House of Commons pass by, without Censure or Animadversion, another who should preach a Sermon and dedicate it to 'em, wherein he boldly maintain'd the noble and beneficient Doctrines of Divine Commission, Arbitrary Power, Passive Obedience and Hereditary Right; which every Englishman, who is not an Ideor, or Betrayer of his Country, very well knows are all of 'em diametrically opposite to, and utterly destructive of that Revolution by which we enjoy our All, and their Spiritual Lordships their Honours and Temporalities. Whatever Faults such Men may find in that Discourse, I shall pretend to do that injur'd Gentleman the Justice to maintain, that it is absolutely free from the Reproach they would make him guilty of, in any Measure maintaining and justifying the execrable Murder of King Charles, or of incouraging any Rebellion against her present Majesty, or any of her Successions:

And I think he must look with a very High-Church Pair of Speciacles, of a new Model, who can discover any thing in it that has the least Tendency to the one or the other: And I cannot here forbear to fay, that the Doctrines of Arbitrary Power and Passive Obedience, which their Lordships have so strenuously avow'd and celebrated, (I speak only of those who have done, and still do so, for I know there are some few of both Orders that have nobly rejected and despised 'em,) tend more directly to establish Tyrants and Tyranny amongst a free People, than any thing he has said tends to excite Rebellions against our legal Kings acting according to the Prescripts of our Laws; and leave it to my Countrymen to judge which of their two Opinions are most for the Honour and Integrity of our common Happiness. I have read and consider'd that Sermon with a great deal of Attention; and as to the former part of the Charge, I do not know how the most zealous Admirer of that unhappy Prince could have express'd his Sense in Terms more strong and pathetick, both of the execrable Murder, the Manner, and the infamous Contrivers of it, than he has done; and as to the other part, of encouraging and promoting Rebellions against her Majesty or Successors, their Lordships have been, and must be told again, and none of 'em yet have been able to prove the contrary: That in case of the Male-administration of the Prince, when it evidently tends to the Subversion of the Establish'd Religion and Fundamental Laws of the Land, the general Riting or Revolt of a Nation in the Defence of that Religion, their Lives, Estates, Laws and Liberties, against the Violences of such a tyrannical Prince, can in no Sense of the Word be term'd a Rebellion, which is all he contends for, and for which he has fomething a better Authority than theirs, I mean the Consent and Practice of the whole Nation, (Papists, Jacobites, High-Flyers and Nonjurors excepted) in the famous Instance of the late happy Revolution, which he strenuously defends, and no more. They who will be at the pains seriously to examine that Discourse without Passion or Prejudice, will see a bold and honest English Spirit of Liberty, and a hearty Love for his Country thro' the whole of it; he will see Tyranny and Arbitrary Power detested and expos'd; he will find an Absolute, Slavish Obedience, prov'd to be inconsistent with the Nature of all Civil Government in general, and in a more particular Manner with our own, and without any Foundation from Scripture Reason or the Practice of Mankind; he will see the Revolution, and the Principles upon which it is turn'd, resolutely detended; the great and glorious Author of it, under God, gratefully celebrated, and the renown'd Duke of Marlborough in a just and generous Character, and the Right of a Free People to defend themselves, vigorously afferted after a Masculine Manner, which shows him to be a Man, (and I believe it is the Opinion even of his Enemies), who neither wants Sense to understand his Principles, nor Courage to defend and maintain 'em. But it is an audacious and unpardonable Sin, with a Faction, in a Man who shall dare to speak too bold, and if they can be so, unreasonable Truths: Nor needs there any more to convince the fober part of the World of the Reafons of their Animolity and Severity towards him, to long after the Delivery of that Sermon, than because they differ from him in Opinion and Principles; yet there has been two Editions of that terrible Sermon, with all its Faults, publish'd here, and went off as fast as it could be printed, with a general Approbation; and it has been done into French at Amsterdam, with a Preface, to show the Severity and Injustice had been done the Author in that Kingdom: Yet has he besides, the Example and Company of many greater Men. both before and fince, this Confolation under his Misfortune, if he effeems it any; that if his Sermon was committed to the Flames by the Hands of the common Hang-man, for preaching down the flavilh Doctrine of unlimited Passive Obedience, by Order of a House of Lords, wherein a Majority is made up of Irish Bishops; a Sermon of an infamous Incendiary that preach'd it up, was condemn'd to the same Fate with much greater Justice, by Order of another House of Lords, of something greater Weight and Estimation, who have ever been known to act upon Principles of Reason, Justice, Honour and Conscience, and in whose Respect I hope I shall never have Occafion to change my Opinion.

Tho' their Lordships are pleas'd to affert in their next Paragraph, That in their Apprehension, the Commons have not vindicated themselves or their Vote, by saying, that the sound Revolution Principles, mention'd in their Address, neither had, nor can have, in the true Construction of the Words, any other Meaning than what related to the late happy Revolution; yet as good Sense, Apprehension, and Capacity of Judging, are not always confin'd to pompous Titles alone, there are great Numbers of wife and honest Men without 'em, who are of the Opinion, that the Commons have not only express'd their Sentiments in such clear and distinct Expressions, as leave not the least room to question their Meaning, (but with such as were willing to mistake 'em), that without making 'em speak direst Contradictions to their constant Practice and Opinions, it is impossible they can be conceived to mean any thing else: The Misfortune in this Case, is the different Opinion of the Lords from the Commons, concerning these Principles of Revolution; for when the Commons mention'd in their Address, the steady Adherence of the Provost and Fellows of the College, to the Revolution, as the Rea-Ion and Foundation of their applying to her Majesty for 5000 l. and the subsequent Motive of that Application, viz. For the Encouragement of good Literature and found Revolution Principles; whatever their Lordships Meaning of Reserve, not to mention Equivocation, may be; the honest Meaning of the Commons is as plain, as that two High-Churchmen and three High-Churchmen make five Betrayers of their Country, whether Lords or Commons; and with great Submission to their Lordships eminent Learning and rare Sagacity of Apprehension, that they cannot in good Reason or Grammar, and I will take leave to add Honesty, be possibly refer'd to any thing else in Nature, besides the late Revolution; and if their right reverend Lordships, or the Provost and Fellows, meant any thing elfe, whilst this too indulgent Application was making; they would would have oblig'd the World, and particularly her Majesty, for whom they pretend to have so profound a Veneration, to have specify'd what fort of Principles, or what that was besides, to which that Address of the Commons can rationally be supposed to relate: From which notable Discovery, two things would have infallibly follow'd; the Knowledge of the Difference of their Lordships Principles, from those found ones of the Revolution in the Commons Sense; and the Loss of the 5000 l. to the very Reverend the Provost and the Fellows; and the Reason which the Lords assign for their Opinion in the following Words -Since Adherence to the late. Revolution, was a distinct Motive of it self, is something perplex'd, and leaves us strangely in the Dark of their Meaning — A distinct Motive of it felf! Motive to what, if it were not to the Revolution? And if it were, it is suppos'd to be to the found Principles of that Revolution, as the Commons certainly intend it; otherwise let 'em explain, if they please, what their Adherence, mention'd in the Address, is a Motive to; for as their Lordships have left it exposed to the wide World, there is something in this Period and Reason of theirs, which favours strongly of what we, in our Language, distinguish by a Name I am very unwilling to mention, coming from so very learned, judicious and enlightened a Body, tho' we are fure it is something not a little unintelligible. 'Tis most certain, that when Men of Parts and Learning perfectly understand the Subject they are treating of, especially if it relates to matter of Fact and Practice, (for those of pure Speculation, as they mostly consist in Vision, are out of the Question), they can never want clear and distinct Words to express their Ideas; but when Men either understand not the Fund of their Subject, or have undertaken to defend an Error, it is observable, that they are always puzzled themselves, and puzzle others whilst they pretend to explain their Meaning; and the utmost Effort of a wrack'd and constrain'd Imagination, is, by forc'd Glosses and abstruce and dubious Constructions, to arrive at a feint Resemblance, and at most but a bare and plausible Appearance of Truth and Reasoning.

The Commons, whom most other People were apt to think were in their Senses at that time, and in the opinion of great numbers of understanding Persons, in very good ones too, have as plain as Men cou'd speak, affirm'd, that their Reason for applying to Her Majesty for 5000 l. for the College, was for the remarkable Behaviour of the Provost, and Fellows of it, in relation to Forbus, who had impudently traduc'd and vilify'd the glorious Memory of King William, and for their steady Adherence to the Revolution; by which no other thing can be rationally imply'd, than that the Provost and Fellows approv'd of, and acquiese'd in the Principles of that Revolution which had re-instated 'em in their Possessions, and left 'em in full and peaceable Enjoyment of their ancient Honours, Emoluments, and Privileges, and were willing to have the World believe, at least, that they had Gratitude enough to defend the Memory of their Great Deliverer in the ememplary Punishment of an ingrateful and infamous Scoundrel; the feblequent Motive the Commons assign for this Application, being for the Encouragement of good Literature, and found Revolution Principles for the future; of the nature of which we have more largely spoken in the former part of this Discourse, and shall only repeat here, that the chiefest of em is; that in case of a Tyrannical Prince, who shall endeavour to subvert the Fundamental Laws, Religion and Liberties of an Effa. blish'd Government, it is not only lawful, but necessary for a free People so oppress'd, to rife up with their Arms in their Hands, to defend and preserve 'em from the Violences of so Wicked and Unjust an Oppression. This Right and Power of the People, their Lord. thips very well know, or I'm fure ought to know is no new thing; and to rife no higher than the Charter of King John, one of their Lordship's High-church Lord's Anointed, by which it is expresly provided, That in case the King should infringe, or contravene, the Scipulations mention'd, and agreed on betwixt him and the People, that then it should be lawful for the People to take up Arms to compel him, which was after recogniz'd, and acknowledg'd by the great Charter to have been inherent in 'em from Time immemorial, has been fince confirm'd by Forty Acts of Parliament: and in amore particular and eminent manner, Establish'd as a Fundamental law by the Declaration of Rights, and the Acts Establishing the Succession on of the Crown. Whether an Authority of this kind be of sufficient Weight with their Lordships, to acknowledge such a Rightin the People, or no, I by no means prefume to determine; but there is great reason to believe, that they, who in Opposition to the Sense of the Commons, without declaring their own, maintain, that Her Majesty did not confer Her Royal Favour to the College, to promote in general Revolution Principles, have no good Opinion, either of the Revolution it self, or the immortal Finisher of it; and the Reason which they assign for that Assertion in their Address, is very remarkable, and confirms what I have advance, because they are Principles publickly avow'd, and celebrated by Men of Factious and Sedicious Tempers, which in some measure maintain the execrable Murder of King Charles, and on which any Rebellion against Her Majesty, or any of her Successors may be founded. Nor can I forbear taking notice here of another fair Intimation they give the World of the Opinion they have of the late Revolution, when in the latter end of their Address, amongst other plausble Expressions, they assure Her Majetty, they will defend, and stand by Her against all who design Revolutions, either in Church or State Now, as every honest Englishman hopes as heartily as the warmest and fincerest of their Lordships, that the Nation by the Wickedness of another Prince, (tho' their Doctrines have laid a fair Seed in the Ground for it) shall never again be reduc'd to the unhappy Necessity of another Revolution; yet both we, and the generous Commons of that kingdom, who understand, and know how to reduce our Principles into Practice, do most solemnly, upon the Faith and Honour of honest Whigs, affure their Lordships, that if ever the same Occasion shall a gain be offer'd, we will not fail to make use of the very same individual Means to defend our Lives, Liberties, Estates, and Religion, or think we shall deserve to be esteem'd a parcel of contemptible Scoundrels and Slaves if we don't; for fince we have so lately Exerted 'em in a like Instance, and have those Principles upon which the Nation acted in their Defence, in a more solemn manner acknowledg'd, and ratify'd to us as our Right, the Juffice and Equity of which their Lordships have own'd; we shall in Complaisance to their own Rule of Principles, being the Rule and Guide of future, as well as past Actions, (upon that, and the much better Authority just mention'd) not fail, upon the like Occasions to justify our Natural and Legal Rights, at the hazard of ten thousand Lives, as we hope our Posterity after us shall do theirs; without the least fear of delerving the Character of Seditious, or Rebellious, or of incurring their High-church Lordships Displeasure, for I mean none else, or that of those who may succeed 'em of the Anti-revolution Principles and Opinions; and tho we love Revolutions as little as their Lordships, till we have seen the Nation settled upon a Foot of Safety and Security, that shall put it out of Apprehentions for ever, either of the Encroachments of Tyrannical Princes, or Infolence of Tyrannical High-church Priests to disturb; we assure their Lordships, that we will have Revolutions at furthest, one every Moon. Every body knows what a Ferment an Address so highly Injurious to the Honour of the House put 'em into, and which wou'd questionless have drawn on Resolutions of a higher Strain than their former, if they had been permitted to have fate but a few Hours longer; but the Lord Chancellor, who was the principal Engine of this great Movement, had the Address, and Credit with the Lord Lieutenant to Prorogue'em at a Point; or, I think, no body doubted, but that the Injur'd and Exasperated Commons wou'd have given him an Instance of their Power and Resentments, by an immediate Impeachment.

Upon a just Reflection upon this famous Dispute between the Lords and Commons upon this important Subject, I think the Judicious Reader will not have the least reason to donbt, but that the Commons of that Kingdom, to shew a Mark of Favour to all those who gratefully acknowledg'd the Necessity and Justice of the Revolution, and the great Finisher of it, apply'd to the Queen for a Bounty of 5000 l. for the Use mention'd; both to reward the Provost and Fellows for their commendable Behaviour to Forbus, and to encourage em to continue firm to the Principles of that Revolution, which had once more plac'd em in the Way of being both secure of what Englishmen call their Birthrights, and happy in the Possession of em for the future; the Sentiments of the Lords with their Quaint of Distinction, of heartily thanking God for the Revolution, but Disapproving and Condemning the Principles of it; we have already seen in their own formal and express Terms: I shall with the same Freedom lay before my honest Countrymen, those of the Provost and Fellows, in a very rare and eminent Address of theirs to Her Majesty, deliver'd to Her by my Lord Dartmouth, then one of the Principal Secretaries of State, the 20th of December, 1712. which for its extraordinary Style and Purport, deferves exceedingly to be had in Remembrance for the perpetual Honour and Probity of the Men, and is as follows.

To the Queen's most Excellent Majesty.

The Humble Address of the Vice Chancellor, Doctors, and Masters of the University of Dublin, in Congregation Assembled.

Your Majesty's most Gracious Condescention, in Communicating to Your People, the Terms upon which a General Peace may be made; a Peace which so well provides for a Ballance of Power to Europe, the Happiness of Your own Subjects, and the Security of Your Allies.

We admire Your Majesty's Great Wisdom, and Steadiness, and the Faithfulness of Tour Ministers, in Surmounting the many Difficulties attending this Important Affair; and we cannot, without just Resembent, observe by what Malicious Artifices, and Fallacious Endeavours, some, who are to share in the Blessings, have labour'd to obstruct it.

Such Designing, and Disaffected Men, seem either to envy Your Majesty the Glory of Accomplishing so Great a Work, or to prefer a Foreign Interest to that of Your own Kingdoms; or out of a Conscienciousness of Guilt, desire a Continuation of the War, least they should be called to an Account in Time of Peace.

We are so deeply sensible of the many Blessings of Your Majesty's Auspicious Reign, and Your Sacred Life is so dear to us, that we are unwilling to put Your Majesty in mind of the Succession, which to our great Satisfaction is so well assured by Your Majesty's Care, to all who are in Earnest for the House of Hanover, that there is no need of other Guarantees to support it.

The Dignity which Your Majesty has been pleas'd to Confer on his Grace the Duke of Ormond, our Chancellor, by the Command of Your Armies, is an Instance of Your Wisdom, in discerning true Merit, and of Your Goodness, in Rewarding Disinterested Loyalty, and we beg lean to esteem it an Honour done to our University.

We gratefully acknowledge Your Majesty's Bounty for Building a new Library in the College of Dublin, and shall endeavour in our several Capacities to answer the End of your Royal Grant, by Educating the Youth, and Instructing the People committed to our Care, in Principles of inviolable Fidelity to the Crown, by discouraging Revolution Principles, which have been of late industriously Propagated, being inconstant with true Religion and Loyalty, and tending to shake the very Foundations of our Constitutions, both in Church in State.

We shall offer up our Daily Prayers to God to prolong Your Sacred Life, till You have compleated all the Good Intentions of Your Royal Mind, and at length to Crown You with Glory and Immortality.

I leave every Reader to make what Reflections he pleases upon every fingle Paragraph of this Right Loyal, and Noble Address. which will furnish abundant Matter of Speculation to every Thinking Englishman, and shall only defire him to throw away a few Minutes, a little more particularly upon the Villainous Duplicity, and Prevarication of the Men, in relation to Revolution Principles; who, while they were in expectation of the Queen's Bounty for the 5000 l. were defirous to be esteem'd the strenuous Assertors of 'em; but had no fooner obtain'd it, and a favourable Juncture to declare their Natural and Genuine Sentiments, publickly gave those generous Commons, and their own Supple, Mercenary Consciences the Lye; by declaring to Her Majesty in this Address, that they wou'd Endeavour, in their several Capacities, to answer the End of Her Royal Grant, by Educating the Youth, and Instructing of the People committed to their Care, in Principles of Inviolable Fidelity, that is, in other Words, in Principles of Passive Obedience, and Arbitrary Power; by discouraging Revolution Principles, which have been of late so industriously propagated, being inconsistent with true Religion and Loyalty, and tending to shake the very Foundations of our Constitution, both in Church and State. Good God! What is all this Ribaldry but so many pitiful Reflections upon the late faithful Miniftry, and Renown'd General, but so much fulsome, hypocritical Flattery to the new? But Reproach to the last Degree of Impudence, and Gratitude to the Memory of that Glorious, and Immortal Prince that accomplish'd this Revolution, by which the Wretches enjoy what they have? What else is to be understood by their maintaining, that the Principles of that Revolution are inconfiftent with true Religion, and Loyalty, but that they intend, and believe em to be better supported by their detestable Doctrines of Passive Obedience, and Arbitrary Power? Or shall the Foundations of our ancient Constitution be shook by the Principles of a Revolution, which have re-establish'd it on the original Basis of Liberty, and limited Prerogative, and a circum(crib'd Power in our Kings, and supported by such, as by their Doctrines make our Kings Tyrants, and their Subjects Slaves? Infamous Prevarication! Scandalous Hypocrify! Wretched Ingratitude!

I have the more amply, and with the greater Freedom infifted upon this Subject, to convince my honest Countrymen, that there are no Degrees of Clergymen exempt from the Contagion of our Modern High-church Principles and Doctrines; which every one of em have been proved to be, nor only inconsistent with the Nature of our ancient Established Government, both in State and Church, but directly calculated, solely to the Ruin and Subversion of 'em both. Every body is sensible that all Men are not equally, and alike infected; but there are some sew of both Orders in that Kingdom, who have preserved their Integrity, who have bravely and resolutely declar'd and approved themselves sincere and hearty Friends, and as generously detended the Revolution, and its Principles, they have had the Missortune to be overpower'd, and compelled to yield to Numbers. Amongst the rest of the Spiritual Order, I cannot but with Honour mention his Grace, the Lord Archbishop of Dub. lin, a Person of most excellent Parts, and universal Learning, who with a noble Constancy has ever oppos'd, and endeavour'd to moderate the Violences and Fury of the Bigots, and has been, according to their laudable Custom, without regard to his Merit, his Character, or high Station in their Church, as rudely handled by 'em for his Pains. 'Tis in a great measure to his eminent Prudence and Courage, the Metropolis of that Kingdom, in Concert with their Learn. ed and Worthy Recorder, and Aldermen, owes principally the De. fence and Preservation of their ancient Liberties; and it is to the fame Virtue, Resolution, and indefatigable Application they owe the Defeatment of all the pernicious Designs of the Chancellor at the Head of the Faction, by the vigorous Opposition they ever met with from him in the House of Peers, the Court, the Council-Table, and every where else, to his own perpetual Honour and Service of the Nation. I know not whether his Grace will take, (what a Stranger, who honours Merit wherever he finds it, fays, as a Tribute due to his excellent Character, both as a noble Patriot, in the Defence of the true Interests of his Country, and a learn'd and venerable Prelate, a strenuous Defender of those of the National Church) in good part, especially at a time when it is dangerous to have too much Merit of that fort, which exposes him so much to the Ribaldry of a licentious Faction, void of Manners, and Sentiments of Generofity; but as he has always shown a great and commendable Difinterestedness in his whole Conduct and Behaviour; the Juflice of his Cause, his Courage, and uncommon Steadiness in the Pursuit of it, secure the Repose of his Conscience, and the high Station he is in the Church, places him above the reach of the Malice and Resentments of his and his Countrys paltry Enemies. This was the unhappy Situation of Affairs in that poor Kingdom, fermented by the indefatigable Application of the High church Clergy there; these the fatal Effects of the pernicious Doctrines they have so industriously propagated thro' the whole extent of these Nations, where the prevailing Spirit of Discord stalks Triumphant.

It would not have been much surprizing, if such Doctrines, all Irrational, and Absurd as they are, and so destructive of the publick Good and Tranquillity, both of the State and Church, had been broach'd and publish'd in Times of Darkness and Ignorance, when what little Learning there was in the World was ingross'd by the Clergy, and that confin'd within the narrow compass of Cloysters and Monasteries, whence it was sent abroad into the World to impose on an ignorant and superstitious Laity, in what Proportion, and in what Dress and Manner they thought most fit for their Purpose; and even in those Times the best of their Learning, if it deserve that name, was no more than a crude and indigested Sophistry; a pompous Medley of Speculations divis'd by crafty knavish Monks and Fryars to carry on the Work of Delusion, and aggrandize the Power and Authority of the Popes, and Church of Rome; a new Jargon of Questions of Religion, intricate, abstruce, unintelligible, of no use or benefit to Mankind, erected upon the Foundation of the Meta-

Metaphysicks of Aristotle, and the ancient Ethnick Philosophy, which they celebrated under the magnificent Title of School divinity; and which I will maintain has produc'd greater Mischiefs to all civil Governments where it has obtain'd, land more irreparable Dammages to true Religion, than all the Herefies sprung up in the Church for the first six hundred Years. But that the Visions of these wretched Impostors shou'd find Credit, and succeed in an Age inlighten'd and refin'd as ours; wherein particularly in our own Country, all useful, necessary, and curious Arts and Sciences, are in a much higher Degree and Perfection than ever was known in former Ages; where Men are illumin'd by the glorious Light of Divine Revelations, and left to the free Use and Exercise of their Reason, and where, I will justify, that amongst the Nobility, Gentry, and all Degrees of People, there are fifty to one who are more eminently knowing in all manner of valuable, and commendable Learning, than amongst the Clergy; I am as far as any Man in England from derogating from the Merit and Honour that is juftly due to the deserving of that Character and Profession: I very well know that there are good numbers amongst 'em of Men excellent for their Parts, Piety, Knowledge and Learning, but I am forry that there are not more; and I will defend what I have advanc'd, that there is no manner of Proportion in their Numbers; the Generality of 'em being either scandalously Ignorant, or but very meanly Learn'd; and what is worse, corrupt enough to misapply what they have of it, in any Degree of Eminence, to the base and servile Purposes of Selfinterest and Ambition. I say, that in such an Age, so qualify'd and embellish'd, Doctrines so lewdly absurd, and so certainly destructive of Religion, civil Policy, and of whatfoever elfe has been reputed Great, Noble, Virtuous, or any way commendable amongst Men, shou'd be swallow'd down, and so easily digested, is what will questionless exceed the Belief and Wonder of all succeeding Generations, as much as as it has puzzl'd all the fober, rational part of Mankind of the prefent, and can be look'd upon no other than as an Infatuation from above, as a just Judgment in the Punishment of our Sins, and more particularly that of our Ingratitude.

Ignorance is ever reproachful in a Gentleman of any Profession, but more eminently so in those of the Clergy, who are supposed to qualify themselves with a Stock of Learning and Knowledge necessary for the great and important Duties of their Function, and whose Business it is to instruct others; yet the Abuse is infinitely worse than the Want of 'em in either, but more especially in the latter, upon whom the Welfare of so many Souls in a great measure depends: For in the first it may be an Effect either of Negligence, Inapplication, or a libertine Education, which is but too frequently their Missortune; but in the other it is either Stupidity or Corruption. The former renders 'em altogether unsit for so laborious and venerable a Character and Profession, and the latter unworthy the Honour of it; since they can prevail with themselves, with an opprobrious Hypocrify, to abuse and stifle the Lights of natural Reason, which they may have improv'd by Study and a good degree of Literature, to the low and wicked Ends either of their own or the Interests of a Faction. We have but a too melancholy Instance before our Eyes. how much more and greater Mischiefs may arise to a Nation, from either an ignorant, or a corrupt and mercenary Clergy, who have the Power of doing Evil, when they want the Will of doing Good, which to our Sorrow as well as Prejudice we find the much greater Number; than the Advantages that redound to it from the Lax bours and Virtue of the truly pious and learn'd, who are ever the leffer: And the Reason of it is plain, because the Generality of the People are more easily prevail'd with to content themselves with what is appearing and plausible, which gives 'em but little or no Trouble, having feldom the Capacity, and but rarely the Inclination to busy themselves in the Researches of Truth and the Reason of Things, which are ever attended with Labour and great Difficulties; and therefore they are apt greedily to swallow every thing as Oracle that is deliver'd to 'em by the Priest, of whom they may have entertain'd a much more advantagious Opinion than he may commonly deserve, though it may be attended with the groffest Absurdity, Falsehood or Contradiction in it self; for the Opinion they have conceived is with them in the place of Perswasion. Ask any of 'em who has any Modesty or Ingenuity left, what other tolerable Reason can be affign'd, why fuch great Numbers of honest well-meaning Englishmen, who are born free, and know they are so, can be prevail'd upon so easily to embrace and digest, for Instance, the Doctrines of Absolute and Arbitrary Power in the Prince, and an unconditional Passive Obedience in the Subject, in a Monarchy mix'd and limited as ours; which have been demonstrated to have no Foundation upon Reason, Nature, or the Word of God, and which only and unavoidably tend to deprive them of their precious native Liberties, and involve both themselves and their Posterity in the Miseries of a perpetual Slavery. Hence it is, that what I have advanc'd of the Power and Influence of the Clergy over the Common People, who are the Numbers and Strength of a Nation, manifestly appears; fince wanting Judgment and Penetration of their own to distinguish and determine of the Nature of Things, they feem necessitated to rely npon the Opinion they have conceiv'd of the Capacity and Integrity of their Priests, and to pay an implicite Belief and Obedience to whatever they shall think fit to command 'em to believe and obey: So that in such Cases 'tis neither Strength of Reasoning, nor Conviction of the Truth, that prevail with fo great Numbers to affent and act as they do, but a blind Notion and Opinion they have of the Sufficience and Probity of their Pastors, whom they are unwilling, thro' Ignorance or Prejudice of Education, to believe wicked enough to abuse and deceive 'em. I will not pretend here to enquire, much less to determine, what Esteem or Measure of Reputation such Impostors and Deceivers of the poor ignorant and credulous People, can reasonably expect to meet with in this World, or what Punishment in the next, for a studied Wickedness so very foreign foreign and unbecoming their Office and Character, but leave it to the Reflection of their own Conscience and the Decision of the just Judge in the last great Day, when the Secrets of all Hearts shall be known, and Men thall receive the proper Rewards or Punishments of good or evil Actions; but this I shall with Condence advance, that when a Nation is fo far infatuated, as to give into all the fran tick Dreams of implicite Belief of what any Clergy foever shall dictate or command em, without making the natural Use of their Reason, or the more infallible Lights and Authority of the holy Scriptures; either the final Ruin of that Nation, or some notable Revolution in it, is not far off; and as such a miserable Abandonment and Blindness are the infallible Symptoms and Forerunners, either of approaching Diffolution or of extraor dinary Changes, which are ever accompanied with proportionable Dangers, so are they of the most terrible Servitude and Slavery that Men can groan under on this fide the Grave; inasmuch as the Tyranny over Men's Reason and Consciences is much more insupportable, than any that can be exercis'd over their Estates and Persons; this being at worst only a thort and temporary Misfortune, but the other may follow 'em into the other World, and affect 'em to all Eternity.

To justify and prove the Truth of this Affert lon, how rigid soever it may be effeem'd, let any Man who pleases, without Prejudice or Passion resect only on the Measures and Couduct of these reverend Deceivers, in the Instance (amongst ten thousand others too redious to be here particularly infifted on) of the Danger of the Church; and then make the most favourable Conclusion with Reason and Juslice, as Well of the Candour and Sincerity of the Intentions of these Men, as of the Utility and Seasonableness of their Doctrines. Let him but candidly compare the shameless Noise and Uproar they made from the Beginnings of her Majesty's Reign, with their profound and more scandalous Silence upon that important Article at this Day, and he will without the least Difficulty discover the Reafon and Defign both of the one and the other. I have already obferv'd, that in regard of these Men's Sentiments and Opinions upon this Head, there is a great and real Distinction to be made between their notional High-Church, founded only upon the Fumes of their perverted Brains, and the true national Church as establish'd by our The one is a chaft and amiable Virgin that maintains and glories in her Primitive Purity, and Excellence in the Profession of the genuine divine Doctrines of Jesus Christ and his holy Apostles: the other a lewd and profligate Harlot, who places her Glory in the abominable Superstitions and Impurities of her prostitute Mother, the Church of Rome. The former, which is that for which all honest Englishmen ought solely to be concern'd, was never in the least Appearance of real Danger during the Reign of our late glorious Deliverer, King William, his Ministry, his Council, his Parliaments of Revolution Principles, all born and educated in the Bosom and Profession of it; but was fenc'd in and secur'd during their whole Administration, with all her legitimate Honours, Dig-Ee 3 nitics

nities and Immunities, upon the Foot of its Constitution at the hap. py Reformation, by Laws as binding and defign'd perpetual as human Wisdom could devise. It has been made evident to a Demonstration, that she never had just Reason to be apprehensive of any real Dangers from the Defigns of Diffenters, and particularly the Presbyterians, who, as they are restrain'd within the Compass of a legal Toleration in respect of their own Manner of Worship, are by other Laws depriv'd of all Capacity to do any Prejudice to the Establish'd Church, if by an ingrateful Abuse of the Indulgence has been, shown 'em, they were imprudent or wicked enough to attempt it; that during the first ten Years of her Majesty's Reign, and the Administration of a faithful and incorruptible Ministry, (who by their Virtue and Affection supported and raised the Honour of it to a Pitch that by far surpass'd the most famous of her Predecessors, and shall rarely be equall'd, not to say, exceeded by any who shall have the Honour to succeed her) the Church has all along enjoy'd the fame uninterrupted Tranquillity; that it was absolutely impossible that any real Dangers should accrue to her from Princes of fuch distinguish'd Piety, Wisdom, and Justice, whose principal Interest it eternally was, to preserve her in Peace and Exemption from Peril, are Truths fo evident, and fo much every honest senfible Englishman's Belief as not to stand in need of any further Proof; yet through the whole Course of these two glorious and auspicious Reigns, from the Beginning of the Revolution till the fatal Year of 1710, there has nothing been thunder'd from the Pulpits of these High-Church Zealots, and the malicious and scandalous Pamphleteers of the Faction, (who together carry on a private Interest and Design, distinct from that of the publick,) but, The Temple of the Lord! The Temple of the Lord! The Danger of the Church! Our glorious King the Love and Admiration of all the honest virtuous part of Mankind, because born and bred up in the Reformation of Calvin, (though a more constant and religious Frequenter of our Church, than the warmest of his Pharifaical Enemies,) eternally reproach'd as no real and fincere Friend to her; the Presbyterians in the same exalted Strain of Christian Charity, her mortal Enemies; the whole noble Set of the late Ministry, Traitors and Underminers of her very Foundations; and even our excellent Queen, so renown'd for her Piety and Devotion (whilst making Use of the Advice and Counsels of that able and faithful Ministry) in the same laudable Design of conspiring the Ruin of the Church; yet fince that disastrous Period just mention'd, that incomparable Princess has suffer'd her self to be surprized by the crafty Infinuations and Cajoleries of a Faction, that have visibly no other Regard for any Interest but their own; that she is in the Hands and Possession of the Leaders of it, who aim at nothing more but the Establishment of their Power and private Fortunes upon the Ruines of their Sovereign's Honour, and Liberties of their native Country; that they have trepann'd her into the Measures of a dishonourable separate Peace, which has blasted all the blooming

Glories of her former Reign; that they have violated the facred Bands of publick Faith; profficuted the Honour of the Nation; quarell'd with, expos'd, insulted, and deserted their Protestant Confederates; entred into Alliances with two faithless Popish Princes, who by Principles of Religion and those of their more powerful Interest, are our most mortal and implacable Enemies, the unavoidable Consequences of all which, are the Introduction of the Pretender with the infeparable Appendages of French Politicks, French Religion and French Slavery; and lastly, that these venerable High-Church Hypocrites and Impostors, affembled in their Convocation, have had the Impudence to avow and publickly advance Doctrines, which are demonstrably the same with those of the Church of Rome; yet at this forlorn and difastrous Time and Circumstances of Affairs, when every Step that has been, and is still made, tends directly to the Subversion of the Ancient Constitution by the Establishment of Tyranny, and every Measure of those mercenary interested Enthusiasts hastens the Extirpation of the Establish'd Protestant Religion, by the Introduction of Popery in the Person and Domination of their defecrated and abjur'd Pretender; we don't hear one Syllable of the Danger of the Church, as if there was no such Thing that had a Being amongst us, but all as hush'd and silent as in the Grave.

Good God! my honest Countrymen, as many of us as are yet in our Senses, what can these Wretches mean by so lewd and insolent a Conduct? What Opinion must they have conceiv'd of their own Parts and Abilities, who think themselves capable of finishing a Defign, which they know can never be effected, but upon the certains Ruin of our Religion and Liberties? And what despicable Sentiments must they as necessarily have entertain'd of us, who can so tamely fuffer our felves to be so scandalously abus'd and impos'd on by 'em? How long shall we continue the Sots and Drudges to contribute to the Exaltation of a Power, which we are certain shall infallibly be abus'd, to ride us into a miserable Subjection to their spiritual Tyranny in this World, and Damnation in the next? How long shall we be the contemptible Dupes and Cullies of a corrupt and mercenary Priesthood, and elevate those by our Folly or Madness, into imperious and merciless Masters, who now are redouable to the Laws, and us for the Bread they eat? Shall we fit still, like crouching worthless Slaves with our Hands in our Bosoms, till they reduce us again into that curfed Servitude, our wifer and more generous Ancestors had the Virtue and Courage, with so much Glory, to free both themselves and us from? Can we fink into so vile a State of Degeneracy, as to see the Honour of our Beds and Families polluted? Abandon our Wives and Daughters to the lewd Lufts of brawny pamper'd Priests, which we but too well know, from our own and foreign History, was eternally the shameless Practice of their impure abominable Churchmen, when they were in that exalted independent Condition, their worthy High-Church Successors are again endeavouring to establish themselves? finess we have with a commanding, insolent and domineering Clergy, tho' we are willing to shew all Respect and Favour to a ministring, pacifick and obedient one, who conform themselves to the Laws of the Government that protects 'em, and bufy themselves only in the Exercise and religious Discharge of the Duties of their holy Fun. ction: But are we grown weary of our divine Religion, that we shall quietly suffer these Impostors to change the Pace and Purity of it into an Excess of Power, that will soon give Countenance and Authority to all the Pollutions and Lewdness that human Nature can be capable of? Or are our precious Liberties become a Burthen, or fo odious to us, as tamely to permit these Traitors to attempt the bare fae'd Violation of 'em in the Introduction of their Popish Pretender, which can never be accomplished, but by an Exclusion of the most illustrious Pretestant House of Hanover for ever? That Englishman who does not see this to be the manifest and sole End and Defign, both of the High-Church Politician, and the High-Church Priest, must either be a stupid Drivler, like the many amongst us, or an infamus Traytor like them. We are not at all ignorant, that these Impostors raise the same Clamours, and already infinuate the same Dangers to the Establish d Church, from the Reign of that il-Instrious Protestant Family of the Communion of Luther, that they alarm'd the Nation with, from the Administration of the last immortal Protestant Prince of the Perswasion of Calvin, and just with the same Reason, Justice, good Manners and Charity: And shall we fuffer the audacious and ridiculous Cant of the Unalienableness and Indefeasibleness of an Hereditary Right of an abjur'd Popish Pretender, carry is over the facred Sanction of an Act of the Legistature, indisputably the sole supream, independent Power of the Nation, from which there can be no Appeal, and which has fettled the Succession upon 'em, from whom no wife or honest Englishman can form the least Apprehensions of any real Danger, either to the Establish'd Government or the Establish'd Church? What, on the other Hand, can we reasonably expect from a Person exasperated with all the pretended Rigours shown to his Family, in the Abdication of his reputed Father and Abjuration of himself, bred up in the Popish Religion, and imbu'd with the Poison of Maxims of French Policy? Are not these Men asham'd to Confusion, to dare to abuse a noble and generous Nation, jealous of their Monour, Religion and Liberties, with the execrable Jargon of a Convert Pretender, instructed in the Principles of the Protestant Religion; for this is now the absurd and ridiculous Cant both of High-Church and her Faction? Do we not yet know, that Ambition and the Defire of a Crown will readily prevail with him to make the most specious and folemn Professions, and at the same time have a Dispensation from his Father the Pope, the visible Head of their Church, to break 'em all the same Moment he gave 'em Birth ? What Security shall we have for the Performance of Articles and Promises, when we are Fools or Madmen enough to admit him to the Throne upon any Terms? High-Church, the Caution is excellent of a Church Bankrupt of Credit, Honour and Conscience, for I will not name Religion: What then? Why even the sacred and inviolable Guaranty of our new singular good Friend and Ally Louis the Fourteenth; admirable and unquestionable Security of a Prince, who has never been ty'd to the Observation of any Contracts to which he has solemnly ingag'd himself by all that is or ought to be most binding and sacred amongst Men: High-Church! Popery! Faction! Slavery! Frenzy! Treason! Englishmen! Do we want yet to be instructed what all this insupportable fanctify'd Villany means?

dit,

Our wife and honest Directors, a little while ago, were pleas'd to refuse the Guaranty of our Protestant Allies, for the Security of the Succession of our Crown in the illustrious Protestant Family of Hanover, and we are now to fit down contented with the Guaranty of a faithless Popish Prince, for the Security both of that, a Protestant Government, and the Protestant Religion: Admirable Politicks! and admirable Divinity! Yet that which encreases the Wonder, is, that a wife, judicious, free and valiant People, can tamely fuffer themselves to be abus'd and impos'd on in an Affair, where all that can be dear to Men is concern'd, by fuch wretched Politicians, and fuch miserable Divines. If a High-Church Priest should advise me to throw my self into a Goal, as the only Means to preferve my Liberty, or to turn the Somerset headlong over a Precipice, as the only Means to prevent breaking my Neck; I should certainly be mighty apt to imagine him either a Fool, a Madman, or a Knave. with some villanous Design, or that he as certainly believ'd me to be one of the former at least, and should humbly request him to be pleas'd to make the Experiments himself, to convince me of the Truth of his Prescriptions; for I cannot prevail with my self for my Life, to believe one Sylfable of it from the Strength of his Reasoning, or the Opinion of the Sincerity of his Intentions of meaning me any Good; yer this is just the same thing, as to preserve a Protestant Government and Protestant Church in Peace and Security, under the Influence and Administration of a Popish Pretender. What Opinion can we rationally conceive of the Integrity, Honour, or Confcience of such Men, (who from the highest to the lowest, enjoy the Posts they are in, by the Vertue of their Oath of Abjuration of this Pretender), who yet at the same time are labouring hard to place and establish him upon the Throne, tho' they are sure it can never be done but upon the final Subversion both of the State and Church? what Weight, Merit or Obligation, are the most sacred and solemn Oaths, (and yet they have hitherto been esteem'd the most indissolvable Bands of Human Societies), if these supple legerdemain Divines referve to themselves a Power to dissolve and invalidate 'em, whenever they find it necessary for their Purpose to do so? We are not yet convinced out of what School all this detestable Policy and Divinity are deriv'd? Do not the Heads of the Faction exactly imitate a certain new Master of theirs, the King of France; and the infamous Tools of it, our High-Church Priests, with the same Probity and Exactness, copy after their dear Brethren the Jesuits, and their dear Father the Pope? What are Religion, Honour, Conficience, in the Hands of such profligate Wretches, but meer State Engines to amuse and deceive a weak, credulous and unthinking People, with the more Facility, and something a better Grace? Whatever Silence these interested Bigots, in the Situation they have reduc'd us to, keep, in relation to their Church, there is not a wise or honest Englishman in the Kingdom, who does not foresee, not only a manifest and imminent Danger, but the utter Extirpation of the Protestant Religion, as the unavoidable Consequence of his Establishment upon the Throne of these Nations; and if these Men were not soft to all Sense of Shame or Modesty, they would not, at this time of Day, have had the Impudence to have imposed so gross and infamous a Sham upon a whole People of some Reputation in the World, for their good Sense and Wisdom, as well as for their Virtue and Valour.

We many of us still very well remember the time, when it was esteem'd no less than Treason to affirm, that a certain Duke of York was a Papist, tho' every Man in his Senses was well enough convinc'd that he was so: And in a very little time after, when, for our Sins, (thanks to our venerable High-Church Bishops for it), he was mounted on the Throne, he not only publickly avow'd himself of that Religion, but gave both the State and the Church such Instances of a tyrannical and arbitrary Power, inseparable from it, as we of the Church of England shall ever remember, tho those of the High may think it their Business or Interest not to do so. Have they so soon forgot how near to Ruin he brought the establish'd Protestant Religion, by the Effects of their curfed Absolute Power, and Absolute Passive Obedience, to which the very Nature of his own indispenfibly render'd him a merciless and irreconcileable Enemy, that they are so fond of relying upon the fraudulent Appearances, and truffing to the specious Promises of the Son, when they have prov'd him fuch, who, under the infidious Disguise of a Convert Protestant, we are as fure will make both them and us feel all the terrible Effects of Popery and Slavery in the veritable Papist? What in the Name of Wonder are we doing all this while? Where are our Senses? What is become of that Virtue and Valour that have formerly render'd us so renowned and formidable amongst the Nations? Or is it not rather Infatuation, Forerunner of what we deserve, Slavery? Something that surpasses Wonder, that a great, free and generous People, should thus long suffer themselves to be abus'd and deceiv'd into Ruin, by a miserable Faction, supported by a handful of miserable profligate Priests, and not make such Traitors feel the Justice and Weight of their Resentments in a rigorous Exemplarity of their Punishment? What a woful Scene of Wickedness, Prostitution and Treachery? A supposititious Popish Pretender, abdicated, banish'd, abjur'd by a whole Nation, by a few perjur'd Conspirators, to be introduc'd and establish'd on the Throne of Great-Britain, in Exclusion of the Protestant House of Hanover design'd to it by the Legislature! By whom? Even by the Apostate Renegado Priests of the High-Church of England? No: But of her debauch'd Phantom, the spurious Offspring of their lewd Mother the Church of Rome. For what? Why even by the Maxims and Policy of his fingular good Friend and Patron, Louis the Fourteenth, of France, of execrable Mention, to rule and govern his Protestant Kingdoms of Great-Britain and Ireland; and by the most Christian Influence of the most pure and undefiled Religion of the Church of Rome, to preserve and perpetuate the Peace, Union and Happiness of our Protestant Churches of these Nations. Jesu! is there no Thunder in Reserve, to confound the Men and the Impiety that thus audaciously prophane both thy Holy Name and Divine Religion thou diedft to propagate? What a Medley of Frenzy, Treachery, Cowardice, and consummate Wickedness, is all this? In an Englishman of any Profession, that is, a Man born and educated in the most pure and excellent of all Religions, and in the Bleffing of the most distinguish'd Liberty under the Sun, to entertain so much as a Thought of calling in a Popish Pretender, under any Disguise or Pretext whatsoever, (whose Establishment must unavoidably be follow'd with the utter Ruin and Dissolution of 'em both), is a Treason and Sin without any manner of Defence or Excuse: But in Clergymen, who are more particularly oblig'd, by their Character and Function, to oppose all Advances to Popery, and watch, to the Conservation of their own, if that be the Establish'd Religion: 'Tis such a Complication of Fool, of Villain, of Traitor, and of Madman, as our Language wants Words to express, or honest Englishmen Zeal, equal to the Wickedness, sufficiently to resent and punish.

What do we wait for? Is there a Man of Sense in England, who, by every Step has been made fince the Change of the Ministry, is not convinc'd, that the Defign of the Faction, both in the State and Church, is folely to bring in this abjur'd Pretender? Or if some few have hitherto doubted it, as not supposing Englishmen capable of fo unaccountable a Treason, do they not see the Mask at length thrown off, and the Defign publickly avow'd, in their Acknowledgment of him as Duke of Glocester? This is not a bare gilding over, but owning and justifying their Crime by a fort of publick Approbation; yet if any Man is still weak enough to doubt, or wicked enough to go into such Measures, and asks the Question to what End, or in what Views they pretend to introduce him? The Answer is short and ready: The Politicians, to establish and perpetuate their ill-got Power, Fortunes and Offices in the State; and the High-Church Priesthood, to increase and augment theirs in their Church; and what both the one and the other may deferve for the Reward of fo infamous a Treachery, every Englishman will have Leifure to confider, and I hope will do so before it is too late; that is, before he fees him at the Head of a French Army, to demand the Possession of a Throne, to which such Traitors have so fairly pav'd the way. Content the former with the Establishment of their unjust Acquisitions, and satisfy the Ambition and Avarice of the latter, with the Restitution of Church Lands, and a Power independent of the State, and all is well: So their Church flourishes, no matter if the Nation be ruin'd and inflav'd; and it is in this that they plainly show, what it is that they constantly mean by their Church, whilst they have all along allarm'd an establish'd Government with the Noise and Clamours of the chimerical Dangers of it: Even Pomp, Power, Authority, Splendour and Magnificence, which, as we have been inform'd, are Vanities these Men have formerly renounced in their Baptism; and which, if they were influenc'd by the pure Spirit of their Holy Religion, they are under greater Obligations, from the Nature of their Character and their Profession, to disclaim, than any other fort of Men amongst us; but renverse the fundamen. tal Laws of the Nation in their Favour; strip the Nobility and Genery of the facrilegious Usurpations of their Church Lands, and restore 'em to their dearly beloved Church; put 'em again in Pos. fession of Tyrannizing over your Consciencies, and of insulting the Honour of your Families; and it may be confest'd indeed, that you will have plac'd their Church in a very splendid and flourishing Situation, to the endless Scandal of Christianity; but your poor unhappy Country in the most miserable Condition of the worst of all Slaveries, to the eternal Reproach of your English Freedom, good Sense, Virtue and Valour.

It is impossible to assign any other End or Intention to all their Licentious Wishes and Indeavours, after fuch an exorbitant Degree of Power, than to see themselves once again in a Capacity to commit all forts of Infults and Impieties, according to the laudable manner of their Pious Predecessors, with Impunity; nor are there any fort of Men upon the Earth more inclinable to stretch their Power into all the scandalous and pernicious Abuses of it than they, when there is no superior Law to restrain their Excesses. We have like tame Suffering Slaves permitted 'em to lead us already to the very Brink of the Precipice, and shall we be the Sots too, to Suffer 'em to throw us headlong over it, triumph in our Spoils and laugh at us, as we shall richly deserve, for Ideots, when they have done? How can we my honest Countrymen, answer it to God, for Suffering the Pollution of our holy Religion? How can we answer it to ourselves, that by a wretched Stupidity and infatuation, so unworthy Gentlemen and Freemen, we give 'em Occasion even to think that they may dare to infult and abuse us without Resentment, and Punishment of their Insolence? Or, how can we answer it to our Posterity, if we basely betray em into the ignoble Chains and Slavery of these Wretches and forfeit a noble generous Freedom, our gallant Forefathers had purchas'd for us and them at the Expence of their Blood and Fortunes, by rescuing us out of the Hands of their insolent and merciless Predecessors? If Impunity has render'd 'em audacious, a just and rigorous Execution of the Laws in their Punishment willmake 'em the most subtle and servile among stMen? Guilt naturally makes Men Cowards, and that Audacity they make a Parade of in a prosperous Fortune, dwindles into a scandalous and despicable Puillanimity, at the fight and Danger of Punishments in an adverse one; because it is not founded upon Virtue, Innocence and Liberty. which are the genuine Fountains of true and undauuted Courage. An Opinion that has been Suffered to grow amongst 'em, that such Men are exempt from the Vigourand Punishment of the Laws, may contribute to make 'em faucy, to make 'em prefumptuous; but it will never make 'em either truly Virtuous, or truly Couragious; nor is there any fort of Men so apt as they, to flatter and arrogate to themselves a Notion of being too formidable a Body, for the civil Power to meddle with; and this is but too evident in the Instance of the most notorious Incendiary the Nation has ever been curs'd with, by abusing the Clemency of his Judges into a Fear and Apprehension, of we know not what danger from the Punishing him with that severity his Wickedness and Insolence deserv'd; yet is this an Opinion founded upon as little Reason as all the rest of their abfurd Traiterous Doctrines. Men without Modesty are generally without Honour; and if they had the least Tincture of the former, they would have distinguished a noble Virtue, from a service Passion; and thee too much Indulgence and Unwillingness in the Judges to Punish, from the Fear of Punishing; but we very well know that as they are to the last degree audacious and insolent, when no Danger or Fear of Punishment hang over their Heads, there's no Men fink to so low a Degree, I say not that deserves Compassion, but Contempt, under the Travesses of an adverse Fortune; and tho those too merciful and indulgent Judges of that insolent, committed a Fault, for which the Nation has fince too dearly Suffered; it is to be hop'd by the Experience of what is past, we shall for the future be more severely Wise, and undeceive those Gentlemen of the Opinion they may have conceived of themselves; and that when by their Unworthiness they shall have forfeited that Respect and Deference may be due to their Character, the Justice of the Nation is neither to be bully'd or frightn'd from the Execution of the Rigour of the Laws for their Delinquencies either as private Men, or as a Body, which they are willing to Esteem or punish as they shall find 'em deserve; and peremptorily maintain that the Time is not very far off, when they shall be convinced of the certainty of this Truth by an Experiment, that shall be made to their Confusion.

Wickedness may for a while by the Sufferance of Heaven be permitted to be prosperous and Successful, but a just and good God can never suffer it to be Crown'd and be Triumphant; every Body sees, but he who is wilfully Blind or harden'd to Destruction, that Providence is preparing new Wonders for the Deliverance of a great and noble free People, from the Slavery a few mercenary Conspirators have been so industriously preparing for 'em; and whatever Opinion they may slatter and entertain themselves with of their Strength and Credit to accomplish 'em; they cannot but know that there is a wide Distance betwixt the Design and the End; and they must be something more than such Men as we have to deal with, who shall be able with all the Artisice of Hell and High-church to renverte an ancient Establish'd Government, as strongly built and vigorous as ours; I call that a renversing an ancient Government which being sounded upon a limited Power in the

Prince, and a legal Subjection in the Subject, any Number of Traitors shall conspire to establish an Absolute Arbitray Power in that Prince, and an unconditional Paffive Obedience in the Subject, by which the former must necessarily become Tyrants, and the latter Slaves: which has been prov'd shall be the unavoidable Consequences of the Introduction and Establishment of a Pretender bred up in the Popish Religion and Maxims of French Policy. Men set out merrily in the Begining of fuch Defigns, when they have furpriz'd the Credulity of the Prince and gain'd great Numbers of the People; but they may do well to remember, that it is not impossible, to corrupt the whole Matter of a great Wise and generous Nation accustomed to Freedom; for in such Cases there will be ever found a numerous and uncorrupted Party, whose Virtue will be more than sufficient, to baffle and confound the Impotence of Faction; because the Justice and Righteousness of so glorious a Cause, will animate and invigorate the one, and the Wickedness and Infamy of theirs, will dispirit and deconcert the Measures of the other; for Fear and Cowardice are inseparable from Guilt; Ambition first blinds 'em, and the Opinion of Success, flatters'em into the Ruin they were preparing for others; every step they make is a fresh Incouragement in a Nation of People, who are taught and oblig'd by their Religion to fuffer a great deal; and from this Disposition of Suffering, they are apt to flatter themfelves with an Opinion of fear, in the body of the People of opposing or refifting em; the first Scenes of Ambition and Hope offer nothing to their view but godly Objects gay, and pleasant which agreeably flatter their Imagination, with a Prospect of Perpetuity; hence they only flatter and fawn upon the Prince, and cringe like Slaves to those they have debauch'd into their Interests because their support is necessary, but treat with Haughtiness and Contempt, all those who have Virtue enough to oppose 'em, and ever insolent to their equals and betters; for Infolence is inseparable from a feeble Virtue, when elated into a Condition above its Standard and Sufficience; but when things of this Nature grow ripe and near Execution, Men begin to envifage the end with other views than they did the Commencements; Fear magnifies Objects as well as Joy; and those Dangers which at a distance they despised as puny, as they draw nearer, appear as Mountains ready to fall upon their Heads, and crush them in the Ruin; they reflect upon what is past with Astonishment, upon their present Situation with Trembling, and on the future with Terror; Axes and Halters are eternally before their Eyes, because they know they deserve 'em; the Infamy of the Design of Betraying their Country grinds 'em sore, and Guilt inseparable from Wickedness exaggerates the Anguish; ten thousand terrible Reflections upon the Pillow, and in the Cabiner, racking Cares, Anxieties, and Fear of Punishment, infinitely over-ballance all the pleasing gilded Images, with which they had flatter'd themselves in the beginning; hence Confusions and Distractions in Counsels, Divisions, Quarrelling, Reproaches and Revilings of each other, as the Authors of the general Calamity, the first and certain Steps to their Ruin,

Virtue is too feeble to support 'em; the Eyes of the Deluded are open'd, and they desert 'em; the Prince seldom fails to Sacrifice 'em to the Rage of an exasperated People, Confounded, Forsaken, Expos'd; from the Haughty, the Insolent and the Imperious, they dwindle into the most Slavish, Abject, and Contemptible of Mankind; the Genius, the inexorable Genius of a noble free Nation, which they were labouring to Betray and Inslave, hunts 'em hard, and compels 'em into all the miserable Shifts and Doublings of Wretches near their End, and as they liv'd despis'd and hated, dye unpity'd.

This in all Ages has been the Condition, and End of all Traytors. and I hope shall be so of ours; for they may reflect and tremble, that there is many a hundred thousand gallant Englishmen, whom neither their Insolence has terrify'd, nor their Villain High-church Priests been able to corrupt, who will chearfully spend the last drop of their Blood and Fortunes in the Defence of their Country's Honour, Liberties, and the Confervation of the establish'd Religion. Let 'em remember, that Swords were given to Men for their Defence, and they know very well that we understand the Use of 'em; and they shall, upon the same Occasions, ever find us in the same Dispositions, to their Confusion; for that Englishman who wears one by his fide, and wants either an Arm, or Courage to draw it in so glorious a Cause, deserves to dye the worst of all, a High church Slave; no Man can be compell'd to Suffer, but he who knows not how to Dye; and he that will not freely Sacrifice ten Thousand Lives, if he had 'em for his Country, does not deserve the worthless one he has: Let 'em not forget, that with all their servile Doctrines in the Father's Time, they cou'd not fool the Nation into the Ruin and Slavery they defign'd, tho' they brought us very near it; and they may believe, and rest assur'd, if they please, without coming to the Experiment, that as we have a more fresh and lively Taste, and Sense of the value of our Religion and Liberty, from the Dangers they have been once already brought into by 'em, we have still the fame old English Virtue and Courage to defend and preserve 'em in their entire, from all the Attempts of Popish Pretenders, French Tyrants, and Domestick High church Traytors; and it may be very well worth their while, before it be too late, to confider what may be the End and Reward of a Treachery, that is, a second time involving their Country in Blood, and new Confusions, before the Wounds of the former are well heal'd up. Let every honest Englishman but seriously reflect upon the happy glorious Situation his Country was in, during the whole Administration of the last incomparable Ministry, and compare it with the Infancy and Disreputation it has been brought under within these four Years past by the prelent one, and their perfidious Implements of the High-church Clergy, and make fuch Judgment upon it, as Reason, Honour, Conscience, and Interest shall direct him. The Sum of all in short is this; a tew ambitious Men have form'd the Defign of Raifing and Establishing their private Fortunes at the Expence of the Honour of their Queen,

Queen, their Country, and their Religion, which it was impossible for 'em ever to hope to effect, but by introducing the Pretender; from whom, in Gratitude they flatter themselves, at least they might expect the Confirmation of 'em; and a few corrupted mercenary High-church Priests have been employ'd as the execrable Toolsto do the vile Drudgery, of Cajoling and Debauching the Minds of a poor credulous People, into the proper Dispositions for the Execution of so Noble and Commendable a Delign; 'tis to these Men thus combin'd, we folely owe all the Confusions and Difgraces that at present Oppress and Dishonour the Nation. Far indeed have they gone in to detestable a Conspiracy, yet with all their fawning, flattering Hopes of Triumph, further are they yet than they imagine from their God is Just, and Good, and hates a Tyranny, and all the wicked Means and Instruments that lead to its Establishment; and all Praises be to him, the Nation are not all Stark-mad; the virtuous valiant Few, if they are the Few, which remain in their Integrity, shall be, we hope, sufficient to attone for the Sins of all the rest, and save the perishing State and Church from Ruin, or bravely perish with 'em, and not survive their Country's Honour, or their own. Tell me, gallant Britains, of what value is wretched Life with Infamy? Tell me, Noble, Free-born Englishmen, you that by a distinguish'd Freedom, not to be met with in the Universe, have ever been the Envy and Admiration of all your Neighbouring Friends, and Terror of all your Neighbouring Enemies; shall we exchange the Glories of our Birth and Country, for the Inglorious Chains of Slavery preparing for us by faithless Traytors, and despicable Priests? Good Heaven forbid! it cannot, shall not be; we neither ought to fear for our felves, or for the present, because we know the Justice, and the Glory of our Cause; and if we cannot live, I hope we are not now to learn how to dye free; but we ought to be follicitous for the future: Ten Thousand, Thou fand Reasons oblige us not to give our Children a Caution to Curse ns for our Cowardice, or Treachery, for basely betraying 'em into the miserable Bondage of Popish Superstition, High-church Tyranny, or Slavery, inseparable from them, and absolute Arbitrary Power in our Princes.

To couclude, As the Time of our Deliverance or Dissolution is drawing nigh, I will humbly take leave to offer my Opinion in a Word of Advice; which, if the former happen, as I do not in the least question, may be of use for the future Good and Happiness of our common Country. Though our Case is dangerous, Heaven be praised it is not yet desperate; the Disease, 'tis true, is strong and violent, we have known the Progress and Ravages it has formerly made; nor have we forgot the proper specifick Remedies, and the same wholsome Physick seasonably apply'd by the same skilful Artists, shall not sail, by the Blessing of God, to banish the Dissemper for the present, and re-establish the sickly Body of the State in perfect Health and Vigour to long succeeding Generations; the sirst Step to the Cure of any Disease, is to enquire, and find out the true Cause of it; and we are so far in the Way of Recovery, as to be certain of that of ours; for there can be nothing in nature more demonstrable, than that all the terrible Effects that we have so long, and still feel of it, are deriv'd immediately from the Poison the High-Church Clergy have industriously diffus'd thro' the whole Mass of the Body-politick, of which, whilst they are permitted to continue the Infusion, it is absolutely impossible by human Means ever to hope for a perfect Cure. I am the furthest of any Gentleman in England from the Presumption of Prescribing, or even giving my Advice to my Superiors before it be ask'd; but as an honest weak Man, who is not a natural Fool, may sometimes chop upon the Hint of an Expedient, that may either escape the Penetration of a wifer Man, or be neglected thro' the Inadvertency, or malicious Design of a Knavish one; I will venture, without pretending to the Spirit of Prophecy to foretel, that, if at the time of our next happy approaching Deliverance, the Legislature shall not think fit to make these Men sensible of the Superiority of their own Power, and the Subordination and Dependency of theirs, by framing such Laws as may for ever restrain, and deprive em of the Capacity, (for they can never want the Will) of committing the like Crimes for the future, and that under such Penalties as shall seem to their Wisdom sufficient, and necessary for so great and important a Purpose; it is in vain for us ever to expect an Exemption from the same Confusions and Disorders that have so long, and that at present Discompose and Imbroil us. Indulgence will but increase their Audacity, and Impunity confirm it, and light or trifling Punishments will restrain em no longer than whilst the Fear of 'em hangs over their Heads. It is left to the Legislature, to consider and determine what fort and degrees of Penalty, and in what manner the Laws they shall contrive, shall be executed effectually, which can never be too severe against such ingrateful Traytors and Disturbers of the publick Peace of their Country; for as they who meditate a Change in an establish'd Government, in the private Views of Faction, and in order thereto, introduce the worst of all Distractions and Divisions that can disturb the publick Happiness and Tranquillity of their Fellow-Subjects, are guilty of the highest Treason that Men can be guilty of in the Eye of our Laws; there are no Punishments, how rigid and severe soever, that are not justly their due; both as they cannot be ignorant either of the Malignity, or Enormity of their Transgrellion, they are left without any manner of Excuse, and because the Peace and Good of the Commonwealth, are of infinite more Weight and Confideration, than any Man, Number, or Body of Men, who may live under it whatfoever. 'Tis true, that no Power under Heaven, nor any Laws, how Terrible and Severe foever, can hinder Men from entertaining what private Sentiments and Opinions they please, however dangerous they may be in their Nature to the State; whilst they are coop'd up in their own Bosoms, let em be what they will, they only affect and hurt themselves, the Danger ties in the Publication; and therefore it will eafily lye in the Power of the Legislature, to annex such Punishments to their Laws, ei-Ff

ther of Infamy or Pain, as may hinder 'em from rendering such O. pinions Publick, either from the Pulpit, or the Press, or in their publick Conversation, if they shall dare to contravene 'em; 'tis true, that to Gentlemen of Birth and Family, and ingenuous Qualities, (if fuch can possibly be so far debauch'd, as to engage in such villain Designs) a Punishment of Infamy, is certainly more terrible than Death it felf; but to Men of mean, or ignoble Extraction, who are generally without a true Taste of Virtue and Honour, a Penalty of Rigour, questionless, makes much deeper Impressions than the former; and therefore, in such Cases the Justice of the Legislature, as it ought to be inflexible, can never be too fevere; for they only are the Guardians and Protectors of the publick Good and Happiness, and are under indispensible Obligations to watch for their Defence and Conservation; and it is the only supreme Power in a Nation that can be allow'd to be Arbitrary, the Exercise of it is Unlimited and Uncontroulable, because it is impossible to suppose the three Eflates that compose ours, to conspire together, or to be so far corrupted, as juftly to intend any thing prejudicial to the publick Good of the Community, in which their own Private is eternally included; it implying the highest Absurdity imaginable, to conceive the whole Body and Power of a Nation, acting in Concert for their own Ruin; and if the Means they may think proper to make use of to punish such Delinquents, in order to preserve the Peace of their Country, may to some appear too rigorous and severe, the importance of the End, and the Justice and Necessity of the Expedients, will more than sufficiently both exercise and justify 'em.

In a word, we have no manner of Butiness with Convocations, fince it is apparent, that there never was an Affembly of Ecclesiaflicks fince the Apostles time, who have not done more Mischief to the State than ever they did Good to Religion; their Defign having been in all Ages manifestly to Aggrandize the Power, Authority, and Magnificence of what they abusively call their Church, to the vifible Detriment of the Civil Government. If with us at any time it appears, that the National Establish'd Church is in want of any Laws for her Peace or Security; as the Legislature are the only and proper Judges in such a Case, it is impossible they can ever be wanting in their Care and Vigilance to preferve fo inestimable a Blessing as their Religion, which contributes so much to their Happiness, both in this World, and the next, without the Advice or Confent of Men, who have nothing more to do than to watch over their Flocks, and to fee to the Execution of those Laws their Superiors, I mean the Legislature, shall think fit to enact for that Purpose, as far only as may concern the Policy and Discipline of the National Church, of which there are no more than the Pastors and Ministers, whilst they keep themselves within the Limits of their Character; Men fet apart for the Dispensing and Ministration of the necessary Duties and Offices of our holy Religion) but by no means the Guardians, or Conservators of it; our Laws have lodg'd that important Charge in much better Hands, who, it is to be suppos'd, will ever act with another Zeal, Vigilance, and truly Christian Moderation

for the Security of it, than Men who have more than sufficiently convinc'd the World, that they ever act more upon Principles of private Interest, and the Aggrandization of their Church, than the Advantage and Propagation of true Religion; and as this latter is, doubtless, when in its Purity the most valuable of all the Blessings of this World, the Wisdom of our Fore-fathers has sufficiently provided for its Security; and that it shou'd never be left without Patrons, by the honourable Share they have left the Lords, the Bishops in the Legislature by their Stations in the most Honourable House of Lords, which every honest Englishman heartily hopes they will for ever take care by their Virtue, Courage, Learning and Piety to merit; which Provision renders all other Ecclesiastical Assemblies ab. folutely unnecessary, especially since a dear bought Experience has taught us, that much more Detriment than Utility have refulted from em both to the State and National Church; and therefore, it fuch corrupt and infidious High-church Incendiaries are not confin'd to act folely within the Compass of their proper Sphere; it they are not limited only to the Exercise and Discharge of the genuine Duties of their Profession and Character, which are more than enough to engage and employ the whole Time of the ablest of 'em; if they are not forbidden to intermeddle with Affairs of State, with which they have nothing at all to do, further than as they are permitted and allow'd by the Laws of our Constitution; if they are not strictly prohibited to concern themselves in the Election of Members of Parliament, otherwise than by their single Vote as Freemen; if the Doctrines we have so often mention'd of the Divine Right of our Kings, of absolute Arbitrary Power in a mix'd and limited Monarchy, of a flavish, unlimited, and unconditional Passive Obedience in the Subject, of Hereditary and Indefeafible Right, and the Denying of the Legislature a Power in certain Cases and Occasions, to Settle and Dispose of the Succession of our Crown be not, not only Exploded as Infamous, Unreasonable, Antiscriptural, and to the latt degree dangerous to the State and Church, but severely punish'd as Crimes against both; if such as presume to receive 'em in the prefent, or future Ages, or shall dare to broach any new Doctrines of the same Nature and Tendency, shall not be made liable to the Penalty of Deprivation, and Incapacity of Restitution, upon a fair and legal Conviction, or even of being effectmed guilty of capital Crimes upon certain Occasions; if the Core of the Ulcer be not quite cut out, if the Universities of the three Nations, where our Youth are unhappily Poison'd'in the first Rudiments and Principles of their Education, are not throughly purg'd of all this curfed Leaven that fours the whole Mass; if all Degrees and Orders of Churchmen, without distinction, are not laid under the Reach and Influence of fuch Laws and Penalties; if a Test be not made to Administer to all fuch, who of any Profession, and especially Ecclesiasticks, who may pretend to the Possession and Enjoyment of Employments, Offices, and Benefices, either in State or Church, that shall oblige 'em Respectively, and Solemnly to Disclaim and Renounce all such Doerrines and Principles as may be thought fit to specify in it; let us never hope or expect any lasting Peace, Security, or Settlement, elther in the State or Church, whilst this World lasts; but when this that be done, and done effectually, as it very well may, and with all honest Englishmen I heartily hope will be; we may then be certain to see our ancient Government perpetuated in Safety and Tranquility upon the folid Foundation and Principles of its original Constitution, to the end of Time; we shall then see our most holy Protestant Religion of the National Church, shine out and flourish In all its native Purity, Honours, Dignities and Immunities of her legal Establishment, and pretend to, or demand no more; we shall then fee our precious Liberties and Properties confirm'd in our own hands, and transmitted intire to our latest Posterity; and fear neither French Popery to Corrupt and Debauch the one, or French Pretenders to Disturb or Inslave the other; we shall again with pleafure fee our legitimate Princes Respected, Honour'd, and Belov'd at home, and Courted, or Dreaded abroad; we shall again see Trade and Commerce augment and flourish, the Reputation of our Arms, which has been to fcandaloutly proffituted, recover'd to its primitive Glory; Union, Peace, Concord, Friendship amongst all forts and Professions of Men, as Fellow-subjects and Fellow-christians, cultivated by all the honest mutual Offices of a benevolent Humanity, and the diviner Duties of a Charity truly Christian and Apostolical: no more scandalous Desertion of our Protestant Friends to favour and encourage our Popish Enemies; no more betraying the noble glorious Cause of Europe's Liberty, and our own, and Sacrificing all to the Ambition and Avarice of a vile and profligate High-church, and her perfidious Faction; but our dear Country once again in a Situation of Honour, and a universal Happiness, which shall render her once more what the was a few Years ago, and we hope ever shall continue, the Arbitress of the Fate of Europe, the Dread of her Enemies, and Love of all her Friends; but till that happy, happy time, we never shall.
